Lastly, it is (to say the least of it) remarkable that when, in 1908, Ram Golam made an attempt to execute the order which he had obtained against Rajdhari by a sale of this property, and Chintaman objected, no further proceedings were taken in execution, but a private sale was made to the first appellant, who appears to be connected with Bam Galam. Neither Rajihari nor anyone else gava evidence that the bond was the separate property of Rajdhari nor was any document produced in which it was referred to as his private proparty.

Upon the whole, while the evidence on both sides is somewhat meagre, it appears to their Lordships that the presumption in favour of joint ownership is not displaced and, therefore, this appeal should be dismissed; and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

As the respondents have not appeared there will be no order as to costs.

Muhammadan Law-Legitimacy-Acknowledgment, effect of.

Under the Muhammadan Law an acknowledgment has only the effect of legitimation where either the fact of the marriage or its exact time with reference to the legitimacy of the child's birth is a matter of uncertainty. [p. 405, col. 2.]

Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan, 10 A. 289; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 193, relied upon.

Where there is a clear finding that no marriage at all took place between the parents of a child the presumption of legitimacy which results from acknowledgment cannot arise. [p. 405, col. 2]

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Jullundur, at Hosbiarpur, dated the 3rd February 1921, affirming that of the Muneif, First Class, Jullandar, dated the 19th July 1920.

Lala Badri Das and Mr. Eagar Chand, for Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Mr. Obedulla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute giving rice to this litigation relates to the succession to the estate of one Hadait Ullah of Jullundur On the 1st August 1919 Musammet Amir Begum, a daughter of Hadait Ullah, and Musammat Ako, his brother's wife, instituted a suit against Abdul Aziz, asking for a declaration that they (the plaintiffs) were the rightful owners of the land in suit which had belonged to Hadait Unllah, deceased. It was alleged that Abdul Azz, defendant, was the illegitimate son of Hadait Ullah and as such not entitled to any share in the property. In the alternative it was prayed that a declaration be granted to the effect that Musammat Amir Begum was entitled to one-third share of the land under a Will said to have been executed by the said Hadait Ullab, who had died on the 13th December 1918.

The Trial Court found that Abdul Azz was the illegitimate son of Hadait Ullab. deceased, but that Musammat Begam sould not challenge the Will above mentioned. It perdingly dismissed the suit qua Musammat Ako but granted Musammat Amir Begum a deeree deelaring her title to one third share in the estate left by Hadait Ullah. Musammat Ako assepted the situation. Amir Bagam and Abdul Aziz, however, preferred appeals against this decree to the District Judge, Musammat Amir Begum claiming to be entitled to a declaration that she was the owner of the whole property and Abdul Az'z claiming to be the legitimate son of Hadait Ullab. The learned District Judge dismissed both the appeals by one judgment, and Abdul Aziz and Muszmmat Amir Begum have come up to this Court in second appeal, the former through Mr. Badri Das and the latter through Mr. Tek Ohand. I shall deal with both the appeals together.

Turning first to that by Abdul Aziz (Civil Appeal No, 824 of 1921), it will be seen that the learned District Judge has come to certain definite findings of fact which admittedly are not open to examination in second appeal. The mother of Abdul Aziz was one Musammat Jijan. The learned District Judge has held that Musammat Jijan was never married to Hadait Ullah by any religious or legal seremony. Further, he has held that this lady never lived in any house occupied by Hadait Ullah but that there was evidence to show that she lived in the house rented by Hadait Ullah, which house was situated in a mohalla inhabited by prestitutes.

It has also been found that Hadait Ullah during his lifetime on several occasions asknowledged Abdul Az'z to be his son, It was apparently contended before the lower Appellate Court, as it has been before me, that the legal effect of these findings should be in favour of the legitimacy of Abdul Az'z. learned District Judge held, on the authority of Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (1), that an asknowledgment had only the effect of legitimation where the fact of the marriage was a matter of uncertainty, that in the present case the evidence on the record proved that no marriage had taker place between Musammat Jijan and Hadait Ullah and that, therefore, there being no uncertainty on the point the acknowledgments by Hadait Ullah did not render Abdul Az'z legitimate. Mr. Tek Chand urged that the question whether a child was legitimate or illegitimate was one of fast, pure and simple. On the other hand, Mr. Badri Das contended that he was only attacking the inferences drawn from the findings of fact arrived at by the learned District Judge. The matter is not free from difficulty, and I am inclined to the view that in this case there being a clear finding that Abdul Az'z is the illegitimate son of Hadait Ullab, no question of law arises. As, however, Mr. Badri Das has argued the case at length I will deal with the case as put forward by him. He drew my attention to Sulakhan Singh v. Santa Singh (2) and contended that in a case where it was proved that a man and a woman lived together for a number of years as man and wife, there was a strong presumption in favour of a marriage having taken place between them. With this proposition I have no quarrel, but in the present case it has not been found that Musammat Jijan and Hadait Ullah lived together for a number of years as man and wife. What has been found is that Musammot Jijan, a prostitute, lived in the prostitute's quarters in a house rented for her by Hadait Ullah and bore him a son. This authority is, however, in support of Mr. Tek Chand's contention that a finding on a question of legitimacy is one of fact, and in the present case the lower Appellate Court has considered every bit of evidence on the record and has not ignored anything of importance.

It was next contended that, under Muhammadan Law, asknowledgments by a man that a certain person was his son were sufficient to establish legitimacy and, further, that if a man asknowledged a woman to be bis wife, the matrimonial contract was completed with. out any formal ceremony being necessary. In this connection my attention was drawn to Ibrahim Ali Khan v. Mubarak Begam (3). The facts of that case, however, are so diffierent from the facts in this that I am unable to find any assistance from this decision. No doubt, under Muhammadan Law if a man bas asknowledged another as his legitimate shild, the presumption of paternity arises Anglo Muhammadan Wilson's Article 85, page 162; see also Ashrufood Dowlah Ahmed Hussein Khan v. Hyder

(2) 60 Ind, Cas, 875.

Mahomed (5)].

Mr. Badri Das further contended that, under striet Muhammadan Law, no ceremonics were needed in order to effect a valid marriage and relied on page 51 of Wilson's Anglo-Muhammadan Law as well as Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Volume II, page 333. Ameer Ali, no doubt, says that the law appoints no specific egremony for the contractual performance of a marriage but he also says that, ascording to recognised sustom, marriages among all the seets are solemnized by a person conversant with the requirements of the law, i.e., the kasi, while two other persons are appointed for the purpose of acting on behalf of the contract. ing parties with a certain number of witnesses. Asknowledgments by a father create a presumption of legitimacy no doubt, but, as pointed out by Mahmood, J., in Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (1). an asknowledgment has only the effect of legitimation where either the fast of the marriage or its exact time with reference to the legitimacy of the shild's birth is a matter of uncertainty. In the present case neither the fact of the marriage, nor its exact time is in uncertainty, for the Courts below have elearly and unequivocally found that on the evidence on the record it has been proved marriag: that no took place between Musimmat Jijan and Hadiut Ullah. In this view of the case the presumptions contended for by Mr. Badri Das do not arise and I must, therefore, hold that it having been proved that no marriage took place between the parents of Abdul Az'z, he is illegiti. mate.

It was arged that the learned District Judge had not disposed of issue No. 5, which was whether plaintiff admitted defendant as the legitimate son of the deceased. This issue was decided against Abdul Az'z by the first Court, and he did not attack the correctness of this finding in the appeal to the District Judga. The learned District Jadge, however, has stated in his judgment that he had considered the evidence in the case and a part of the evidence consisted of what Abdul Az'z termed "admissions" of his legitimacy by the plaintiff. The mere fact that the learned District Judge has not referred specifically to this evidence does not mean that he has ignored it and the mere failure to refer to it specifically does not give a ground for second appeal.

The appeal by the defendant fails and is dismissed with costs.

I now some to Civil Appeal No. 1156 of 1921. It was contended by Mr. Tek Chand that the learned District Judge having held that Abdul Aziz was illegitimate, Musammat Amir Begam, should have been held to have been the successor to her father. Accepting the finding that the parties were governed by eastom, and that by eastom, Musammat Amir Begam could not challenge the devise made by Hadait Ullab, it was contended that before the alleged Will could be given effect to, it should have been proved and its terms considered. For if, under the Will there was a devise to Abdul Aziz as a son then it having been found that he was not the legitimate son the devise failed and in support of this I was referred to Ram;i Das v. Durga Parshad (6). This was a case of adoption where it was held that "when a Hindu widow makes a Will in favour of a boy whom she has adopted and it is found that the adoption is invalid, it has to be assertained whether the mention of the legatee as an adopted son is merely descriptive or whether the assumed fact of his adoption is the reason and motive of the bequest and indeed a condition of it, and if the latter is found as a fact the Will is of no effect." A similar case is reported in Fanindra Deb Raik t v. Rajeswar Das (7). It was contended that in the present case Musammat Amir Begam bad no knowledge of the Will or its contents. She knew that Abdul Azz was setting up a Will under which she was a legatee of one-third. During the course of the proceedings Abdul Aziz was repeatedly called upon to produce the Will but failed to do so, asserting that no Will existed. Mr. Tek Chand argued that in such circumstances Illustration (g) to section 114 of the Evidence Act applied and that it would be held that if the Will had been produced the evidence afforded by it would have been unfavourable to Abdul Az'z. Mr. Badri Das, on the other hand, contended that, as a matter of fact, there was no Will at all but that the plaintiff having admitted the existence of a Will in parapraph 5 of her plaint, and also having admitted that Abdul Aziz was a legatee to the extent of two-thirds, she was bound to abide by these admissions. Paragraph 5 of the plaint, however, does not bear out Mr. Badri Das' contention. It is there alleged that Abdul Aziz had got Hadait Ullah to execute a Will which Will he was keeping in his possession, and that under that Will one-third of the estate bad been left to her while two-thirds had been left to Abdul Az'z. It is obviously impossible to consider a dcoument that is not before the Court and it seems to me that the presumption contended for by Mr. Tek Chand must be given effect to. There is no clear admission on the part of Musummat Amir Begam that the devise to Abdul Aziz was made as a persona designata and not as the legitimate son of Hadait Ullah. This question could have been put at rest by production of the Will and its non production gives rise to the presumption that devise was made to Abdul Aziz not as a persona designata but as the legitimate son of the testator which he is not. Abdul Az'z himself can scarcely object to the raising of this presumption, inseumeh as he himself maintains that Hadait Ullah pever executed a Will at all. If there was no Will the plaintiff's suit should have been deereed.

I accordingly accept this appeal with costs, and modify the decree of the learned District Judge by granting the plaintiff, Musammat Ameer Begam, a decree declaring that she is the owner of the property in suit.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110— High Court varying decree of lower Court as regards costs only—Judgment of affirmance—Leave to appeal to Privy Council, whether to be granted.

Where in an appeal High Court merely exercises its discretion as regards the costs of the suit in the lower Court and it entirely confirmes the decision of the lower Court on the merits of the case, its decree is one of affirmance within the meaning of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, [p. 408, col. 1]

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, O. J .- This is an application by the plaintiff in the suit, for a certificate that this is a fit and proper case for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. There is no question as to the value of the subject matter of the suit, or the subjectmatter of the appeal; but it is urged on behalf of the respondent that the judgment of the High Court against which it is desired to appeal was one of affirmance and that there is no substantial question of law involved. On the other hand, it is urged by the learned Vakil for the plaintiff, that the judgment of this Court was not one of affirmance, and that, if it was one of affirmance, there is a substantial question of law involved.

The suit was brought to recover damages for an alleged malicious prosecution. The First Court dismissed the suit without costs. The matter then same on appeal to the High Court and the decree of the High Court was as follows: "It is ordered and decreed that the decree of the lower Court in so far as it relates to costs be set aside and in lieu thereof it is hereby ordered and decreed that the plaintiff do pay to the defendant No. 1 the costs incurred by him in the Court below with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum from the date of the decree of that Court until realization: And it is further ordered and desceed that save and except as aforesaid the said decree of the lower Court be affirmed and this appeal dismissed: And it is further ordered and decreed that the plaintiff, appellant, do pay to the defendant No. 1, respondent, the sum of rupees five hundred and thirtytwo and annas six, being the amount of costs insurred by him in this Court, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent, per annum from this date until realization."

The first question which I have to decide is, whether, in the circumstances of this ease, the judgment of the High Court is one of affirmance. In my judgment, it is. The only part of the judgment and decree of the lower Court which is varied by the decree of this Court was that part which related to coats. The costs were entirely in the discretion of the Court which heard the appeal. The Court exercised its discretion and ordered that the plaintiff should pay the costs of the suit in the First Court and the costs of the appeal to this Court. If we were to hold that this was not a deeree affirming the deeree of the lower Court, it would follow that whenever, in a ease where the subject was of the requisite value, this Court varied the decision as to costs of the lower Court, however small the extent might be, and dismissed the appeal on the merit in all material respects, the party who failed on the appeal in the High Court would have a right to appeal to the Judicial Committee. I cannot believe that that was intended by the Legislature and I am confirmed in this view by the fast that no authority can be produced in support of the contention put forward by the learned Vakil for the appellants though the situation which occurs in this case, must have occurred many times in the past.

In the case of Thakur Baldeo Bakheh Singh

LARHT MAL U. BISHEN DAS.

v. Thakur Lahi Singh (1) this question was

The learned Officiating Judicial Commissioner who delivered the judgment stated as follows:—"It appears to me that we shall be doing no violence to the language of section 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure if we hold that the words affirms the decision of the Court immediately below relate to the subject matter of the suit. The costs of the suit claimed by a plaintiff are never taken into account in considering whether the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance amounted to Rs. 10,000 for the purpose of the first clause of section 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"In my opinion the applicant is not entitled to appeal merely because the two Courts differed on the question of costs."

The learned Commissioner was dealing with section 590 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which was then in force; but the material words in that section do not differ from the words in section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

In this case the High Court merely exercised its discretion as regards the costs of the suit in the lower Court and it entirely confirmed the decision of the lower Court on the merits of the case; consequently, in my judgment, the decree appealed from affirmed the decision of the Court immediately below the High Court within the meaning of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

As regards the second question, tiz,—Whether there is a substantial question of law involved. I have read the judgment of my learned brother Mr Justice Richardson and it is clear from that judgment that the question was entirely one of fact and that there is no substantial question of law involved.

For these reasons, in my jadgment, the application must be refused with costs, three gold nohurs.

In order to bring a case within the exception that family property in the hands of the sons is bound by a mortgage executed by the father during his lifetime to pay off an antecedent debt, two conditions must be fulfilled, first, the mortgage must have been to discharge an obligation antecedently incurred and, secondly, the obligation antecedently incurred must have been incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate. [p. 410, col. 1.]

A mortgage whereby joint family property is charged cannot be regarded as an antecedent debt.

First appeal from a decree of the Additional Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 31st July 1917.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellant. Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Respond-

JUDGMENT,—This is a first appeal against a declaratory decree passed by the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, setting aside two mortgage deads and one sale-deed executed by defendant (1) Ram Chand, in favour of Lakhu Mal defendant (2), as without necessity and consequently null and void against the plaintiffe, Bishen Das. son of Ram Chand, and Harbans Lal, etc., grandsons of Ram Chand. The alience has come up to this Court in appeal and his case has been argued before us at length by Mr. M. S. Bhagat, while the case for the respondents has been argued by Mr. Sheo Narain.

property consists of a residential house, four shops and some land in Rawalpindi. The property is admittedly ancestral. There is no dispute at present about the house and the land and the deeds against which the plaintiffs have asked for a declaration all relate to the shops. Three of these shops had been mortgaged by Ram Chand's father, Prabh Dial, to Hari Shah-Hem Raj, two in April 1902 and one in October 1904. 1906 Ram Chand executed a sonsolidated mortgage deed in respect of the same three shops for Rs. 8,500 in favour of the same mortgagees and gave possession. He mortgaged the fourth shop to one Lashman Das in April 1907 for Rs. 2,500. An additional mortgage deed without possession was executed by Ram Chand in respect of all the four shops for Rs. 2,500 in favour of the appellant, Lakbu Mal, on the 24th May 1916. This was followed by a deed of sale of one shop in favour of the same person for Rs. 8.000. This was dated 6th September 1916 and the sum of Rs. 2,500 due on assount of the mortgaged deed, dated 24th May 1916, was a part of its consideration. Ram Chand executed another mortgage dead on 2nd October 1916 for Rs. 4,300 in favour of Lakhu Mal with regard to two of the shops. This sum, as well a sum of Rs. 4,000 out of the money raised by the sale of the shop, was for redeeming the previous mortgage in favour of Hari Shah-Hem Raj. The suit of the plaintiffs to impugn the three last transastions, vis., those of the 24th May, 6th September and the 2nd October 1916, was brought on the 24th Ostober 1916. shops in dispute were admittedly in possession of Hari Shah Hem Raj at the time the suit was brought but they were redeamed on the 11th November 1916.

A preliminary contention raised in the ease was that the defendant having redeem. ed the property from the possession of the previous mortgagess, the plaintiffs sould not bring a suit for a mers declaration and should have sued for possession. It has been held by the Court below that a deslaratory suit was permissible at the time when it was brought and we agree with this view, as the property was in the possession of the preyions mortg igees at that time and had not actually passed into the presession of the defendant before an injunction issued by the Court maintained the status quo ante,

The main question in this case is, whether these alienations or any of them were for necessity. Barring incidental references to some other points, the arguments have been confined to this point and the grounds of appeal not argued before us were given up by Counsel. Mr. Bhagat contends that the mortgage deed, dated 24th May 1916, has merged into the sale of the 6th September 1916, and has no separate existence and the question of the necessity of the items of which the sum of Rs. 2,500 borrowed on the strength of it was composed, should not be now gone into, as the sum must be regarded as an antecedent debt, which, under Hindu Law, is resognized as a necessity. He adds that the subsequent sale as well as the other mortgage were both made shiefly to redeem the previous mortgage for Bs. 8,500 and, therefore, those two alienations should also be upheld as made for necessity. He draws our attention to the fact that the mortgage for Rs. 8,500 was mainly on account of debts due from the time of Ram Chand's father, which it is not open to any of the plaintiffs to dispute. He also emphasises the fact that the additional mortgage, dated the 24th May 1916, was executed to raise money to pay off sertain decrees against Ram Chand and Bishen Das (plaintiff No. 1) due on assount of debts incurred by Bishen Das. It is added that Ram Chand had actually been arrested and sent to Jail to secure payment of these decrees and that it was really necessary for him to raise money to save his own skin. Besides, it is urged that the plan adopted by him to redeem the old mortgage and to discharge the previous debts was an act of good management and in the interests of the joint family.

Mr. Sheo Narain replying to the above arguments refers us to Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) and points out that the law as to the antesedent debts incarred by the father of a joint Hindu family is clearly laid down in that ruling. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observe that "the statement of the law in Nanomi Babuasin v. Malhun Mohun (2) by Lord Hobbouse does not give any countenance to the idea that joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or sharge has been made in order to dissharge an obligation not only antecedently incorred but incorred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by the joint estate." This ruling was followed and explained by the Allahabad High Court in Bri Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (3) where it was sought by the sons to invalidate a decree for the sale obtained by the mortgages upon a mortgage of joint family property executed by the father, and it appeared that the mortgage in question had been executed to pay off two earlier mortgages of joint family property also executed by the father. It was held that "it was for the mortgagee—to show that the earlier mortgages fell within the exception recognised by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1)." The Patna High Court in a still more recent decision, published as Bankhandi Rui v. Kishori Mandal (4), has followed the same principle and has laid down that, "in order to bring a case within the exception that family property in the hands of the sons is bound by a mortgage executed by the father during his lifetime to pay off an antecedent debt, two conditions must be fulfilled, first, the mortgage must have been to discharge an obligation anteredently insurred and, secondly, the obligation antecedently incurred must have been incarred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate." In the light of these observations the mortgage deed, dated the 24th May 1916, cannot be allowed to pass as embodying an antecedent debt because joint property was mortgaged by it and the item of Rs. 2,500 due on account of it will have to be examined on its own merits as to the necessity for it.

We now proseed to examine the transactions one by one and take up, first, the sale deed dated the 6th September

As already remarked above, Item No. 1 eannot be allowed as an antecedent debt. With regard to Item No. 2, it is to be observed that it was meant to be a part payment to Hari Shah Hem Raj, the previous mortgagees, but we cannot make any pronouncement as to the validity or other. wise of this item as the Court below has exeluded the mortgage-deed in favour of Hari Shah-Hem Baj from consideration, the plaintiffs having expressly stated in the plaint that the said deed was not disputed at present. This item will stand or fall with the decision that may be subsequently arrived at, if the plaintiffs choose to dispute the said previous mortgage. We agree, however, with the Trial Court in holding that this item cannot furnish a necessity for the sale in dispute, as the previous mortgagees were not pressing for payment in any way and the sale by itself could not discharge the debt due on account of the previous mortgage. For the eash item of Re. 500 no necessity has been shown at all, and all that Mr. Bhagat urged with regard to it was that it represented the balance of the sale money and was a small fraction of the whole and should be allowed. This would be done in a case where the greater part of the price was to be allowed as for necessity, but, such being not the case here, we cannot hold that this item was for necessity. As regards Item No. (4) it is admitted that this item has not been paid in each to the vendor. At first, a rukka was given to him on a Bank in which the money was in deposit but before he could realise it, the form of a payment was changed, the rukka was presumably taken back and instead credit was given to Ram Chand for Rs. 1,000 in the item of consideration for the mortgage dated the 2nd October 1916 for Rs. 4,300. Thus, so far as this sale and the resital in the saledeed are concerned, the consideration for this item fails and the item is disallowed.

LAKHU MAL D. BISHEN DAS,

We have now to see what part of the item of Rs. 2,500, due on assount of the mcrtgage of the 24th May 1916, can be held to be valid and for necessity. The consideration money as given in the deed was as follows :-

		Rs.
1.	Registration expenses and the value of a wasted stamp paper for
	Rs. 20	. 60
2.	To be taken in cash before the Sub
	Fegistrar
3,	The mortgagee will himself pag on the mortgagor's behalf to decree-holders and creditors	. 2,315
	Total	, 2,500

Out of Item No. 1 Rs. 40 should, we think, be allowed as cost of registration as a considerable part of Item No. 3 is going to be allowed. Our attention has not been drawn to anything on the record to show who was to blame for the wasted stamp of Rs. 20 and the item cannot be allowed. Of the necessity of the cash item of Rs. 125 there is no proof and it is not allowed, For the item of Rs. 2,315 we have to examine the following details :-

		Rs.
I.	In payment to Musammat Damodari, decree-holder	1,200
2.	The state of the s
3.	For payment to Ujagar Mal, etc.,	450
	deoree-holders	225
4.	For payment to Karm Chand, etc., decree-holders	60
б.	For payment to Hari Ram-Chuni
6.	For payment to (shar Das on a bond	180 executed by the mortgagor	200
	Total	2,315

As to item of Rs. 1,200 admittedly Rs. 700 were paid to Musammat Damodari in full settlement of her decree, and thus the mortgagee (Lakhu Mal) saved Rs. 500 over this. He produces, however, a receipt, Exhibit D-7, dated the 18th January 1917, purporting to be executed by Ram Chand, showing that he acknowledged having taken Rs. 211 out of the said sum of Rs. 500 from Lakhu Mal. This receipt is printed at page 86 of the printed record but there is no proof that the receipt was for consideration. There is a receipt, D 7, purporting to have been given by Ram Chand to Lakhu Mal, but no question was put to Ram Chand about this receipt when he was examined as a witness, and there is no admission on his part of having got the sum of Rs. 211 from Lakhu Mal. This is, we think, an extremely doubtful payment and cannot be taken into account, Rs. 500 out of the item of Rs. 1,200 on account of Musammat Damodari's deeree must, therefore, be disallowed as not paid. The item of Rs. 450 is proved to have been paid, and we are told that the actual payment to Dhan Raj Sukhraj was Rs. 469 which is the sum hereby allowed instead of the item of Rs. 450. The item of Rs. 225 has been paid, and so has the item of Rs. 60 which had swollen into Rs. 112. Therefore, Rs. 225 and Rs. 112 are allowed, Rs. 165 was the sum actually paid out of Re. 180 and, therefore, Re. 165 are allowed. The pay. ment of Item No. 6 for Rs. 200 is not proved and thus the total sum that deserves to be allowed out of Rs. 2,315 is Rs. 1,671 and adding Rs. 40 to the same which have been allowed as expenses of registration, we get a total of Rs. 1,711, which may be said to be due on asscunt of Item No. 1 in the consideration of the sale deed dated the 6th September 1921.

The first mortgage having been disposed of with the sale-deed, of which it had become a part, the second mortgage, dated the 2nd Ostober 1916, remains as the only deed that is to be dealt with in this appeal. The consideration for it was Rs. 4,300 which may be said now to include the sum of Rs. 1,000 which we have excluded above out of the consideration of the sale-deed. This sum was wholly meant for payment of the previous mortgage of Rs. 8,500. As the previous mortgage remains as an open question between the parties, we think the mortgage dated the 2nd October 1919 cannot be set aside and will stand or fall with any decision that may be eventually arrived at as to the said mortgage.

We, therefore, accept this appeal in part and, modifying the decree of the Court below, pass a decree declaring that the sale of the 6th September 1916 is set aside but Re, 1,711 out of half the consideration therefor shall remain as an equitable charge on the property sold. As regards the other half of the consideration which is said to have been paid on account of Hari Shah and Hem Raj's mortgage nothing is decided and no declaration about it is made in this suit.

As regards the mortgage of the 2nd October 1916 we make no declaration in the present suit. Under the circumstances of the ease, we leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Mr. Mohammad Wasim holding the brief of Pandit Harkaran Noth Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.-The parties to this appeal are to sharers in the village Dhondhi. On the 14th May 1907 Bharat, acting on behalf of himself and his minor brother, Bikrams, and Musammat Parbati, acting on of her minor son, Ram Bharose, gave plot No. 607/2 thasra, measuring 1 bigha 16 biswas, to Bakkha on a rent free lease in perpetuity and took in exchange from the latter plot No. 610/2 khasra, containing a similar area on similar terms. Each party executed a patta in favour of the other in evidence of the transaction but did not get it registered. The present suit was filed by Ram Bharose and Bikrama for the recovery of possession of 3/4ths of the land given in exchange by their then guardians on the allegation that their guardians had no power to enter into the said transaction on their behalf. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim, holding that the plaintiffs had been benefited by the transaction. The lower Appellate Court held otherwise. It is not disputed that the plaintiffs attained majority within three years prior to the suit. It is also not disputed that plot No. 607/2 kharra was parti land close to the abadi; that Bakkhe, who is now represented by the defendants. appellante, built a house and a compound over it and planted a tree thereon; that plot No. 610-2 khasra was sultivable land and that the plaintiffs and their guardians have been in beneficial possession of the same by the receipt of rant from the person enltivating it.

The first question for consideration is, whether the guardians of the plaintiffs had authority to bind the minors by the transaction. The lower Appellate Court observes that both the plots contain land of equal quality. But if the plaintiffs and their guardians had got by exchange land which was under cultivation in lieu of that which was lying preti, it cannot be said that the minors had not been benefited by the transaction. They have been getting the benefit of the exchange by holding the land granted to them rent-free since 1907. They have a right to repudiate any act done by their guardiane, prejudicial to their interests, but this particular act was not prejudicial to their interests. On the other hand, it was beneficial to them. The transaction cannot, therefore, be set aside.

The pext question is, whether in the absence of registration the leases in question can be admitted in evidence to prove a perpetual rent-free grant. The lower Appellate Court rightly observes that such a lease requires registration. But as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (1) even where a compromise or settlement is considered to be defective or incheste and insufficient to make a final and validly concluded agreement, the subsequent acts of the parties may be such as to supply all defects. In fact, when the actings and conduct of the parties are founded it, as in the performance of part performance of an agreement, the locus penitentiæ which exists in a situation where the parties stated upon nothing but an engagement which is not final or complete, is excluded, for equity will support a transaction, clothed imperfectly, in those legal forms to which finality attaches, after the bargain bas been acted upon. Here the conduct of the minors cannot be pleaded in defeasance of their right to repudiate the ast of their guardians during their minority. But if their guardians had asted for their benefit, and after attaining majority they continued to derive the benefit which the transaction emnferred on them, it is not open to them to take advantage of the absence of registration, particularly when the parties can no longer be restored to their old positions without material prejudice to the interests of one of them. The lower Appellate Court has granted a decree for the removal of the wall standing on a portion of the compound and maintained the rest of the structure, built by the father of the defendants appellants; but the transaction, which can at best only last till a partition of the village is effected, cannot be set aside piecemeal in that manner. The minors are bound by what their guardians had done in their interests.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored except in so far that the parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Will-Nuncupative-Finding as to intention of testator-Finding of fact-Appeal, second.

In the case of an oral Will by one R. to his daughter, the witnesses used slightly different terms of expression but all said that the daughter was to have the property for ever, or words to that effect. The lower Appellate Court taking all the circumstances into consideratio came to the finding that "R. did make a Will in favour of his daughter and expressed his intention to give her an absolute estate":

JUDGMENT.—The last male holder of the property in dispute was Ramlal. After his death his widow Chironji married Todal Singh, and it happens that the next reversionary heir to Ramlal is Todal Singh's father Bhawaniram. We are not, however, conserned with Bhawaniram's relationship to Todal Singh or Chironji but only with his relationship to Ramlal. As the result of certain arrangements made after the death of Ramlal, that part of his property which is now in dispute went to Batti Bai, his daughter by his first wife Jai Bai, and she held it till her death in 1918. The plaintiff Bhawaniram now claims it as Ramlal's reversionary heir, from the defendant Dammar Singh, Batti Bai's husband, who is in possession and claims to retain it on the allegation that Ramlal made an oral Will whereby Batti Bai became the absolute owner of it.

(2) The learned District Judge found that Ramlal did make an oral disposition of his property and that he did direct that the property in dispute should go to his daughter Batti Bai. The correctness of this finding is not now questioned. It was further held that Ramlal directed that Batti Bai should be the absolute owner of the property. The reasons for the finding are stated as follows: "I have read through the oral evidence several times and duly noted the arguments of the lower Court but I cannot agree in rejecting this evidence. I find that the conduct of the parties and the surrounding eireumstances lend it great support, and that Ramlal must have made a Will of the nature indicated. The case of Dhuri Lal v. Dhania (1) was rightly referred to as ineleting on presise proof of the terms of a nuncapative Will, but this case cannot mean that an oral Will cannot be proved unless all the witnesses give precisely the same words in telling what the testator said. It is only to be expected that the resollection of the witnesses should use slightly different terms of expression but if the effect of the language is the same this will not matter. Now, all the witnesses are agreed as to what Batti Bai and the others were to get, and they all say that she was to have the property for ever or words to that effect I find that Ramlal did make a Will in favour of daughter and expressed his intention to give her an absolute estate."

(3) The only contention pressed by the learned Advocate for the plaintiff-appellant is that, according to the ruling of the Privy Council in Baboo Beer Pertab Sahee v. Maharajah Rajender Pertab Sahee (2) which is quoted by Skinner, A. J. C., in Dhuri Lal v. Dhania (1) no evidence of an oral Will can legally be sufficient unless it gives proof of the ipsissima verba of the testator, and here the witnesses all disagree as to the exact words used by Ramlal though they may agree as to the sense and effect of those words. answer to this is to be found in the passage in Dhuri Lal v. Dhania (1)dealing with the finding of the lower Appellate Court that an oral Will was made, where the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner said: "There is evidense on which it was, in my opinion, open to the learned Judge to arrive at this conelusion, nor do I see anything inconsistent therewith in the statement of the defendant when examined as a witness for the plaintiff. I am not, therefore, prepared to review this finding on second appeal, and, with reference to the distum of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Baboo Beer Pertab Sahee v. Maharajah Ra ender Pertab Sahee (2) relied on by the learned Counsel for the appellant, that the party setting up a nunsupative Will should be required to prove with the utmost precision, the words on which he ralies, with every eireumstance of time and place,' would remark that their Lordships' observations on this point (though in the particular ease before them obiter dicta, as they decided it on other grounds) should certainly guide Courts in this country having to deside questions of fact with regard to such Wills, but that their Lordships are Judges of fact as well as law, and that remarks made by them before the passing of the late Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1382) must be read as subject to their own subsequent desisions, requiring a strict interpretation of the provisions precluding a second appeal to a High Court in this country on a question of fact."

(4) It is clear from the passage quoted above from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that I am bound by the finding of fact at which that Court arrived, to the effect that the oral Will made by Ramlal conferred an absolute estate on Batti Bai in the portion of his property that went to her, so that it passed on her Appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 8th September 1920.

Mesers. A. P. Sen and H. K. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. St. G. Jackson and Suraj Prasad Khandelwal, for Respondent No. 1. JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to a house situate in Ajudhia, which was mortgaged by Dasrath Bharthi, the Mahant of the Parela Asthan, with the predecessor-in-title of Chaudhri Har-Sarup. The latter obtained a decree for sale on the strength of that mortgage and in execution thereof applied for the sale of the said house.

The plaintiff claims to be the chela of Durga Bharthi, the successor of Dasrath Bharthi, and as such entitled to succeed to the office of Mahant on his death. He further claims that the house in question is waaf property. appertaining to the temple at Parela, and that Durga Bharthi has made him owner of the entire property. There is also an allegation that if the property in dispute be not found to be wagf property, he is still entitled to protect the house from sale by reason of its being the ancestral and joint family property of Durge, Bharthi and himself. The defendant, Chandhri Har Sarup, denied the right of the plaintiff to file a suit and asserted that the house in question belonged to the mortgagor and that the mortgage was in any case binding because it was made for legal. necessity.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the honce in dispute appertained to the temple at Parela and was waaf property, that it had been acquired by one of the preceding Mahants out of the income of the endowment, and that there was no legal recessity to justify the mortage. He, however, dismissed the claim on the ground that the plaintiff was not at cheia of Darga Bharthi and had no right to sue.

The sole question for determination in this appeal is, whether the plaintiff is the chela of Durga Bharthi and as such entitled to protect the disputed property from sale. The plaintiff is described as 10 years old. There is evidence to show that Durga Bharthi had made him his disciple seven or eight years ago. Durga Bharthi belongs to a seet of selibate ascetics. It is not uncommon in the case of such ascetics that a minor is taken as a disciple in order that he might succeed to the office of Mahant after the death of the then Mahant. In fact, the tambignama executed by Durga Bharthi on the 28th February 1916 expressly recognises the status of the plaintiff as the disciple of Durga Bharthi and his future successor to the property therein mentioned. The entire property appertaining to the Asthan has been found in Rampat v. Durga Bharthi (1) to be waqf property; and as the house in dispute was purchased from the proceeds of the waqf property it must be deemed to partake of the same character. The only question, therefore, is whether the plaintiff is the disciple of Durga Bharthi and can protect the property of the waqf from waste or alienation or forced sale in execution of a decree.

It has been found by the Court below, and that finding is not here disputed, that there was no necessity for the mortgage. A diseiple can protect the property of the endowment either by virtue of his interest as a possible future successor of the estate or by virtue of his being a person interested in the If he acts in the former endowment. capacity he is entitled to a declaration under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, I of 1877 because a cale of the property would affect his contingent right. If he acts as a member of the public interested in the endowment he san adopt the procedure prescribed by Order J, rule 8, of the Code of Civil Procedure. He has done the former. not the latter. His election as a disciple is not illegal by reason of the fact that Dasrath Bharthi was alive when his appointment was made. Section 42 lays down that a person entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property may institute a suit for a declaration of his title to such a character or right. Being the disciple of Durga Bharthi he has at all events, a sontingent right to succeed to the office of Mahent on the death of the present bolder of the office and he can take steps to protect the endowed property against any acts of waste committed by the present holder of the officer or against any threatened sale in exeention of a decree not legally enforceable against the endowment,

The learned Counsel for the defendant No. 1 contends that the plaintiff has not asserted any such right in the plaint. He has undoubtedly set up a much higher right there; but he is entitled to fall back on his right as a disciple, and as the contingent future successor to the office to protect the property which would devolve on him when that office falls vacant. The sale of the property will only complicate matters and cause injury to the endowment, the maintenance of which is almost dependent entirely on the income derivable from the endowed property. The house in dispute forms part of the endowed property and as such cannot be sold in execution of a decree not properly chargeable against the endowment. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Murugeram Tillai v. Manickavasaka Desika Gnanasam. banda Pandara Sannadhi (2). in eases of mortgages granted over the security of endowed property by the Mahant thereof, it lies upon the mortgagee or those elaiming through him to prove that the debt was a necessary expense of the institution itself. That burden has not been discharged.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim decreed for a declaration that the property in dispute is endowed property appertaining to the Parela Asthan and is not liable to sale in execution of the decree obtained by the contesting defendant respondent against Durga Bharthi. The plaintiff-appellant will get his costs here and hitherto from the contesting defendant respondent who shall bear his own costs throughout.

Revision.

Mr. M. Yunus, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT .- This is an application against the conviction of the accused under section 271 of the Bengal Municipal Act (Act III of 1884).

On an application, dated the 26th of February 1921, made by Saukhi Lal of Barb, and on a report drawn by the Sanitary Inspector, dated the 2nd of March 1921, a notice, dated the 4th of March, under section 224 of the Municipal Act was served upon the petitioner to remove a new latrice which he had constructed upon his premisee, without the permission of the Municipality, within 15 days. On the March the petitioner filed an objection (Exhibit 7) before the Municipality against the said notice, and on a report of the Sanitary Inspector and the Vice Chairman, the Obsirman recorded the following order upon the back of the petition :-

"Please prosecute the man if you are satisfied that the privy is objectionable and erected without permission."

On the 28th of Arril the Vice-Chairman passed the following order (Exhibit 8):-

"Instruction was given to him to settle the matter amicably, but he failed. The privy was bailt without permission. However, prosesute him."

This order is said to have been verbally communicated to the petitioner by the Vice-Chairman. The petitioner was thereafter prosecuted and convicted. He has directed to pay a fine of Bs. 15 for not having pulled down the privy within 15 days of 4th of March 1921, that is, within the 19th of March 1921, and annas 2 for every day subsequent to that, till the said privy is removed. This order has been passed under section 271 of the Bengal Municipal Act.

Mr. Yunus contends that his objection filed on the 7th of March was not disposed of in terms of section 178 of the Act, nor was any time specified within which the requisiton was to be earried out. On the other hand, the Magistrate holds that the order of the Chairman, dated the 6th April, and of the Vice-Chairman, dated the 28th of April, had the effect of making the requisition absolute and that the time of 15 days mentioned in the first requisition was a suffieient compliance with the requirements of section 178. It is, however, conceded that no order in terms of section 178 was recorded and the orders of the Chairman, dated the 6th of April, and of the Vice Chairman, dated the 28th of April, cannot be construed to be a record of the disposal of the objection of the petition filed by the petitioner. Even if those orders can be construed as such, they should have specified the time within which the requisition was to be earried out. The fact that 15 days' time was mentioned in the original notice served on the 4th of March does not absolve the Municipal authorities from the obligation of again spesifying, after the disposal of the objection under section 178, the time within which the requisition shall be complied with. The original notice of the 4th of March spent itself on the 19th of March and became nugatory after the objection of the 17th of March was filed by the petitioner under section 178. The objection under section 178 may be withdrawn by recording a formal order, and if made absolute the person . affected thereby is entitled to a fresh time within which to comply with the order of the Municipality. He objected to the first notice and the right of the Municipality to require him to demolish his latrine, and, therefore, he did not comply with that no.

BADRI PRASAD C. EMPEROR.

The law permits him not to comply with the notice in the eircumstances, that is, when he files an objection. If the objection is decided in his favour, then the notice is cancelled. If, on the other hand, it is decided against him, then the decision earnot have the retrospective effect of punishing him for the default sommitted by him with respect to the first notice and imposing a fine with retrospective effect from that date, as has been done in the present ease. It is also elear from the concluding words of section 271 of the Act which imposes a daily fine during the continuance of the default after the service of requisition on him. If no objection is made, then the default after the service of notice will bring him under this clause. If, on the other hand, he makes an objection, then the default, after the service of a fresh requisition and after the disposal of the objection, will make him liable for the disobedience of that requisition. Therefore, the contention of Mr. Yunus appears to be substan. tial, though I fully agree with the view of the Magistrate that it is a technical one.

The conviction and the sentence are set aside. The Municipality will be at liberty to proceed afresh after the service of notice under section 178 and after recording a formal order.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 890, 392— Robbery—Sentence of fine only illegal—Imprisonment essential—Whipping, when should be inflicted— Whipping Act (IV of 1969), s. 4. Where a charge under section 390 of the Fenal Code is proved against an accused person, a sentence of fine only, which may or may not be accompanied with a sentence of whipping, is illegal; as under section: 92 of that Code a sentence of imprisonment is essential and ought to be imposed.

Although in such a case whipping may also be inflicted, yet under the Whipping Act, as amended, a sentence of whipping should be imposed only where there is a certain amount of aggravation in the commission of the original offence, where the degree of injury is extremely slight, the penalty of whipping should not be added to the sentence of imprisonment [p. 419, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Aligarb, dated the 13th February 1922.

Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

MEARP, O. J .- In this case one Badri Prasad was convicted by a Magistrate of the First Class of Aligarh. The prosecution case against him was, that he, with two other companions, on the evening of the 21st of January, followed three servants who were going to the house of their master, Jarao Lal, and who had at the time with them some money and a considerable quantity of valuables, said to be worth about Rs. 700. When two of the servants had entered the shop of their master, Badri Prasad was proved to the satisfaction of the Magistrate to have struck the third and rearmost man, Jwala Pracad, with a stout donda on the head; and in the confusion which resulted either Badri Prasad or one of his associates got hold of the box containing the valuables and got away with it. The blow struck was not a severe one. After that, Badri Prasad ran away. The man who had been struck was apparently able to follow him and some body or other saught Badri Prasad, he having slipped up. In these eireum. stances, the Magistrate inflieted a fine of Rs. 100 with an alternative period of imprisonment, if that fine was not paid, and sentenced Badri Prasad also to thirty stripes. Badri Prasad preferred an appeal to this Court and it has been admitted upon the question of sentence only-and, at the same time, notice has been served on him to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanceed or otherwise altered. This was a charge under section 390 and the penalty is prescrib. ed under section 392. An examination of ARJUN MARTON C. JUGGARNATH SINGH.

that section shows that a fine alone is not a permitted punishment for a robbery. Robbery, under these circumstances, may be punished by rigorous imprisonment and by a fine, and in certain cases whipping by addition. in Bat the Magistrate erred in law in sentencing the accused to a fine and a fine unaccompanied by imprisonment. We have got the whole matter before as and I personally wish to say, and I wish it to be known, that, in my view, when a person infliets pain upon another and when the offence is one which permits of the penalty of whipping, I think it a good thing to infliet that penalty. There are, of course, oirenmetanees in which the actual hurt caused is very slight, and that is a eirenmetanes to which attention has to be paid; and though I myself should certainly have reduced the number of stripes awarded to this young man in this case, I should not myself have eliminated the punishment of whipping altogether; but I see that there are other points of view in this case. The accused is a young man, a Brahmin, and the degree of injury which be indicted on Jwala Prasad was extremely slight, perhaps, in a sense, negligible. Therefore, I defer very gladly to what I have no doubt is in this case Mr. Justice Banerji's better judgment on the matter. I am quite in accord with him that there must be a substantial period of imprisonment and, therefore, we alter the nature of the punishment which Badri Prasad must undergo, and we sentence him to twelve months' rigorous imprisonment with effect from the date of his arrest. maintain the fine of imprisonment with the alternative period of imprisonment if that fine he not paid, and we wipe out that part of the sentence which orders him to receive a whipping.

BANERJI, J .- I am of opinion that the Court below was wrong in not inflicting on the appellant a sentence of imprisonment. A sentence of imprisonment is an essential sentence under section 392 of the Indian Penal Code. To this sentence a fine may be added and, under section 4 of the Whipping Act, a sentence of whipping may be imposed where, in the commission of a robbery, hurt is saused. Therefore, the sentence of fine only was an illgal sentence, and a sentence of imprisonment ought to have been (imposed. (The sentence of whipping was not an illegal sentence but, in the circumstances of the present case, I think a centence of whipping should not have been inflicted. That is a punishment which, in view of the provisions of the Whipping Act, as amended, should be inflicted in cases where there is a certain amount of aggravation in the commission of the original offence. In the present ease the offence was the first offence, so far as is known, committed by Badri Prasad. He is a young man and is a shop keeper. The hurt caused was obviously slight. A sentence of twelve months' rigorous imprisonment would, in my opinion, be a sufficiently deterrent punishment so far as he is concerned, in addition to the fine which the Court below imposed on him. I, therefore, agree in the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145 -Witness, summoning of, whether obligatory-Refusal to summon witnesses, effect of.

It is not obligatory on a Magistrate to assist the parties to a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to produce their witnesses, and they cannot claim as a matter of right that processes should be issued by the Court to enable them to bring forward their evidence. The refusal by a Magistrate to issue summonses to witnesses is not tantamount to refusing a fair trial.

Oriminal revision against an order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Hazaribagh.

Messre, Manchar Lal and Nawal Richor Prasad, II, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Bankim Oh. De, for the Opposite Party.

GIRWAR LAL C. BANSIDHAR.

JUDGMENT .- This is an application by the first party against an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Hezaribagh under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, declaring the second party to be in possession of certain land. Two grounds are taken in this application. The first is, that the petitioner has been refused a fair trial because he had no opportunity of presenting his ease before the Court. It is stated that the petitioner resides 70 miles away from Hazaribagh and that the proceeding drawn up against him was served on the 14th of January, the date fixed for trial being the 21st. On that date a petition was filed stating that the witnesses had not come and that copies of papers were required and an adjournment of one month was prayed for. The Magistrate appears to have refused this application and decided the case on the arguments of the Pleaders of both sides and on such evidence as was adduced. Now, section 145, clause (4), laye down what the presedure is to be: The Magistrate has to peruse the written statement, to hear the parties, receive the evidence produced by them respectively, consider the effect of such evidence, take such further evidence, if any, as he thinks necessary and, if possible, decide the question of possession. There is nothing in this section which requires the Magistrate to issue processes on any witnesses. The whole queswas discussed fully in Tarapada Bisuas v. Nurul Hug (1) where it was pointed out that "the Legislature could hardly have contemplated an elaborate and protracted investigation the result of which might in many instances be to defeat the object in view, namely, an effective vention of a breach of the peace. whole object might obviously be defeated if the Court could be compelled to summon and re summon witnesses at the choice of the parties." It was further observed that it appeared clear from the provisions of the Code that it is not obligatory upon the Magistrate to assist the parties to a proeeeding, under section 145 to produce their witnesses, and they carnot claim as a matter of right that processes should be issued by the Court to enable them to bring forward their evidence. This case is a direct authority against the ecutention of the petitioner and it has been approved and followed in Harenara Kumar Bose v. Girish Chundra Mitra (2). I cannot eee, therefore, that in refusing to issue summons the Magistrate refused a fair trial. took all the evidence that the parties had ready and heard what they had to say.

The second contention is, that the Magietrate has acted on the delivery of possession by the Civil Court without going into the question whether that possession was symbolical or actual. Whether there was reengnition by the second party of the sub-tenancy claimed by the first party or whether there was resumption of tenure under section 14 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, these are plainly questions which were not for the Magistrate to decide. He had evidence before him that the judgment debtor in the decree under execution was ejected and that possession was delivered by the Civil Court to the second party. His decision may be right or it may be wrong but I can see no defect in jurisdiction. The application is dismissed.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Aligarb, dated the 18th February 1922

REFERRING ORDER.—This is an application in revision against an order of Sayyad Zainuddin, Deputy Magistrate, First Class, stopping further proceedings under section 139 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

A Jury of five were appointed. of these wanted the platforms in dispute to be eat down slightly. The other three refused to return a verdiet at all. The lower Court has interpreted this as meaning, that the three men have not found the order under section 133 of the Code of Oriminal Procedure to be a reasonable one nor have they agreed to any modification, I am, however, of the opinion that the three men have deliberately shirked their duty as they have not given any verdiet at all probably because they do not want to offend either party. Under the above eirenmstances, I am of the opinion that there has been a perverse refusal on the part of the three men to decide and, in accordance with the note in paragraph 9, on page 220 of Sohoni's Criminal Procedure Code, 9th Edition, it was competent on the part of the lower Court to appoint a fresh Jury.

I, therefore, refer the case to the Hon'ble High Court with the recommendation that the order of the lower Court stopping further proceedings be set aside, and that the lower Court be directed to appoint a fresh Jury.

The lower Court is asked to submit its explanation to me within a week.

JUDGMENT.—I have read the order of the learned Sessions Judge and agree with his view of the case. I. therefore, set aside the order of the Magistrate as recommended by him, and direct that the case be sent back to the Magistrate who will proceed to appoint a fresh Jury and decide the matter before him, under the provisions of section 139 of the Code of Oriminal Procedure.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Budaun, dated the 7th January 1922.

Mr. S. O. Mukerji, for the Appellant. The Government-Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT .- The accused, Jagannath Singh, has been convicted of the murder of a woman called Radbika Kunwar and also on a charge of having poisoned Radhika Kunwar. There can be no doubt as to the fact that the appellant's ecudust has been most suspicious. This woman, who was a widow, was his mistress and the mother of his illegitimate shild. He had been put out of easte owing to his connection with her. On the 2nd of November she was seen at midday sitting outside her door vomitting and purging, and she attributed her illness to something which the appellant had given her to eat. She retired later inside the house and got worse. She stated that the appellant had given her vinegar, which was making her worse, Later on, she was sereaming. Finally, she was found dead. The appellant eremated her body with all the speed that was possible. In her room were found two pieces of rope with human blood and to which were adhering human hair. Further, bajra cakes containing arrenic were found in her room, but on the evidence there can be no conelusion as to the cause of death. At the best, it can be said that the symptoms before the weman's death were not incompatible with the conclusion that she was suffering from arsenical poisoning and that the circumstance that the pieces of blood-stained ropes were found in the room after her death would lead to a suspicion that she had in some way been maltreated in such a manner as to draw blood from her, but there is no evidence that would justify the conclusion that she died of poison. ing or had been murdered. No poison was discovered in her vomit, in her exereta or in the organs of her body. There is no evidence that would justify the conelusion that she was poisoned at all. True, it may be said that, owing to the action of the appellant, it has not been possible to obtain the best evidence as to the eause of death but the fact that he has made it difficult to procure evidence is not a substitute for the evidence. In these eircumstances, we are satisfied that the first element justifying a conviction is No corpus delicti is established. Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 445, 457— "Fastened," meaning of—Entry merely by pushing shutters—Nature of offence.

The word "fastened," as used in section 445 of the Penal Code, implies something more than being closed such as chaining the shutters or tying them with a rope or bolting them or locking the door. An entry of an accused into a house by merely pushing in shutters of the door does not constitute the offence of house-breaking, as it does not come under any of the six clauses of section 445 of the Penal Code, but constitutes an offence of house-trespass under section 457 with intent to commit an offence.

EMPEROR C. DURGA PRASAD.

Appeal against a judgment of the Magistrate, First Class, Raipur, dated 16th November 1921, in Oriminal Case No. 55/166 of 1921.

Mr. G. P. Dick, Standing Counsel, for the Crown. JUDGMENT.—The appellant above named has been convicted under section 457, Indian Penal Code, on a charge of having, on the night of the 27th September last, broken into the house of Ludbra (P. W. No. 4) with the intention of committing theft and sentensed to five years' rigorous imprisonment. That the appellant was actually found inside the house and that he had gone there for committing theft has, not withstanding his denial, been satifactorily established. The question, however, is whether the ast committed by the appellant amounts to house break. ing. From the evidence of Ludhra it is elear that the door of the house entered into by the appellant was neither chained nor looked. The appellant must have, therefore, got into the house by merely pushing in the shutters of the door. The evidence does not show that he had got inside the house by any other passage. The appellant's entry into the house by merely pushing in the shutters of the door does not some under any of the eix elauses of section 445 which defines the term bousebreaking. The door sould not be said to have been "fastend", when its shutters were merely closed. The term "fastened" implies something more, such as chaining the shutters or tying them with a rope or bolting them or looking the door. The appellant's conviction under section 457 cannot, therefore, stand. His act falls under the last portion of section 451, Indian Penal Code, and amounts to a house-trespass with intent to commit theft. His conviction under section 457 is altered into one under the last portion of section 451, Indian Penal Code. As regards the sentence, considering his record of the previous convictions, five years' rigorous imprisonment cannot be called severe. It is maintained and so is the order passed under section 565, Code of Criminal Procedure.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 202, 203—Magistrate—Inquiry—Local investigation—Procedure—Irregularity.

Under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code a Magistrate, when not satisfied with the truth of a complaint has the option of only one out of two alternatives, viz., either to enquire into the case himself, or direct a previous local investigation. If he proceeds to inquire into the case himself, an order thereafter directing local investigation is irregular and the whole proceeding against the accused is vitiated if a material portion of the irregular proceedings has a share in the formation of his judgment.

Criminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Bands, dated the 7th March 1922.

REFERRING ORDER.—Durga Praead, teacher of the village of Mungae, Sahai, a co-sharer and Lambardar of the village, and Madho were tried together and convicted of offences punishable under sections 342 and 381 of the Indian Penal Code. Darga Praead was fined Rs. 50 only; the other two, more than Rs. 50. Sahai and Madho prefer this appeal from the order of conviction and sentence passed against them.

Having heard the learned Vakil for the appellants and the Government Pleader, I have arrived at the conclusion that the convictions and sentences of Sahai and Madho should be set aside and they should be re tried by any other Magistrate of the First Olase.

Six persons brought the complaint, which gave rise to the trial against the accused persons in the lower Court, on the 4th Ostober 1:21. The complainants were examined on the same date. Processes for the appearance of the accused persons were not ordered to be issued. The complainants were told, instead, under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, to produce evidence on the 19th October. Ordinarily, after the examination of the complainant, processes are issued. And, according to decided cases, a Magistrate has no discretion to make a judicial erquiry, unless he is not satisfied as to the truth of the complaint. The above order is, therefore, . prima facie proof of the fast, that the learned

EMPEROR D. DUSSA PSABAD.

Magistrate was not satisfied as to the truth of the complaint, even after hearing the statements of the complainants on oath. the 19th, evidence of two witnesses, Gajju and Bharosa was recorded. Having heard them, the learned Magistrate wrote the following order, which is to be found in the order. sheet :-

"I am not satisfied with the section 202 evidence produced to-day. It is admitted that the complainants had stipulated to plough up the fields and, therefore, the subsequent alleged extortion may not have any truth in it."

If the reasons given by the learned Magistrate were valid, the proper order, in the ordinary course of things, ought to have been a dismissal of the complaint under section 203, with brief reasons for such dismissal, Instead of that, the learned Magistrate proeeeded to make an order, directing a Naib-Tabsildar "to report after an enquiry." The meaning of this order is not quite clear. Under section 202 an "enquiry" into the case is the province of the Magistrate only. Any offiser subordinate to such Magistrate, or a Police Officer, or any other person may, if so directed, hold a previous "local investigation." In a case decided by the Hon'ble High Court Bai, Nath v. Ra, a Rum (1) the enggestion was thrown out that cases in which there were any disputes about boundary, or any matter of that kind was involved, were alone fit cases for a "local intestigation." But I presume that the learned Magistrate's order, directing the Naib Tabsildar to hold "an enquiry and report," was really an order directing an investigation authorised by The Naib-Tabsildar examined section 202. a number of witnesses on the spot, besides the complainants, the accused, and the two witnessee, whom the complainants, produced before the learned Magistrate under section 202. After a perusal of the Naio-Tahsildar's proceedings and the report, on the 3rd November 1921 processes were issued for the appearance of the accused persons, who appeared on the 18th November. On this date two out of the six complainants, two witnesses, who were examined under section 202 and one further witness, Marzir Nabi, who proved not a word of the charge, were examined. The Court then adjourned and on the 3rd December 1921, the Naib Tabaildar and one Ram Prasad an assistant teacher in the school of one of the accused, Darga Prasad, were examined. I notice that the Counsel for defense objected to any question being put to the Naib-Tahsildar relating to what the assused persons or the witnesses stated to him. This objection was overruled. On the other hand, the prosecution wanted the Naib Tabsildar to prove the statements of persons recorded by him. That was also disallowed. The Naib Tahsildar proved (1) that Sahai, one of the accused persons, saluted the witness in a manner which led bim to think that he wanted the matter to be hushed up; and (2) that the assistant teacher, Ram Prased, told him that one of the boys who had been produced before the witness, was tutored by one of the accused. The evidence of the assistant teacher, Ram Prasad, before the Court did not help the prosecution. The latter thereupon declared the witness hostile, and was permitted to eross. examine him. The resord indicates that this witness was put in eross-examina. tion a statement said to have been made by him before the Naib-Tabsildar, where he mentioned that the accused, Darga Prasad, real zed Rs. 10 each from the complainants. He was apparently contradicted by his statement before the Naib. Tabsildar, for he goes on to say that the Naib-Tahsildar did not record his full statement; that he made notes only; that his statement was not shown or read out to him, and that he signed it, merely because he was desired by the Naib Tabsildar to do so.

The learned Magistrate in his judgment observes as follows: - "Marzor Nabi, witness, gives elue to the first parchayat having been held in the school, although he denied all knowledge of the second, (I may note here that no offence was committed in the first panchayat and the offences, which are subject of the charge, were said to have been committed in the second panchayat alone). Pandit Suraj Nath Misra, the Naib-Tahail. dar, who held the preliminary investigation, has also been formally examined. Prasad, assistant teacher, has retracted the statement made by him before the Naib-Tabaildar, obviously under pressure."

the two complainants and the two witnesses, the same who were examined under section 202 alone. A comparison of their evidence under section 202, and at the time of the trial, will show that there was nothing new in their subsequent statements; but so far as their testimony went, the case stood exactly where it did after the proceedings under section 202.

Now, under section 202 the learned Magis. trate had the option of only one out of two alternatives, namely, either to enquire into the ease himself, or direct a previous local investigation. Assuming that this was a fit case for a local investigation, there is nothing in sestion 202 which empowered the learned Magistrate to have resourse to both the alternatives. The record shows that he shose one of the two alternatives, namely, to enquire into the ease himself, which he did. His order, therefore, directing local investigation was irregular. And if it be found, that any material obtained through this irregular course acted on the mind of the learned Magistrate in arriving at a conclusion prejudicial to the accused persons, it must be held that the accused persons were prejudiced in consequence of that irregularity. It would, therefore, vitiate the proceedings. Upon a perusal of the judgment under appeal and the passages quoted, I have seareely any doubt that a material portion of the irregular proceedings had a share in the formation of the learned Magistrate's judgment. I would accordingly set aside the order of conviction and sentence made against the appellants and send down the record to the District Ma. gistrate to pass it on to some other Magistrate empowered to try the case, for re-trial of the appellants. In view of the ruling in Bhola v. Emperor (2), I refer the case of Darga Prasad, against whom a non appealable sentence was passed and who has not appealed, to the Hon'ble High Court after taking the learned Magistrate's explanation.

JUDGMENT. - For the reasons stated in the Referring Order of the Sessions Judge, I set aside the conviction and sentence of the accused Darga Prasad and direct that he be

The provisions of section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code do not confer upon a District Magistrate either an appellate or revisional juris, diction in respect of orders passed under section 107 binding down persons to keep the peace; the section merely empowers a District Magistrate to cancel a bond for any sufficient reason, and confers no power on him to set aside a proceeding under section 107, even though the Subordinate Magistrate had acted without jurisdiction. [p. 427, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to set aside an order passed by the Deputy Commissioner of Palamau, whereby an order passed by the Deputy Magistrate binding DURGA SINGH C. AMAR DAYAL SINGH.

down the opposite party under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was declared to be void and of no effect.

It appears that the present petitioner obtained a lease of forest rights for a period of seven years from the opposite party and proceeded to work the timber of the forest. A dispute arose between the parties as to various matters but mainly as to the manufacture of charcoal and the danger of setting fire to the forest. It is the petitioner's case that the opposite party employed men to supervise and that these men used force. It was, therefore, prayed that steps should taken under section 107 against the opposite party to bind them down to keep the peace.

The case came before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in charge and he drew up proceedings and called for written statements of the parties and the Court ordered the parties to produce their witnesses. The witnesses were produced on a certain date but an adjournment was asked for and the Sub Divisional Magistrate, after placing the witnesses on personal recognizance, allowed an adjournment for four days.

On the 16th of May when the case was to be heard and the witnesses to be examined, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was ill and the next Senior Deputy Magistrate took charge of the pending file. He took up this case under section 107 and tried it himself, and finally passed the order binding down the opposite party under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to keep the peace for one year.

The opposite party thereupon moved the Deputy Commissioner who, after considering the ease on its merits, found that the story put forward by the present patitioner was not altogether to be believed; he also held that, at the time the order was passed by the Deputy Magistrate, there was no imminent likelihood of a breach of the peace; and, thirdly, he considered the question whether the Deputy Magistrate who passed the order under section 107 had jurisdis. tion. The point was that the Sub Divisional Magietrate in charge had taken cognizance of the ease and there had been no order by the Deputy Commissioner for the transfer of the case from the file of the Sub. Divisional Magistrate to the file of the Daputy Magistrate. He came to the conelucion that the Deputy Magistrate had acted without jurisdiction. His finding was that.

"He, therefore, acted without jurisdiction in this case and under section 530 where a Magistrate acts without jurisdiction the whole proceeding is void ab initio. There has been no trial and the order is void. There is in fact no order for security such as would be enforced in law, and I, therefore, quash the whole proceedings. Party aggrieved should seek his remedy in the Civil Court."

It is to be noticed that there is no order eancelling the bond. Mr. Hasan Imam on behalf of the petitioner argues that the learned Deputy Commissioner had no jurisdiction to pass the order he did. Section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure runs as follows:—

"The Ohief Presidency or District Magistrate may, at any time, for sufficient reasons to be recorded in writing, cancel any bond for keeping the peace, or for good behaviour executed under this Chapter by order of any Court in his district not superior to his Court."

There is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code allowing an appeal against an order passed under section 118 requiring a person to execute a bond to keep the peace, and section 125 alone enables a Magistrate to deal with orders passed under section 107 and section 118 read together. In the case of an order for the execution of a bond to be of good behaviour, the Oode, under section 406, allows an appeal. It is to be noticed that section 125 only allows cancelment of the bond; it says nothing about setting aside proceedings or in any way dealing with the proceedings which have led to the order for the exeeution of a bond. In fact, the order passed under section 125 is an executive order. It has been held in the case of Daya Nath Thakur v. Emperor (1) that a proceeding under section 125 is not a judicial proceeding and, in fact, it cannot be otherwise than an executive order. It has been held further in Barka Chandra Dey v. Janmeioy Dutt (2) that section 125

of the Criminal Procedure Code does not confer upon a District Magistrate either an appellate or revisional jurisdiction in respect of orders binding down persons to keep the peace. In that case the District Magistrate set aside a proceeding which was taken under section 107 before any bond had been executed, and the learned Judges held that "sufficient reason" mentioned in section 125 was sonfined to the reason that a bond was no longer necessary. In the case of Nabu Sardar v. Emperor (3) the decision passed in the previous case was overruled and it was desided that a bond to keep the peace might be cancelled on other grounds than that the bond was no longer necessary. In that case there was no overruling of the desision in the earlier case that section 125 conferred no appellate or revisional juriediction. In the case of Daya Nath Thakur v. Emperor (1) to which I have alluded above, it was held that cestion 125 does not confer the right to hear an appeal from an order in a proceeding under section 107.

Either of two courses was open to the learned Daputy Commissioner : if he sonsidered that there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace, or there were other sufficient reasons for cancelling the bond, he sould, under section 125, cancel the bond, or, if he considered that the Deputy Magistrate had acted without jurisdiction and the pressedings under section 107 should be queshed on that ground, he could have referred the matter to this Court for the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. He has not, however, cancelled the bond as he was empowered to do by section 125, but has usurped appellate or revisional jurisdietion and set saids the whole proceedings as being without jurisdiction and void ab ini. tio. This he plainly sould not do.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad on behalf of the Crown had urged that this Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the order of the learned Deputy Commissioner as it was not passed in a judicial proceeding. He, therefore, admits that the order under section 125 is an executive order. He has also argued that the person against whom orders are passed under section 107 is an assused person and that the proseedings under section 107 are criminal proceedings, so that if the Deputy Commissioner's order is set aside by this Court it will be tenta. mount to the setting aside of an acquittal, But if his admission that an order under section 125 is an executive order is right, then, plainly, there could be no executive order setting aside an order passed in a judicial proceeding under the Code of Oriminal Projecture. The learned Counsel has contended, too, that the whole trend of the judgment of the learned Deputy Commissioner was to show that the bond must be cancelled. It would have been quite regular if the Deputy Commissioner at the end of his judgment for the reasons he gave, had simply cancelled the bond, but he has not done so; he ha deelared the whole proceedings to be void ab initio, Under sestion 125 he had no power to do this.

The order of the learned Deputy Commissioner must, therefore, he set aside as being without jurisdiction and the order of the Deputy Magistrate restored. If the opposite party is aggrieved, he can approach the Deputy Commissioner again and the latter can then consider whether, under the existing circumstances, it is necessary to careel the bond for any sufficient reason.

plea of guilty. Murder is a mixed question of fact and law, and unless the Court is perfectly satisfied that the accused knew exactly what was necessarily implied by his plea of guilty, the case should be tried.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Budaun dated the 29th March 1:22.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Baner, ee (Government

JUDGMENT,-Dalli has appealed from his sentence of death for the murder of his mistress. The learned Sessions Judge assepted his plea of "guilty" and convicted him upon it. No evidence at all was taken in the Court of Session. In a case of murder it has long been the practice of this Court not to accept the plea of guilty. After all murder is a mixed question of fact and law, and, unless the Court is perfectly satisfied that the accused knew exactly what was necessarily implied by his plea of guilty, the case should be tried, and in dealing with people of the status of Dalli, this, of course, can never be the case. A Chairman may delegate, under section 45 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, his duties or powers to defined by that Act to the Vice-Chairman but cannot by virtue of that section delegate to him his powers under the Licensed Ware-house and Fire-brigade Act, inasmuch as by virtue of section 9 of the latter Act the power can be delegated only to a Special Committee.

Therefore, an order passed by the Vice-Chairman refusing an application for license to use a building or place as a ware-house is no refusal under section 15 of the Licensed Ware-house and Fire-brigade Act.

An application for license under section 7 of the Licensed Ware-house and Fire-brigade Act not disposed of within 50 days from the date of its being received by the Chairman, exempts the applicant from liability so long as the application is not finally refused.

Appeal by the Government against an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Howrab, dated the 31st March, 1921.

Mr. Orr, for the Appellant.

Dutt, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT .- This is an appeal against an acquittal. The respondent J. S. Mull was charged with baving committed an offence punishable under section 15 of the Lisensed Ware house and Fire brigade Act, 1893 which provides a penalty for any person who uses any building or place as a ware-house in respect of which a license has been refused. A preliminary objection has been taken which is fatal to this appeal. The Act provides that the refusal of an application for license shall, under section 7, be by an order in writing under the hand of the Chairman of the Commissioners. In the present case, the order of refusal was passed by the Vice Chairman. Although under section 45 of the Bengal Municipal Act, III (B. C.) of 1884, the Chairman may delegate his duties or powers to the Vice Chairman, the powers he can so delegate are the powers as defined by that Act. He cannot by virtue of that section delegate to the Vice-Chairman his powers under the Licensed Ware-house and Fire brigade Act. That Act provides in section 9 for the delegation of the powers of the Chairman to a Special Committee but makes no provision for delegation to the Vice. Chairman. We must consequently hold that the prosecution was bound to fail as there was no refusal of the application for licence in accordance with this Act.

We are requested by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer to point out an error in the judgment of the Trying Magistrate. He has held that section 7 of the Fire brigade SESHA PRABHE O. EMPEROR.

Act requires that any application for license shall be disposed of within thirty days from the date of its being received by the Chairman and, if not disposed of within that period, the applicant shall not be liable. This, as stated, is wrong, because, if the application is not disposed of within thirty days, the applicant is only exempted from liability so long as the application is not finally refused.

The appeal is dismissed.

EMPEROR - OPPOSITE PARTY, Madras District Municipalities Act (Mad. V of 1920), ss 249, 886, Sch. V-Sale of grain wholesale without license-'Wholesale,' meaning of-Notification to take license under new Act not yet in force issued by Council constituted under old Act, validity of-Conviction for infringement, legality of.

The sale by a person of bags of grain from one to six at a time without opening them, constitutes a 'wholesale' trade within the meaning of Schedule V to the Madras District Municipalities Act (V of

A notification by a Municipal Council constituted under the old District Municipalities Act (Mad. IV of 1884) directing dealers in wholesale grain to take out a license under section 249 of the new Act V of 1920 before that Act actually comes into force is ultra vires and void, as the notifi cation being neither a rule, nor a bye-law, nor a Regulation cannot be validated under the proviso to sections 365 of that Act. [p. 482, col. 1.]

Petition under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Tellisherry, in Oriminal Appeal No. 23 of 1921, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Stationary Second Class Magistrate, Kottayam, in Calendar Case No. 37 of 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. Sitarama Row, for the Petitioner .-No lisense is necessary as there was no wholesale trade in grain by the accused. The sale was only to retailers.

On a question of law, the conviction should be quashed. The Municipal Council had no power to issue the notification under the new District Municipalities Act, of 1920, section 249. It was not constituted under the new Act as the Council did not go out and some in again. Infringement of an illegal notification is no offence.

The notification is not a bye-law, rule or regulation to be validated under seetion 365.

Mr. J. O. Adam, (Public Prosecutor) for the Crown.-The trade was wholesale as accused stored thousands of bags out of which he sold six without opening them.

The notification, Exhibit D, is under the powers given to the old Council under section 866 (a) of the new Act, which says that until the Chairman and Councillors come into office under the new Act they shall have all the powers under the old Act.

Under section 365 they have the power to issue Exhibit D. If Exhibit D cannot be regarded as a rule, bye law or regulaSESHA PRABHU U. EMPEROR.

tion, infringers will be practically immune under the Act.

Mr. B Sitarama Row in reply: —Section 366
(a) cannot be invoked as the Council issued the Notification before the new Act came into force.

ORDER.

OLDFIELD, J.—We are asked to revise the petitioner's conviction and sentence for the effence of storing and selling grain wholesale within the Cannanore Municipal limits without a licence from the Municipal Chairman, punishable under sections 249/338 (b) of the Madras District Municipalities Act, V of 1920.

The first objection taken to the conviction is, that there is no evidence of the sale of grain wholesale or of the storage for wholesale trade, contemplated by Schedule V (o) for which a licence can be required under section 249. In the absence of a definition of 'wholesale' in the Act, the meaning of the expression in common parlance must be decisive, and, the definition in the Century or Webster's Distionaries as "sale in large quantifies" or the secondary definition in the latter "selling to retailers or jobbers" is accepted, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's finding of fast is sufficient, that petitioner " has eix shops in which he stores thousands of bags of grain, selling them from one to six bags at a time to petty merchants and others and not, so far as was shown, selling them by measures after breaking up the bags."

This failing, we have to deal with the more substantial contention that storage without a license was not punishable under section 338 (b) because there had not been any valid notification under section 249, making it obligatory on petitioner to obtain one. The facts are that under section 365 Aet V of 1920 of notification of the Governor.in.Conneil No. 595, dated 10th August 1920, same into force on 1st October 1920; but Exhibit D. the notification under section 249 relied on by the prosecution, had been published on the 15th July 1920; and it is argued that the Municipal Council having at the latter date no powers under the Act, its notification could have no legal effect and could ereate no obligation, for breach of which petitioner could be punished. The lower Courts answer that petitioner was in no way prejudiced by such premature publication is elearly inconclusive, when the question arises in connection with the application of a penal provision and a strict construction of the law is required. Here reliance is placed, firstly, on section 366 (a) of the Act of 1920 which provides that, until the Chairman and the Councillors to be newly appointed or elected under that Act come into office, the Chairman and Councillors under the previous Act of 1884 shall have all the powers of the Chairman and Councillors under the former. Section 366 (a), however, as its wording of the substantive part of the section shows, merely provides for modification in the provisions of the new Act in their application to the term of office and election and appointment of the Councillors and Chairman for the first time after the commencement of the Act or of powers under it before the date to be notified under section 365. In the alternative, reference had been made to the proviso to the last-mentioned section, under which rules, bye-laws and regulations authorized under the new Act could be made at any time after the publication of the assent to it of the Governor-General on the 15th June 1920. But this did not justify the issue of Exhibit D 29th June 1920. For Exhibit D is not a rule, because under section 303 (3) rules ean be made only by the Governor in-Council; it is not a bye-law, because, if its subject matter can be indentified with any of those enumerated in section 305, it was not published or confirmed in the manner prescribed in sections 309 and 310; and it is not a regulation, because section 312 providing only for the manner in which regulations may be published, power to make them is on the Municipal Council, not generally, but only in connection with certain specified provisions, see for instance, sections 25 and 130, in which section 249 (1) is not included.

In these circumstances, it is not possible to uphold as valid the Council's notification, Exhibit D, which petitioner is charged with infringing. The foundation for his conviction thus failing, his petition must be allowed and he must be acquitted. The fine, if paid, including the amount levied as licence, fee, will be refunded on his application.

KRISHWAY, J .- This case raises the question of the validity of a notification issued by the Municipal Council of Cancanore in July 1920 under section 249 of the new District Municipalities Act, Madras Act V of 1920. The notification is marked Exhibit D and was issued in ascordance with a resolution passed by the Council constituted under the now repealed Act of 1884 bringing into application the licensing powers given by the new Ast with effect from the 1st of October 1920, the date on which the Act was brought into force by the Governor-in Council by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette of the 10th August 1920 as provided in section 365 of the Act. The accused has been prosecuted and convicted under section 338 for selling grain wholesale and for storing it for such sale without taking out licenses as required by the notification. It is contended for the accused that the notification had no legal effect as it was issued by a Conneil which was not sonstituted under the new Act but by one constituted under the repealed Act and which had no power to pass the resolution to levy licensing fees or to publish a notification to that effect.

Without a valid and proper notification under section 249 the liability to take out licenses for any of the purposes specified in Schedule V of the new Act will not, of course, arise in any Municipal area for the Act makes the publication of the notification in the manner provided for in the section and the lapse of 60 days thereafter, necessary pre requisites for bringing into force the licensing provisions. It is, therefore, important to consider whether Exhibit D was a valid notification.

Reading section 245 by itself it is manifest that the Council referred to in it is the Council constituted under the new Act according to the provision of Chapter II thereof. That Council is the body given authority by section 249 of the Act to decide how far it would bring into force the licensing power given by the Act. The Council constitued under the old Act was a different legal entity and could not exercise the power under section 249 unless there is indeed any other provision of law giving the Council the power to so act. It is contended by the learned Public Prosecutor that section 366 of the Act is such a provision and in fact he relied shiefly on the last part of clause (a) in it as giving power to the old Council to issue the notification in question. That clause gives power to the Governor-in-Council to determine, after the new Act had been brought into force, the date on which the Chairman and Councillors of the old Council should go out of office and the newly elected Chairman and Councillors should some into office; and then it says that until they so some into office, the Chairman and the Councillors of the old Council should have all the powers and be subject to all the duties, respectively, of the Chairman and Councillors under the new Act. It is contended that this last provision validated the Notification Exhibit D. But, unfortunately, in this case the Courcil bad acted before the new Act was brought into force, their Resolution and notification being in July as already stated, that is, some months before the Act was put in force. No doubt, the power to issue a notification under section 249 is a power given to the new Council under the new Act but the power itself came into existence only when the Act was brought into force and not before. It is impossible, then, to see how the old Council could have properly exercised that power which did' not exist on the date on which it purported to exercise it. It is evident from the language of clause (a) that by it the Legislature was making provision for carrying on the Municipal Administration during the interregnum between the coming into forse of the new Act and the assumption of office by the new Chairman and The clause, as I under-Councillors. stand it, has nothing to do with any anterior periods, for before the new Act came into force there was the old Act in full force under which the old Council was free to act.

The only provision of the new Act that gave power to the old Council to act in anticipation of the Act being brought into force is the proviso to section 365 which enabled "rules, bye-laws and regulations" to be made under the new Act as soon as it had received the assent of the Governor General. The notification, Exhibit D, was, no doubt, issued after the assent of the Governor-General had been given and if section 365 could be held to apply to it, it would be a valid proceeding. Apparently, the Council asted under that section and in fact the Appellate Court has upheld its validity under that section. But I am unable to support the view as the notification in question eannot apparently be brought under any one of the terms "rule, bye law, or regulation" used in the section. These words are not defined in the Act but Chapter XIV dealing with the making of them shows what is meant by each—seetions 303 to 305 show, that rules are those made by the Governor-in-Council. Section 306 shows bye-laws are made by the Conneil but that section specified the purposes for which bye-laws can be made, of which the purpose of the notification in question here does not seem to be one. The matter is made elear by referring to section 309 which prevents a bye-law from having effect till it is approved of and confirmed by the Governor-in Council and section 310 which shows the method of making it and publishing it. These conditions do not apply to the action of the Council under section 249. Section 312 shows regulations are those made by Municipal Authorities and not by the Council and they can be as the in such manner published Council determines. The method of their publication shows elearly that the word regulation cannot refer to the notification under section 249 which that section itself directs to be published in a particular manner. I am, therefore, of opinion that section 365 cannot be used to validate the action of the Council in the issuing of the notification, Exhibit D.

It was suggested that if the liability to take out the license is not treated as one imposed by any rule, bye-law or regulation there may the a difficulty in applying section 338 even to eases where proper notification had been issued under section 249 and that there will be no provision for punishment for disobedience. This argument is, I think, not sound for I consider that the necessity to take out licenses when a proper notification is issued arises under the Act itself and section 338, which speaks of the Act as well, will apply. In my view the Act imposes the liability subject to the condition about the notification prescribed in section 249. But when that condition is not properly fulfilled, as I hold is the case here, section 338 does not apply and the conviction of the accused must be set aside.

It was also argued for the petitioner that the trade carried on by him in grain was not a wholesale trade but a retail one. Oa this point, I agree with the lower Court that the trade was a wholesale one as the patitioner is found to have sold grain by the bulk without breaking the bage, in quantities of 1 to 6 bags at a time to retail dealers. The term "wholesale" as used in Schedule V of the Act is not defined in the Act and we have therefore, to apply to the word the meaning that is ordinarily given to it by the public and by traders in general. That is the view taken by the lower Court and I agree with it and, taking that view, the petitioner's trade was well within the scope of the term "wholesale" trade. Though the petitioner fails on this point, he has succeeded on his first point and his conviction is, therefore, quashed and the fine and licence fees, if they have been paid by him, will be refunded to him.

JUDGMENT.—Counsel agree that on the re-marriage of a widow her rights in her deceased husband's estate come to an end according to the general custom of this Province as prevalent among agriculturists. As the Courts below have dealt with this case as one of eastom it is clear that castom is and must be the rule of decision.

On the re-marriage of Musammot Gauhre she forfeited her rights in her deseased husband's estate-including, passsarily, her right to reside in the house in dispute. She has, however, two daughters by her former husband and under the general enstom of this Province these daughters have, admittedly, a right to reside in their father's house until they marry or die whichever event first takes place. plaintiffs, therefore, have no immediate right to possession. Mr. Umar Bakhsh contends that in the case of a house in a village the law or enstom is different but has eited no authority for this proposition, and I am unable to sonsede it. The house is situated in a village and the deceased was a kamin, in any ease, a non-proprietor, whose rights seased and reverted to the landlord on his demise without eustomary

The most the plantiffs can get in this suit is a deslaration that the widow Musammat Gauhre has forfeited her right of residence in this house by her re-marriage—with this decree Mr. Mahajan is content—so long as the daughters are alive and unmarried they appear to be entitled to retain possession, as admitted by Counsel for appellants.

The decision of a Court must rest, not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. [p. 440, col. 1.]

Where a litigant feels aggrieved by the statement in a judgment that an admission has been made, the most convenient and satisfactory course to follow, wherever practicable, is to apply to the Judge without delay and ask for rectification or review of the judgment. [p. 441, col. 1.]

A statement in a judgment as to an admission made before the Court of first instance should not be doubted lightly by the Appellate Court, especially in the absence of an affidavit by the Vakil who appeared in the Court of first instance. [p. 441, col. 1.]

for the Plaintiffs-Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has resulted in this appeal is a large tract of what is called Jalpai land of the abolished Salt Depart. ment, situated in the district of Midnapur within the Zemindari of the Raja of Mahisadal. On the 8th July 1864 one Sunder Narain Maiti obtained a settlement from the Zemindar in respect of an estimated area of 400 bighos within specified boundaries. After the death of the original grantee, his son Taraprosad Maiti, on the 10th November 1874, took a confirmatory lease of 513 bighas, approximately, for the benefit of the family he was the renior member, The relationship of the members of this family may be gathered from the following genealogical table :-

SARAT CHANDRA MAITI O, BISHABATI DEBI.

The Maitis defaulted to pay rent, with the result that on the 2 th August 1903 the Zamindars obtained a decree for rent against them. The decree was put into execution, and at the auction-sale which followed, the landlords became the purchasers on the 16th January 1904 The sale was confirmed on the 18th February 1934 and possession was delivered on the 10th April 1904. On the 30th January 1909 the plaintiff obtained settlement from the Raja. The defendant, however, disputed her right to take possession. This led to the institution of prosesdings under sections 107 and 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code which terminated in an order made on the 28th Saptember 1912 for attachment of the disputed lands under sestion 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The plaintiff, thereupon institut. ed the present suit on the 9th October 1917 for deslaration of her title the attached land under the lease granted to her on the 30th January 1939 and sums of money held to the Collector as Receiver from the date of his appointment. There were two sets defendants to the suit, namely, defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and defendants Nos. 7 to 12. The first set repudieted the claim on the ground that it was barred by limitation and that the deeres for rent did not affect their rights under the lease of the 10th November 1874. The second set urged that they held tenancies subordinate to the lease of the 10th November 1874 and were consequently entitled to remain in cosupation, notwithstanding the sale held on the 16th January 1904 in execution of the deerse for arrears of rent. The Subordinate Judge overruled these contentions and deslared the right of the plaintiff to direct possession of the disputed lands; the decree also made a consequential order as to the amounts held in deposit in the treasury. The defendants have appealed against this decree, and separate arguments have been addressed to the Court on behalf of the two sets of defendants who have united in one appeal. The grounds which emerge for consideration may be formulated as follows: first, that the suit is barred by limitation; secondly, that the decree for rent made on the 26th August 1903 did not operate as a valid rent decree, as three of the persons interested in the tenancy created under the lease of the 19th

November 1874 were not represented before the Court in the rent suit; and, thirdly, that the tenancies set up by the second-set of defendants were real and not fictitious as held by the Subordinate Judge.

As regards the first point, we are of opinion that the plea of limitation cannot prevail, in view of the decision of this Court in Brojendra Kishore Roy v. Bharat Chandra Roy [Abdul Razze] (1). That ease is an authority for the proposition that when a property is attached under section 146 of the Oriminal Procedure Code, it passes into legal enstody, and during the continuance of the attachment, such sustody is for the benefit of the true owner. If the true owner was in fact in possession when the attachment was effected, his possession in the eye of the law is not interrupted. If, on the other hand, the wrong doer was in possession at the time when the attachment took place, the effect of the attachment is to interrupt his possession, and from the moment of attachment the possession of the rightful owner revived in the eye of the law. These results are dedacible from the decisions of the Jadicial Committee in Trustees and Agency Company v. Short (2), Secretary of State v. Krishna. mani Gupta (3) and Basanta Roy v. Becretary of State for India (4). The intervention of the public authorities for the preservation of peace, operates in the same way as the vis ma,or of the finds, and the constructive possession of the land is thereafter, if anywhere, in the true owner. While the Collector holds possession for the benefit of the rightful owner, no possession on the part of the wrong doer, eap, by legal fiction, be deemed to continue so as to be available towards the ultimate acquisition of title against the true owner. From this standpoint, no question of limitation really arises, because less than twelve years elapsed between the confirmation of the rent sale on the 18th February 1904 and the attachment by the Magistrate on the 28th September 1912. If during the attachment, the seisin or legal possession is in the true owner, the attachment does not amount to either dispossession of the owner or the discontinuance of his possession. But it has been urged that this view earnot be reconciled with the decision in Deo Narain v. Webb (5). This may be sonceded; it must not be overlocked, however, that the decision in that ease was pronounced in 1900, when the judgment of the Fall Bench in Kolly Churn Sahoo v. Secretary of State for India (6) was still considered good law. That Full Bench decision was overroled by the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni Gurta (3). The substance of the matter is that the doetrine that that there can be no continuance of adverse possession when the land is not espable of ure and enjoyment by the rightful owner, which is now regarded as an elementary proposition by reason of the successive decisions of the Judicial Committee in Trustees and Agency Company v. Short (2). Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni Guita (3) and Basanta Roy v. Secretary of State for India (4) was by no means familiar when the ease of Deo Narain v. Welb (5) was decided; that erse cannot consequently be treated as binding authority, as it overlocks a fundamental principle enunciated by the Judicial Ocmmittee. We thus see no resson to depart from the decision in Brojendra Kishore Roy v. Bharat Chandra Ecy [Abdul Razac] (1), and the first ground must be overruled untenable.

As regards the escond point, it has been urged that the decree for rent made on the 26th August 1993, did not operate as a valid rent decree, as three of the persons interested in the terancy at that time were not represented before the Court in that suit. These three persons were Asutosh Maiti (the late father of the fourth and fifth defendants in this suit), Saratchandra Maiti (the third defendant in this suit). and Bimala (the widow of Haraprasad Maiti). As regards Acutosb, the objection taken is that at the date of the institution of the rent suit, he had in reality attaired majority, but was misdescribed as a minor represented by his unels and certificated Ramparayan guardian Maiti (the first defendant in this suit). As regards Saratchandra, who was a miror at the date of ocmmencement of the rent suit, the objection taken is that his unele and certificated guardian Ramnarayan Maiti was appointed bis grardian for the suit without concent. As regards Bimala, the objection taken is that the was not joined as a party to the rent-suit, though the interest of ber husband in the tenancy must have devolved on her by right of inheritance.

As regards the objection in respect of Acutoch Maiti, a question has been raised regarding the admissibility of the resital in the guardianship certificate, of the date when he would attain majority. Reference has been made to the decisions in Satis Chunder v. Mohendro Lal (7) and Gun, ra Kuar v Ablakh Pande (8) to show that such evidence would not be admissible under section 35 of the Indian Evidence Act. There cases were doubted in Monindra Mohan Roy v. Ram Krishna (9) where the recital in a guardienship certificate was held admissible under section 32 (5), on an interpretation of the section which reseives support from the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mohomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yesh Ool Gark (10) and conforms to the earlier decisions in Ram Chandra Dult v. Jogeswar Narain Deo (11), Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose (12) and Oriental Government Security Life Assurance Company Limited v. Narasimha Chari (13), But we sannot overlock the fast that in the present case the recital was based presumably on the statement of the applicant for guardianship, ramely, Ramnarain Maiti, who is a party to the suit and could have beenexamined as a witness in this litigation : Achyutananda D . V. Jagannath Das (14).

however, other evidence on the point, and we shall engeneently prosest on assumption that at the data of the institution of the rent suit, Autosh had already attained majority and was misdescribed as a minor. It is indisputable that he had notice of the sait, because orders for the appointment of a guardian ad litem ara made only after notice to the alleged miane and the proposed guardiau. In such eirsum. stances, the principle of the desision in Ramachari v. Duraisam: Pillii (15) applie. In that ease, a defendant had been misdescribed as a minor and a guardian ad litem was appointed, although he had in fact attained majority. A suit subsequently instituted by him to set saids the deeres was dismissed, on the ground that he was bound by the desree in the former suit, inasmush, though aware of the suit and the execution proseedings which resulted in the sale, he still allowed his elder brother to conduct the defence and the proceedings on his behalf as guardian for the suit. This conclusion is manifestly well founded on reason and is supported by the desisions in Ganga Ram v. Mihin Lul (16), Tanguturi Jaganna lham v. Seshagiri Rao (17), Enuga Suntarama Reidi v. Bermada Pattabhiramireddi (18) and Net Lill Saho) v. Sheikh Kareem Buz (19). We need not consider the effect of the institution of a suit by a person as the next friend of a plaintiff who is described as a minor, but is really a major. Upon that point, the Courts have been divided in opinion Taqui Jan v. Obardulla (20) and Shanmuga Ohstty v. Narayana Aiyar (21) favour a liberal view and sanstion the nesssary amendments to validate the sail; Sheorania v. Bharat Singh (22) and Saranna v. Seshayya (23) adopt, on the other hand, a stricter view. In the ease before us, there is abundant evidence that Asutosh was aware of the frent-suit and of the execution proceedings consequent on the decree made therein. He never took steps to challenge the propriety of the decree up to the time of his death, which took place in 1915. In our judgment, the decree made against him was not invalidated by the circumstance that he was misdescribed as a minor when he had in fact already attained his majority. The objection fails in so far as it is based on the ground that Asutosh was not properly before the Court in the rent sait.

As regards the objection in respect of Saratchandra Maiti, it has been urged that he was not properly represented in rent suit, as Ram Narain Maiti, certificated guardian, was appointed guardian for the suit, notwithstanding that, upon service of notice, he did not appear signify his asseptance of the office ad ltem. It may of guardian stated at the outset that the order. sheet in the rent-suit is not available at this distance of time, and it is not possible, from an inspection of the record, to assertain whether Ram Narain responded to the notice served upon him and whether the order for his appointment as guardian ad litem was made with his consent. The fact remains that the rent suit was desreed ez parte and there was no appearance on behalf of the defendants when the suit came up for final disposal on the 26th August 1913. This does not conclusively prove that there was no appearance on behalf of the defendants at an earlier stage. But let us assume that Ram Narain Maiti, the proposed guardain, did not appear in response to the notios : served' upon him and yet he was appointed guardian ad litem of his nephew and ward, Sarat Chandra Maiti. The appellants contend that such appointment was void and inoperative and that, consequently, Sharat Chandra Maiti must be considered not to have been represented at all at the trial. The validity of this contention must be tested with reference to the provisions the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 which was in force when the rent, suit was tried. Section 443 of the Code of 1882 provided as follows:

"Where the defendant to a suit is a minor, the Court, on being satisfied of the fact of his minority shall appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit for such minor, to put in the defence for such minor and generally to act on his behalf in the conduct of the case."

This was an exact reproduction of section 443 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1877. The following paragraph was added to section 443 of the Code of 1882 by sec. tion 53B of the Guardians and Wards

"Where an authority competent in this behalf has appointed or declared a guardian or guardians of the person or property, or both, of the minor, the Court shall appoint him, or one of them, as the case may be, to be the guardian for the suit under this section unless it considers, for reasons to be resorded by it, that some other person ought to be so appointed."

Section 443, in this enlarged form, bas now been reproduced as Order XXXII, rule 4. sub-rule (2) of the Civil Prosedure Code of 1908. In the Code of 1908, there is, in Order XXXII, rule 4, sub-rule (3), an additional provision to the effect that no person shall, without his consent, be appointed guardain for the suit. was no such provision in the Code of 1882; but it has been held in the ease of Jadow Mulji v. Ohhogan Raichand (24) which was followed in Vasules Morbhat Kale v. Krishnaji Ballal Gokhale (25), that the Civil Procedure Code did not empower a Court to appoint a person against his will to be a pext friend or or her guardain ad litem of a minor. Sir Michael Westropp, C. J., observed that the words "no other person fit and willing to act as guardain for the suit" in section 455 of the Code of 1877 (as amended section 73 of Act XII of 1879) indicated that the Legislature did not intend to force the office of guardain ad titem on any person in incitum. The same words were reproduced in section 456 of the Ocde of 1882 and now find a place in Order XXXII. rule 4, sub rule (4) of the Code of 1209. These remarks, however, were made with reference to the appointment of a person as guardain ad litem who was not a sertificated guardain. Consequently, the observations cannot be asumed to have been intended to apply to a person who had, on his own application, been appointed a guardian of the minor "by competent authority." Indeed, in the case of Issur Ohunder v. Nobo Kristo (26) it was ruled. on the authority of the decisions in Dhondiba v. Kusz (27) and Babai v. Maruti (28), that as no order for appointment of a guardian ad litem shall issue without the consent of the party appointed, if no relative or friend of the minor can be found who is willing to take out a certificate and appear as guardian, the Judge should appoint an officer of Court or some respectable nomines of the minor. This proceeds on the assumption that a person who, on his own application, hes been appointed guardian of the person or property of a minor will be willing to discharge his duties towards his ward by acceptance of the office of guardian for the suit. The position under the Oode of 1882, after its amendment in 1890, thus was that there was no specific prohibition against the appointment of a person as guardian for the suit without his consent though there were judicial desisions, such as those mentioned in Krishna Chan Ira Mandal [Narendra Chandra] v. Jogendra Narain Roy (29), which interpreted the Code to signify that a person who was not a certificated guardian should not be so appointed without his consent. Where the person proposed to be appoint. ed was a certificated guardian, the Court was bound to appoint him unless it considered, for reasons to be recorded, that some other person ought to be so appointed. If no such reasons transpired on the applieation made by the plaintiff or on a representation made by the proposed guardian, the normal course for the Court to follow would be to make the appointment. This view cannot be taken as regards the provisions of the Code of 1908, which contains an express provision in Order XXXII, rule 4, sub-rule (3) that no person shall without his consent be appointed guardian for the suit. This has been held to apply to all persons proposed to be appointed guardian ad litem whether they be or be not certificat. ed guardians of the minor; Annada Prasad v. Upendra Nath Dey (30), Second Appeal No. 2130 of 1919, decided by Mookerjee and Panton, JJ., on the 5th August 1921. In the absence of a provision in the Code of 1832 corresponding to Order XXXII, rule 4, sub-rule (3) of the Code of 1908, we may reasonably hold that where a certificated guardian was proposed for appointment as guardian ad litem, the Court might, unless he deelined the appointment, presume his consent. From this point of view Sarat deemed to have been Chandra must be represented by his certificated guardian as guardian ad litem in the rent suit. This is clearly not a case like that of Tekait Krishna Prasad v. Moti Chand (31) where proceedings were taken in Court without notice to any one representing the minor. The decision in Narsing Narain v. Jahi Mistry (32) also is distinguishable. There the mother of the infant was proposed for appointment as guardian ad litem of her infant'son; she did not respond to the notice served upon her and yet the Court proceeded to appoint her, although the father was the certificated guardian : see also Rughubar Dyal Sahu v. Bhikya Lal (33) and Beni Prasad v. Laija Ram (34). The objection against the decree in the rent-suit thus fails in so far as it is based on the ground that Sarat Chandra was not properly represented before the Court,

As regards the objection in respect of Bimala, there are no materials on the record to show whether she was in joint enjoyment of the interest of her husband in the leasehold property. The tenancy stood, as we have seen, in the name of Tara Prasad Maiti under the lease of the 10th November 1574. After his death in 1897, the landlord brought a suit for arrears of rent against the male members of the family, namely, the two sons of Tara Prasad and his two surviving brothers Ram Narain and Luchmi Narain: Khetter Mohan Pal v. Fran Kristo (35). In such circumstances, the vital the tenure was completely is, whether represented by the defendants record. Upon that aspect of the case, it is plain that the appellants have no substantial grievance. This is clearly a case where the doetrine of representation, recognised in Nitayi Behari v. Hari Govinda Saha (36), Gagan Sheikh v. Abejan Khatun (37), Profulla Kumar Sen v. Salimullah Bahadur (38) and Banbihari v. Khetra Pal Singh (39) may be invoked. If we examine the constitution of the rent-suit, we find that Ram Narain and Luchmi Narain, the two brothers of Tara Prasad, were joined as defendants. Ram Narain was described as the certificated guardian of Asutosh and Sarat. None of them contested the slaim. The interest of Ram Naraio as a co-sharer of the tenancy was identical with that of his nephews. The evidence shows that the defendants were aware of the suit, the decree and the execution proceedings. They did not contest the claim, because there was no defence available. Although many years have elapsed since the decree was made and the sale was held, no endeavour has ever been made to re open the proceedings : Ganpat Lal v. Bindbasini Prashad Narayan Singh (40); and in the present litigation it has not even been hinted that the arrears elaimed in the rent suit were not due in fact, or that the decree was erroneous other wise unjust in any particular. sush eireamstatess, we should look, not so much to the outward form of the p'oesedings in the suit as to the substantial justice of the case, as was done by the Judicial Committee in Hari Saran Moitra v. Bhubanes wari Debi (41) where reference is made to the decision of the Judicial Com.

Chunder Deb (43). Tested from this point of view, there is no foundation for the argument that the tenancy was not adequately represented in the rent-suit and that the decree made therein did not operate as a rent decree. The second ground urged by the appellants cannot, consequently, be maintained.

As regards the third point, it has been urged that the tenancies set up by the second set of defendants were real and rot fictitions as held by the Subordinate Judge. The pedigree set out above shows that defendant No. 7 is the sister of defendant No. 3, defendants Nos. 8 and 9 are the wives of defendant No. 2 and defendant No. 10 is the wife of defendant No. 1. These defendants allege that they are tenants under their relations, and that the tenancies were created in their favour shortly after the settlement was obtained from the Zemindar. Defendants Nos. 11 and 12 elaim to hold usufructuary mortgages executed in their favour on the 5th July 1902 by defendant No. 10 and defendant No. 8 respectively. The Schordi. nate Judge has held that the alleged tenancies had no real existence and were created by the tenure holders in favour of the female members of their family with a view keep down the amount of cesses leviable on the assets as also to save a fragment in event of an execution sale. tenancies are mentioned in a Road Cess return submitted by Tara Prasad Maiti on the 24th June, 1875 and this may lend some support to the first bypothesis just mentioned. The eircomstances that the tenancies were all in favour of the ladies of the family and that the rents were unusually small in comparison with the rent payable to the Zemindar are undoubtedly grounds for suspicion. But as was said by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh (44) the decision must rest. not upon suspision but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. The Subordinate Judge has kept this principle in mind and has earefully traced the history these tenancies. of each of He bas shown that there is no satisfactory evidense of possession by the alleged lessess: This, indeed, was the erusial test, and it is significant that none of the female defendants has ventured to give evidence in support of her claim, while both Ram Narayan and Lakehi Narayan have kept away from the witness box, although they are the only persons who sould have been expected to give valuable evidence from personal knowledge, as to the creation and enjoyment of these tenancies. Nor have the account-books been produced to show that the cultivation was carried on by tenants settled on the land by the ladies and that the ladies themselves received the profits. It is not necessary to review in detail the evidence relating to each of there tenancies, which has been commented upon minutely by Counsel on both sides and has been carefully scrutinised by us. It is sufficient to state that our attention has not been drawn to any material misstatement of the effect of the evidence as set out in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. We hold, accordingly, in concurrence with the Subordinate Judge, that tenancies in the names of the ladies were fictitious and that they were never in possession as tenants under the tenureholders. The third ground, consequently; fails like the first and the second.

Finally, a question has been raised as to the identity of the lands in suit with the lands comprised in the lease of the 10th November 1:74 and the sale certificate of the 18th February, 1904. This question was raised in the eleventh issue in the Court below. The Subordinate Judge states in his judgment with reference to that issae that 'the disputed lands are admittedly included in the tenure and so they are included in the sale certificate." The appellants have, however, contended that this statement must have been made by the Subordinate Judge under a misappre. hension and that no such admission was made before him. But this allegation is an unproved assertion which we are not prepared to accept. In the case of Damodar Narayan v. Dalglish (45) it appeared from the judgment of the Sabordinate Judge that at the trial before him it admitted with regard to some of the lands in suit that those lands were the private lands of the proprietor; the case proceeded before the Subordinate Judge and was dealt with by him on the footing of that admission. On appeal, this Court went behind the admission. Sir Arthur Wilson observed that the High Court was in error in going behind the admission and reopening the question whether the smaller area was the private land of the propristor. Again, in Nellavadiou v. Subra. mania Pillai (46) Mr. Justice Sadasiva Iyer observed that a statement in a judgment as to an admission made before the Court of first instance should not be doubted lightly by the Appellate Court, specially in the absence of an affidavit by the Vakil who appeared in the Court of first instance. It is plain that in eases of this character where a litigant feels aggrieved by the statement in a judgment that an admission has been made, the most convenient and satisfactory course to follow, wherever practicable, is to apply to the Judge without delay and ask for restification or review of the judgment. This course was not pursued in the case before us, nor is the proof of the allegation that the Trial Judge was under a misapprehension. We mast, consequently, hold that the appellants cannot be permitted to re-open the question in this Court. But we may add that we heard the appellants, upon the merits, on this part of the ease, and we did not feel at all impressed that there was any substance in the contention that the lands in suit were not lands included in the lease and the sale certificate.

The result is, that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 17 Expl.—Fraud— Covenant not to engage in business—Contract in contravention of covenant—Concealment,

M., was employed by the defendant firm as a clerk under an agreement one of the conditions of which was that he would not engage in any business of his own or join any other firm so long as he remained in the service of the defendant firm. Subsequently, he joined with S for the purpose of entering into certain transactions with the defendant firm, and induced the latter to enter into certain contracts with S and himself, without disclosing the fact of his being a party to the contracts to the defendant firm. In a suit upon the contracts:

Held, that the contracts were vitiated by fraud inasmuch as M. had induced the defendant firm to enter into the contracts by the active concealment of a fact of which he had knowledge and which he was bound to disclose to the defendant firm, viz., that he was entering into the contracts in contravention of the terms of his agreement with the defendant firm. [p 442, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 20th June 1918, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Delhi, dated the 21st May 1917.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellants. Mr. Des Raj Sawiney, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT:—Madan Mohan Lal, one of the plaintiffs in this suit, was a elerk of the defendant firm, Joti Pershad Beni Pershad; under a written agreement, one of the conditions of which ran as follows: swae dafter maskur ki aur kisi duere daftar ya kisi khas shakhs ya firm ya sati apna hoi kam nahin karunga.

The suit was by Sedh Mal and Madan Mohan Lai for recovery of damages for breach of sontract to deliver goods. The indente on which the suit was brought were given by Sedh Mal and Madan Mohan Lai to the defendant firm for the supply of six cases of piece goods. The defendants declined to give delivery because Madan Mohan Lai was their elerk at the dates of the indents, and when sued by the plaintiffs, pleaded that they had been induced to enter into the contract by fraud and that Madan Mohan Lal had represented that the purchasers of the goods were entire strangers.

The first Court gave a decree for damages, but on appeal the learned District Judge held that the contract was voidable by reason of frand.

The question for decision on second appeal is, whether, on the learned District Judge's findinge, fraud is established within the meaning of section 17 of the Indian Contract Act. The District Judge has found that the partnership, Sedh Mal and Madan Mohan Lal, was formed merely for the purpose of entering into the transactions in question, Sedh Mal living in Calintta, and also that the indents were written by Madan Mohan Lal in English and put up by him to Joti Pershad, defendant, for signature, and that Madan Mohan Lal consealed from the latter the fact that he was the Madan Mohan Lal entered in the indents.

view of the condition of service Ιa re produced above, which we interpret as meaning that, so long as Madan Mohan Lal remained in the defendants' service, he bound himself not to engage in any private business of his own, we hold with reference to the explanation in section 17 of the Indian Contract Act that it was the du'y of Madan Mohan Lal at the time when the indents were put up for signature to tell Joti Pershad that he was the Madan Mohan Lal of the indent, and to inform him also that, in eantravention of the other condition that he would not do the business of any other firm, he had entered into a partnership with Sedh Mal.

Thus, the ease clearly becomes one in which a party to a contract has induced another to enter into a contract by the active concealment of a fact, of which he, the former, had knowledge or belief. The District Judge's finding, therefore, that fraud had been practised upon Joti Pershad and that the contract was voidable by him, is fully justified.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Evidence Act (1 of 1872), ss. 95, 97-Construction of document-Ambiguity-Patent or latent-Extrinsic evidence-Court, duty of.

Where in a grant of land there is a repugnancy between the terms of the grant and any plan or diagram the general rule is that the former will prevail. But this is subject to the qualification that where the plan or boundary is a part and parcel of the description itself, the general rule ceases to apply. [p. 444, col. 1.]

The principle that when an instrument contains an ambiguity, evidence of user under it may be given in order to show the sense in which the parties used the language employed, applies to a modern as well as to an ancient instrument, and where the ambiguity is patent as well as where it is latent. [p. 445, col. 1.]

Where a deed of conveyance of a house contained an ambiguity, in respect of the description of the property conveyed of such a nature that one portion of the description referred to the entire house and another portion referred only to a portion of the house, and both read together did not apply correctly either to the whole house or to a portion of it:

Held, that the case was covered by the provisions of section 97 of the Evidence Act and that extrinsic evidence was admissible for the purpose of solving the question whether by the description of the property taken as a whole the intention was to convey the house in its entirety or only a portion of it. JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Abdul Ghani, elaimed title to a 7-annas share in a block of houses partly delineated in pink and partly in green colour on the plan Q attached to the decree of the Court of first instance. He admitted the defendants' title to the remaining nineannas in the same properties. The relief prayed for was a partition of the houses commensurate to the shares stated above. The result was that the parties went to trial on a single issue concerning the plaintiff's title in respect of the portions marked green on the plan Q.

wholly negatived by the Court of first instance. Some success, however, attended his appeal to the lower Appellate Court. The decree of the last mentioned Court fixes the eastern boundary of the small houses at a line which is drawn within the parcel coloured green and described by the letter J'-J." This modification of the decree of the Trial Court is acquiesced in by the defendants, but the plaintiff being aggrieved by the rest of the decree of the lower Appellate Court has some to this Court in second appeal.

The title to these houses in their entirely originally vested in one Khurshedi Khanam. Both the parties to the litigation derive their respective interests in the properties in suit from her. The plaintiff traces his title back to Khurshedi Khanam through one Fida Hasain in whose fayour the lady executed a sale-deed on January 9th, 1907, (Erhibit B1).

There are six grounds specified in the memorandum of appeal to this Court on which the desision of the lower Appellate Court is shallenged, but in substance the principal question to be desided in this appeal is one of interpretation of the deed of sale dated the 9th January 1900. appear from what has already been stated that the only controversy now subsisting between the parties relates to the plaintiff's title to such parcels of structure and ground as are delineated in green colour on the plan, Exhibit Q, prepared by the Commissioner under directions of the Court of ent of bedeette won bne strateni terfi decree of that Court. The desision of this entroversy solely depends upon the answer to the question, - Was the portion shown in green colour conveyed by Khurshedi Khanam to Fide Hassin under the dead of January 9, 1900 P

The material portions of the deed in question may be reproduced here-"jo ki do gita makan puthta ek manzıla mas arasi mahduda tail mae kamra mas dukan..... mamluka wa maqbuea manmuqira...hai..... unhin dono gita makan maskur kobadast Fida Husain ke bai aur farokht kia" (Whereas the two pacca and one storied houses together with land as per boundaries given below, including the room with the shep are owned and possessed by the executant. the same two houses are hereby sold to Fida Husain). The smaller bouse indicated in pink at the Exhibit Q has been dropped out of controversy and need no longer be sonsidered.

Extrinsic evidence, mainly consisting of the plan prepared by the Amin and his two reports dated the 20th April 1920 and 21st May 1920 was accepted by the Trial Court for the purpose of elucidating what was comprised within the limits fixed by in the deed. boundaries spesified the my opinion, This evidense WAS, ID rightly admitted. It falls within the rule stated by Lord Davey in the case of Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legga (1): "The ease must, therefore, be decided on a consideration of the contents of the dosuments themselves with such extrinsic evidence of surrounding eirsumstances as may be required to show in what manner the language of the document is related to existing facts," The rule so laid down was affirmed by the Privy Council in the case of Mauna Kuin v. Ma Shue La (2).

The result of the enquiry has been recorded by the learned Subordinate Judge in the following words:—"Exhibit B1 must, therefore, be read as confining the larger house sold to Fida Husain within the houndaries A D4 E. F.X6. X3X4 with the sahan marked Alpha (2) by the Court below." This finding as to what parcel or percels are included in the boundaries set out in the deed itself is a pure finding of fact and must, therefore, be accepted by me as conclusive. What then is the result of the finding? It is that, according to the description given by the definition of the boundaries, only a small portion and not the whole of the 'larger' house was conveyed to Fida Husain by the deed of 9th January 1900. This portion is delineated in pink solour at the bottom of the plan, Exhibit Q, and comprises only the shop and the kamra mentioned by the learned Subordinate Judge in the following quotation taken from his judgment:-"It was probably for this reason that the shop and the kamra were salled in Exhibit Bl the larger house, namely, for the reason that they formed part of the larger house." This is a reasoning which it is somewhat difficult to appreciate but, be that as it may, one thing is perfectly manifest -a discrepancy arises between the parcels as described in the body of the deed and the portion defined by the boundaries given at the foot of the deed. I have already quoted the language by which the property intended to be conveyed is described in the deed. The words "quia makan pukhta ek maneila mae kamra mae dukan" (The pucca one storied house including the room with the shop) may cover the whole house ineluding the shop and the kamra and not merely the latter as the description given by means of the boundaries does.

Theilgeneral rule is, that where in a grant of land there is a repugnancy between the terms of the grant and any plan or diagram the former will prevail. [Horne v. Struben (3).] It is, however, subject to the qualification that where the plan (or the boundary in this case) is a part and parcel of the description itself, the general rule ceases to apply. Now the words "q'ti makan pukhta mae kamra mae dukan (the pucca house including the kamra with the shop) do not, without the words "mahluda" sail" (as per boundaries given below) between the "qita makan pukhta" (the pucca bonse) and "mae kamra mae dukan" (including the kamra with the shop) convey a description sufficiently certain to amount unmistakable definition of the subject of the sale. The words 'mahduda sail' (as per boundaries given below) are, therefore, an essential past of the description and must be given effect to. In the case of Mellor Walmesley (4) Vaughan Williams observed as follows: - "I sannot, however, agree with the learned Judge that the present ease is one in which the undoubted rule that, when you have in the words of description a sufficiently certain definition of what is conveyed, inaccuracy of dimensions or of plans as delineated will not vitiate or affect that which is there sufficiently defined, applies, because the description itself is a description of a piece of land situate on the sea shore of certain dimensions which are set forth. Those dimensions, in my opinion, are not an addition to something which has already been certainly described, but are part and parcel of the description itself. The words are not an inaccurate statement of a quality of slready been certainly that which had described or defined, but are part and parcel of that description or definition. The dimensions in this case, to use the words appearing on page 247 of Sheppard's Touchstone, are an essential part of the description and not a sumulative description in a case in which there is, in the first place, a sufficient demonstration." Another certainty and general rule, is that "Where in a grant the description of the parcels is made up of more than one part and one part is true and the other false, then if the part which is true describes the subject with sufficient assuracy, the untrue part will be rejested as a falsa demonstratio and will not vitiate the grant." [Per Lord Atkinson in Watcham] v. Attorney General of the East Africa Protectorate (a) . In the present case, however, the description of the property given by the boundaries cannot be rejected as a false demonstration for two reasons-(1). The description in the body of the deed without the words "mahduda zail" (as per boundaries given below) is not sufficiently certain as has been already shown, and (2) those words, in my opinion, are clearly intended to operate by way of limitation of the words "qata ma'an rukhta" (the rucca house) of wider significance: Morrell v. Fisher (6), Taylor v. Farry (7). Both these general rules would zeem to fall within the spirit, if not the letter, of section 95 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872).

1872). What is then the legal position? That there is an ambiguity in the deed in respect of the description of the property conveyed is perfectly elear. "Qata mokan puklita ek manzila mae kamra mae dukan" (the pucca one storied house including the kamra with the shop) may apply to the whole of the larger house but "mohduda sais" (as per boundaries given below) applies only to a portion of the same house and the both read together do not apply correctly either to the whole house or to a portion of it. A case of latent ambiguity, therefore, arises. "There being two sorts of ambiguities of words, the one is ambiguity patens and the other latens. Patens is that which appeareth to be ambiguous upon the deed or instrument; latens is that which seemeth certain and without ambiguity, for anything that appeareth upon the deed or instrument, but there is some collateral matter out of the deed, that breedeth the ambiguity" (Bacon's Law Tracts, reg. page 23, 99). But whether the ambiguity is patent cr latent the present case seems to me to be wholly covered by the provisions of section 97 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, Extrinsis evidence was, therefore, rightly admitted and used for the purpose of solving the question whether by the description of the properly taken as a whole the intention was to sonvey the larger house in its entirety or only a portion of it. The principle that when an instrument contains an ambiguity evidence of user under it may be given in order to show the sense in which the parties need the language employed, applies to a mcdern as well as to an ancient instrument, and where the ambiguity is patent as well as where it is latent. Where, therefore, in a land-certificate issued by the Crown in 1899 there is a variance between the stated acreage and the area as described by physical boundaries (namely, one mile along a river to a width of a quarter of a mile therefrom), eviderce can te given of user inconsistent with the area intended being that included in the boundaries, so as to establish that that demonstratio." falsa description 18 8 [Watcham v. Attorney General of the East Africa Protectorate (5)!. Lord Sugden in the oft-quoted passage in Attorney General V. Drummond (8) said: "Tell me what you have done under such a deed and I will tell you what that deed means" In Waterpark v. Fennell (9) Lord Cranworth states the rule of law thus :- "It is certain that where parcels are described in old documents by words of a general pature, or of doubtful import, we may, indeed we must, recur to usage to show what they somprehend.

Reliance was, therefore, rightly placed by the lower Appellate Court upon the following facts established by extrinsic evidence in coming to the finding stready quoted:—

(1) Qadir Bakeb, the plaintiff's immediate predecessor in interest, did not in his mortgage suit claim the properties D1, D2, and a large part of D3 all coloured green on Exhibit Q.

(2) Khurshed Khanam, the original vendor, continued to live in the residential house D1, D2, and D3 even after the execution of the deed of January 9, 1900.

(3) The lady subsequently, after an intervalof about ten years, sold these portions to Ahmadi Khanam, defendant No. 2.

The finding of the lower Appellate Court is consequently not vitiated by any error of law or rule of procedure. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 211-Principal and agent-Liability of agent-Directions of principal not carried out.

Plaintiff appointed one N. as his agent for the sale of cylinders or tlasks of gas used for the manufacture of aerated waters. One of the terms of the agency was that N. was to return the empty flasks to the plaintiff. After the death of N. plaintiff sued his representatives for an account of the agency. It was found that a certain number of flasks had not been returned by N. and that they were still with customers to whom the gas had been sold:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the value of the flasks against the estate of N. [p. 417, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Labore, dated the 23rd April 1917, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, Labore, dated the 11th Ostober 1916.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellant. Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT .- The circumstances in which this eesond appeal has been preferred are as follows. Seth Framjee Shapurji Gandhi, the plaintiff appellant, was the agent at Lahore of the Panjab Sagar Works and Patent Carbonie Acid Company, Sujanpur, for the sale of carbonic acid gas used for the manufasture of Aerated Waters. appointed one Nathu Ram his sub-agent at Rawalpindi to sell sylinders or flasks of gas. The terms being that the plaintiff paid Nathu Ram Rs. 20 per mensem and defrayed the actual expenses of sale, while Nathu Ram remitted the proceeds of sales to the plaintiff and returned the empty flasks.

This arrangement, which is said to have continued without dispute for several years, terminated on the 19th May 1911, when Nathu Ram secured a direct agency from the company.

Nathu Ram rendered accounts to the plaintiff up to January 1911 which were accepted, and sent a further statement of accounts from January to May 1911 which were alleged by the plaintiff to be incomplete. Nathu Ram died in September 1913 and his only son Badri Das died six months later.

On the 6th Ostober 1915 the plaintiff sued Musammet Karm Devi, widow of Badri Das, as heir of Nathu Ram, for rendition of accounts of the sub-agency and recovery of such sum as might be found due to him on the accounts being taken. A preliminary decree was passed on the 13th March 1916 directing accounts to be taken, and no appeal was filed against it.

The Trial Court, ther, by order dated 22ud March 1916 appointed a Commissioner to examine the accounts and report the result. The Commissioner reported (a) that Rs. 308-1.9 were due by the sub-agency to the plaintiff, being outstandings due to the sub-agency from customers; (b) that 27 empty gas flasks had not been returned by the sub-agency and were of the value of Rs. 45 each, and (c) that sub-agency fees at Rs. 20 per mensem claimed by the defendant for the period 1st June 1911 and 30th November 1911 were not payable by the plaintiff.

The Commissioner recommended in regard to the flacks that the defendant should endeavour to recover them from the sustamers in whose hands they were said to be and should do so at the expense of the plaintiff, and that if they were not recovered the defendant should pay the plaintiff for them at the rate of Rs. 45 per flack.

The Subordinate Judge did not consider this proposal practical and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 208.1.9 plus Rs. 1,215 the price of the 27 flasks, Rs. 1,523.1.9 in all, leaving the parties to bear their own costs.

The defendant appealed. The District Judge affirmed all the findings of the First Court on facts, and upheld the decree for payment of Rs. 308.1.9. He found, however, some difficulty in dealing with the question of liability for the flacks, holding that both parties had been negligent, the plaintiff because he must have known that there was a deficiency and took no steps to recover the missing flacks until two years after the death of Nathu Ram, and the defendant because the sub-ageney, knowing in whose hands the missing flasks had been, made no effort to get them back. The learned District Judge considered, in the circumstances, that the question must be dealt with equitably, and was of opinion that the defendant's liability was concluded by her furnishing the plaintiff with a list of the persons to whom the flacks had been supplied and by her giving him such aid in recovering them as was in her power. He decided that the proper source was to set aside the deeres for the oost of the flasks and to leave the plaintiff to recover them from the persons said to be in possession of them, allowing him subsequently to sue the defendant again if he failed to resover them owing to the past negligence of the sub agency or to wrong information being given of their whereaboute.

The First Court's decree accordingly was reduced to one for Ro. 308 1.9, and incidentally (the plaintiff consenting) was altered from a personal decree against the defendant to one against the estate of the deceased Nathu Ram in her hands.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court asking for the decree of the First Court to be restored and attacking the lower Appellate Court's decision regarding the flasks as wrong in law and equity.

It seems to us that the appeal must succeed. In his original plaint the plaintiff asserted that the sub-agency was under contract to return empty flasks to him at Lahore. The defendant admitted that the flasks were to be returned, but to be returned direct to Sujanpur. The First Court held, in accordance with the report of the Commissioner, that 27 flasks had not been returned to Sujanpur and that the plaintiff had been sharged for them at the rate of Rs. 45 by the Company, his principal. This finding was not challenged in appeal by the defendant and the learned District Judge has recorded that the facts reported by the Commissioner were accepted as true by both parties. The defendant did not plead in the Trial Court that the flasks had been lost on assount of inaction and negligence by the plaintiff, or that nnsuccessful attempts had been made by the sub-agency to recover them. On the contrary she declared, Huntruly, that all had been returned. The defendant accepted the preliminary decree and the pleas now put forward on her behalf that the plaintiff's suit was long delayed are such as should have been raised in appeal against that decree.

Section 211 of the Contract Act lays down that an agent is bound to ecudact the business of the principal according to the directions of the principal, and that when the agent acts otherwise, if any loss be sustained, he must make it good to his principal.

In this case it is admitted that one of the directions of the principal, the plaintiff, was that empty flasks were to be returned and it is proved that 27 flasks were not returned by the sub agents, and that loss was sustained by the plaintiff of the sum of Re. 1,250.

We do not think that, in the present circumstances, when a decree for accounts to be taken has been passed with the object of adjusting finally the claims of the parties against each other, that of the plaintiff regarding the lost flacks is adequately met by a direction that he should go from Lahore to Rawalpindi, endeavour to resover the flasks for himself, and one again if he is unscessful.

We accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the First Court with the modification that the decree shall not be personal against Musammat Karm Devi. The plaintiff is granted a decree for Rs. 1,523-19 and his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court against the estate of the deceased Nathu Ram in the hands of Musammat Karm Devi. We maintain the order of the learned Subordinate Judge that in his Court parties shall bear their own costs.

Suit, delay in filing-Presumption.

Procrastination is the usual habit of litigants, and in a case where the parties are closely related there must be constant talk and hope of settlement with the interference of relations or neighbours, who would like to get credit if not money by taking sides. These are all circumstances which would lead to delay in filing a suit, so that in such a case no inference as to the weakness of the plaintiff's claim can be drawn from the fact that the suit is brought just within the period of limitation. [p. 451, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 12th September

Messre. Haider Husain, Wasi Hasan and Kalbe Abbas, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.-Musammat Ummesalma alias Aghai Begam, a Shia widow, was the original plaintiff who sued the beirs of her husband Amjad Husain and Abbas Husain who are his brothers for the recovery of her dower debt out of the property of her deceased hurband. Her suit was dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Ras Bareli on the finding of one issue that the plaintiff had relinquished her dower-debt in favour of her husband at the time of his death. The plaintiff died after her appeal was admitted by this Court and the appel. lants who are substituted in her place are her parents and second husband,

The story of relinquishment put forward by the defence was somewhat as follows:—
The mother of the plaintiff (in this judgment the plaintiff will mean the original plaintiff)
Musammat Umatul Askari alias Phulkhari was attending her son in law Akhtar Husain on the 8th of September 1914 while he had an attack of cholera. She was also mother's sister of Akhtar Husain. When she saw

Akhtar Husain was sinking she hurried from his house to her own, wailing at her impending loss. The two houses appear to be about a bundred yards apart. Musammat Koelen and Musammat Shahzadi (D. Ws.Ncs.11 and 13) accompanied her from Akhtar Husain's house to see that no harm may come to her while she was so distracted. On the way Saida Begam (D. W. No. 10) and ber son Aeghar Husain (D.W. No. 8) hearing the news came out of the house and followed ont of sympathy. The five persons arrived at the house of Musammat Phulkhari where the plaintiff was and the women went inside the women's apartment while Asghar Husain stood outside in the entrance of the room. The plaintiff hearing of the critical state of her husband expressed a desire to go and see him. The plaintiff was 12 years of age at the time and the wedding (nikah) had taken place two years carlier but the marriage had not been consummated and she had not gone to ber busband's bouse. (rukhsati had not taken place). Such a desire could not be given effect to according to the neual practice among the families of Saiyads to which the parties belong, so the mother considered it advisable to take the opinion of some male members of the family. It appears that the girl's father was absent from home. The mother desired that Nannhe and Iltafat Husain (D. We. Nos. 1 and 7) may be sent for and Saida Begam same out and told her son Asghar Husain to fetch the Nannhe and Iltafat men. When two Husain arrived the girl again expressed her desire to go and see her busbard and added that she wished to relinquish her dower in his presence. Nannhe expressed his opinion that a nikahi girl before her rukheati had taken place could not go to ber husband and suggested that the relinquishment may be made there at the time. Some witnesses add a touch of colour here that Nannhe first said that the nikah between the plaintiff and Akhtar Husain was invalid because they had sucked the milk of the same woman and that, therefore, no dower existed which need be relinquished. The woman thereupon reproved Namhe for alluding to this fact when the girl was in distress. Nannhe then suggested that the relinquishment may be made at the girl's house. The girl thereupon made the relinquichment using the terms proper to the ossasion that she and her God there and then relinquished the dower so that her busband may be freed from its burden in the presence of God and that her mother may convey this message to the dying hasband. Musammat Said-un-nisa (D. W. No. 14) was present at the time in the plaintiff's house, having gone there to condole with the plaintiff. The female witnesses who are alleged to be present in the house stated that after this relinquishment Phulkhari broke her own glass bangles and those of her daughter. Phulkhari after this returned to the house of Akhtar Husain accompanied by all the women and men mentioned above with the exception of her daughter and, at the death-bed of Akhtar Husain, informed him of the relinquishment by her daughter. On the way also she had eried out for general information that her daughter had relinquished her dower debt. One man, Mohammad Nabi, (D. W. No. 2) and six women, Khair-un-niss, Asmat un-nisa, Bani Bibi, Khairat Fatima Haidri Begam and Umat-ul-raza, (D. Ws. Nos. 15 to 20) seeing Phulkhari erying on the road as she passed by assempanied ber on her return to Akhtar Husain's house and there heard her communicating to her son in-law the fast of relinquishment of the dower-debt by her daughter. The female witnesses (D. Ws. Nos. 15 to 20) further stated that the plaintiff herself confirmed this fact of relinquishment when they went to house on a visit of condolence on the third day seremony of her husband's death. All the female witnesses examined on commission and not in presence of the Court.

The defence story is supported by a large number of witnesses, but it does not appear to us to be probable under the eireumstaness described by the witnesses. Musammat Phulkhari stated that she remained with her son in law for two days and two nights from the commencement of the attack of cholera until after his death. It is probable that she may not be telling the truth and may have paid several visits to her house to look after her children, one of whom was only a year old at the time. She has also told a falsehood when she represented that the plaintiff was lying ill with fever on that day. The plaintiff who was zamined during the preseding two days made no mention of any such illness. the same time, it does not appear probable that Musammat Phulkhari should leave the side of her nephew and son in law at the time when he was known to be sinking. This difficulty appears to have been appreciat. ed by the defence and so a suggestion was put forward that she went home in order to break the glass bangles on her daughter's arms. It is a sustom among all the Indian communities to break the glass bangles on the arms of a woman immediately after her hasband's death; but this is not done, as is proved out of the mouths of the defense witnesses themselves, before the husband has actually expired. In fact, such an act done while the husband is in a critical condition would be taken as a bad omen likely to hasten the death of the husband. Musammat Saida Bagam (D. W. No. 10) definitely stated that bangles are never broken before the death of a husband. This statement is definite enough and reference need not be given to the statements of other female witnesses on the subject. According to Nannhe, when he reached the plaintiff's house and was told of her intention to relinquish the dower, he told her that Akhtar Husain ecald not be regarded as her husband because the marriage had turned out to be invalid and there was, in consequence, no necessity to give up the claim for dower. Asghar Husain (D. W. No. 8) stated that on hearing this unkind remark of Naunbe the women in the house eried out, as they naturally would, that it was not the time to sall into question the validity of the marriage. Yet Musammat Saida Begam (D. W. No. 10), Musammat Koelen (D. W. No. 11), Musammat Shabzadi (D. W. No. 13) and Musammat Said-un-Nisa No. 14) make no mention of such an incident. Musammot Phulkhari was about 55 years of age at the time and was not so old that she could go out openly into the street weeping and wailing so as to attract the attention of the neighbours. It is admitted that she belonged to a class of Muhammadans among whom the parda is strictly observed.

It appears to be the practice among the Saiyade of the locality in which the parties reside for a wife or a widow to relinquish her dower debt. This practice, however, is not invariable as may be gathered from eartain instances of the payment of dower.

UMMBALMA U. AMJAD HUSAIN.

The defendants paid a portion of debt. their step mother's dower debt (doenment Exhibit 109). The plaintiff's witnesses have deposed to one suit being brought by a widow named Musammat Jwala Bibi. In the present case there is great likelihood of the pratice having been broken because the plaintiff had not associated with her husband and for two years after her marriage she was kept away from the society of her husband though of an age to go to her husband's house. She rightly expressed her feelings in the lower Court when she stated that though she felt a shock on hearing of her husband's death she bad no great affection for him. It is highly improbable that a girl in that state of feelings towards ber busband would, of her own motion, think of relinquishing her dower debt without any suggestion proceeding from her parents or other elderly members of her family. Another improbability is, that the girl is said to have relinquished her dower in the presence of the relations of her busband when, among Laiyad families to which the parties belong, a married girl whose rukhsati has not taken place does not appear or speak the in presence of her husband's relations. Most of the witnesses to the relinquishment were relations of the girl's husband before whom she would not appear or speak.

Most of the defence witnesses are closely related to the defendants. Nannhe's niese is married to the defendant Amjad Husain and Muhammad Nabi's niece to the defendant Abbas Husain. The niece of the witness Iltafat Husain is married to the witness Nannhe and his son worked as the defendants' attorney for the purposes of this suit in the lower Court. Witness Asghar Husain is a son of witness Saida whose nices is married to the defendant Amjad Husain. Musammat Koelen is mother. in law of the detendant Amjad Husain. Musammat Said-un-nisa is the wife of the witness Nannhe, Musammat nn nisa is wife of the witness Iltafat Husein and Musammat Khairat Fatima is mother in law of the defendant Abbas Husain. It was pointed out by the defendants-respondents' Counsel that Nannhe and Iltafat Husain were also related to the plaintiff but Nannhe's strong bias in favour of the defence in) the witness-box has been noted by the lower Court, and a son of Iltafat Husain has been running this case on behalf of the defendants. It is clear, therefore, that these men would favour the defendants and not the plaintiff. The principal witness for the defence, Nannhe, has been proved to be an unprineipled person. On the 21st of June 1917 he wrote to the plaintiff's father Ansar Husain recommending that he should sue the defendants at an early date on his daughter's behalf for the recovery of her dower debt. It is obvious that this would take the side of the party which paid him best, and that no reliance could be placed on his testimony. When it suits his purpose he has no hesitation in telling lies to defraud his ereditors. the present case he has stated that amount of his wife's dower was fixed Re. 125 while, during insolveney proceedings relating to his estate, he deposed on oath that his wife's dower was Rs. 70,000 and two gold mohurs and that he had gifted his entire property to her in satisfaction of the dower-debt (copy of statement Exhibit Several defence witnesses bave told falsehoods to serve the purpose of the defence. One Saiyad Haider Mehdi, a respeetable Pleader of the Allahabad High Court, deposed that he seted as the plaint. iff's Vakil at the time of her marriage with Akhtar Hueain. The lower Court has believed this witness. Nambe (D. W. No. 1) Mobammad Nabi (D. W. No. 2) and several defence witnesses deny the presence of Haider Mebdi at the time of the marriage. The defence witnesses have shown their readirees to make any falce statements to long as it would help the case of the defence. To give an instance, Musammat Saida Begam stated that she did not attend the marriage of the plaintiff with Akhtar Husain though she is a woman of the Saiyad family of the same village and related to the plaintiff's deseased husband. We believe that she made such a statement to avoid being questioned why she did not object to the marriage at the time when she alleges that she had known of the plaintiff and Akhtar Husain Laving sucked the milk of the same woman at one time. A perusal of the statements of the defence witnesses has left on our minds an impression of earetul tutoring wherein every contingency has been provided for. Under the wrong impression that the communication of her relinquishment to the woman's husband before death is necessary to validate the renunciation, a pathetic story is told of how Akhtar Husain at the point of death opened his eyes to listen to his mother. in-law's words by which he was relieved of the load of the dower-debt, how he wept tears of relief and expired in that happy endition. The female witnesses (D. We. Nos. 15 to 20) who heard of the relinquish. ment from Musammat Phulkhari go further and depose to the ratification of that relingaishment by the plaintiff herself at the time of the third day seremony after death.

The suit was brought just within the period of limitation, Akhtar Hustain having died on the 8th of September 1914 and the suit having been filed on the 4th of August 1917. The learned Sabordinate Jadge was of opinion that this delay indicated that the plaintiff had fallen a pray to certain gamblers in litigation, meaning thereby her present husband and his father, Prograstination, however, is the usual habit of litigants, and in a case like the present, where the parties are closely related, there must be constant talk and hope of settlement with the interference of relations or neighbours like Nannhe who would like to get eredit, if not money, by taking sides, These are all circumstances which would lead to delay in filing a suit, so it cannot be urged that the fact of relinquishment can be the only possible inference of delay.

Whatever may be the value of the evidence produced on behalf of the plaintiff, we are of opinion that the defence evidence, though large in volume, is untrustworthy and hold that the alleged relinquishment of the dower debt by the plaintiff is not proved. We set aside the decree of the lower Court and remit the suit to it under Order XLI, rule 23, for trial of the remaining issues and for decision. Costs here and hitherto shall abide the result.

PERINGATI KUNHARANKUTTY-DEFENDANT-RESIGNATANT.

Adverse possession, nature of-Onus of proof.

In order to defeat a suit for possession of immove. able property by the plea of adverse possession, such possession must be adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent, to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor. But the onus of establishing adequacy, continuity and exclusiveness is upon the adverse possessor. When the holder of title proves that he, too, has been exercising during the currency of his title various acts of possession, then the quality of these acts, even although they might have failed to constitute adverse possession as against another, may be abundantly sufficient to destroy that adequacy and interrupt that exclusiveness and continuity which is demanded from any person challenging by possession the title which he holds, [p. 454, col, 2; p. 455, col. 1.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Madras, High Court, dated the 3rd December 1917, so far as it reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Tellisherry.

Mesers. De Gruyther, K. O., Kenworthy Brown and Palat, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Sir IV. Finlay, K. C., and Narasimham, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT. LORD SHAW, - This is an appeal from a decree, dated December 3, 1917, of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, which allowed in part an appeal from a decree, dated March 20, 1916, of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Tellisherry. The suit was brought by the present appellant to establish his title to thirty-four hills in the North Malabar District. The desree of the Subordinate Judge was in favour of the respondent with regard to ten of the hills, comprising, roughly stated, the north and north-east portion of the group of thirty-four. No question is raised in this appeal with regard to those ten bills, it being conceded that the defendant has a title thereto.

The still outstanding issue between the parties, however, is as to the remaining group of hills, twenty four in number, which may be said in general terms to form the conthern half of the entire group which was originally in suit and to be bounded on the south by the Peruvanna river. With regard to those twenty four bills, the decree of the Subordinate Judge was in favour of the plaintiff, while the judgment of the High Coort favoured the defendant. The plaintiff has appealed to this Board.

The appellant is the head or Karrayan of a Nayar Tarwad or family, in Malabar, called on the record the Kuthali Nayar. The defendant in the suit was, and the respondent in the present appeal became on his death, the head or Karnavan of a Moplah Tarwad in the same District. Shortly put, the question in the appeal is: Are the lands which are the subject of the appeal the property of the Kuthali, the appellant's family, or of the Moplab, the respondent's family?

Although the proceedings are voluminous, their Lordships desire to say at once that the appeal in their judgment must be settled by applying a well-known dostrine of law to the complex and somewhat contradictory mass of evidence as to the possession of these hills.

Both parties elaim them. Both parties elaim to have possessed them. And upon a balance of the evidence it has been found by the High Court that the respondent's rossession upon the whole outweighs that of the appellant, and that accordingly the respondent is entitled to prevail.

Upon this subject of possession much importance attaches to the nature of the property itself. It is forest land-apparently very little of it capable of, or at least, up to the present, subject to, cultivation -and growing here and there stretches of timber. It is quite clear that a property of this nature is far removed as a subject of definite possession from lands under conticuous and parament cultivation, compastly situated and capable of being remembered with identification as the lands held and occapied in articulate plots or under leases.

Their Lordships sympathizs with the difficulties which confronted the Courts below, as to the possession of the property under appeal, and they agree with what is apparently the view of both Courts that such possession has to be interpreted accord. ing to the fairest view of what the property itself was espable of in the way of possession and what, upon a broad view, would be considered an adequate assertion of title by sufficient compation. Along with this observation their Lordehips desire further to remark that they are not certain that they would have been prepared to reverse-although no definite opinion is here given-the conclusion reached by the High Court had the case before the Board been one merely of a question of the balance of evidence as among rival possessors. How nebulous the situation is may be gathered from these passages in the judgment of the High Court:

From 1871, the evidence as to possession consists mainly of certain leases either for entting trees or of the neufruet generally of the hills, for none of the parties seem to have directly exercised any definite acts of possession. Besides these leases, the evidence relates to what is called 'Punam' or fugitive cultivation. Punam cultivation is thus described in the Gazetteer of the Malabar District, Volume 1, paragraph 220: It is a most destructive form of cultivation, with ruinous effects upon forest growth. A patch of forest is cleared and burnt, trees too big to be burnt being girdled and left to die. A erop of hill rise, mixed with which dboll, millet and plantains are often grown, is raised, and the ground is then left fallow for some years, the cultivators, generally bill mer, moving on to another patch to repeat the process. As regards Punam cultivation, the evidence either side cannot be said to very satisfactory, and from the nature of the leases granted for entting trees acts of possession of that character would not themselves be regarded as conclusive evidense in support of the case of either party."

But when the judgment proceeds:

"But such is the nature of the evidence of possession adduced in the case, and we have to find by comparison of the evidence on both sides, judged in the light of probabilities, who in fact is shown to have been in possession of the property", their Lordships cannot apply the rule there laid down. For the Board is of opinion that in the competition of title to this ground the appellant definitely prevails, and that any dostrine of balance where original title was unknown, cannot apply to this case. Upon that subject the High Court expresses itself to the effect that,—

"It is not now possible, apart from these decrees (of 1864 and 1867), to some to any definite conclusion on the merits of the claim of either party so far as title is concerned."

It is thus necessary to consider these decrees, for one or other of them has been treated by the parties as the foundation of their respective titles.

In the year 1834 Kutti Poeker, head of the Moplah family, brought a suit for dispossession of one Kunbassan from the lands, on the ground that a lease of the same for three years from the year 1859 had expired. Kunhassan in defence stated, however, that the lands to which the suit referred were to a large extent over stated, and that in particular the hills, the proparty of which is now under appeal, were possessed by him under a right conferred, not by the Moplah, but by the Kathali family. In these circumstances, the then head of the Kuthalis, one Achutan alias Ashammadathil Nayar, was convened by a supplemental suit as defendant, at that time the head of the Kuthali family, but, for some reason not sufficiently explained, he did not defend the action nor take any steps to protect the Kuthali family interest

The suit proceeded for a period of about three years and was about to be brought to a close by decree, February 13, 1867, when another suit (Original Suit No. 11 of 1867) was raised by Nuchiledathil Krishnan alias Kuthali Chathoth Nayar. It is said that this suit was brought only by a reversioner to the Kuthali rights, and this is true, but it must be noted, first, what was the reason for that litigation, and seeind, what was the true seeps of the suit.

As to the reason, there can be no doubt. It is thus resited in the juigment of November 4, 1868:

Plaint recited that the two groups are the seam property of the Sthanam of Kuthali Nayar to which plaintiff is entitled to succeed on the death of first and third defendants; that first defendant, the present insumbent of the above Schanam, having allowed third defendant to manage the Sthanam and the latter by his extravaganes dissipated the Sthanam property, plaintiff has already filed Suits Nos. 11/ and 120 of 1863 to remove them from the management of the Sthanam property; that the raid defendants have, therefore, colladed with second defendant and refused to adduce any proof in Suit No. 25 of 1864 in support of the Sthanams' right to the thirty-four hills which the second defendant, has fraudulently included in the suit as portions of his two hills; that if first and third defendants, who possess only a life. interest in the Sthanam property, be allowed to ruin a portion of it by neglecting to defend the suit, a great injury will result to plaintiff's right of reversion, and that be, therefore, prays that a declaration protesting his right may be given under section 15 of the Civil Procedure Code."

If these facts, the substance of which was held to be proved, are assepted, it appears to be plain that the Courts were properly appealed to to prevent a decree being granted against the Kuthali family to its prejudice by reason of neglect amounting to malfeasance upon the part of its head.

Upon the second point, vis., the scope of the suit, there can be no question. Its object was to exclude inter alia the lands which are the subject of this appeal from falling within the scope of the desreain the suit of 1854, by reason of this, that they belonged to the Kuthalis, This was the true issue in the 1867 case, and the last important point in regard to it is that the suit was fought out, and fought out by the proper contradictore, Moplab family. The family was represented by the defendants Nos. 4 and 5, vie., Ibrayi and Amanath. Pocker, the head of the Moplahe, had just died, and Ibrayi and Amanath appeared in his stead and defended the 18;7 suit, maintaining, in opposition to the plaintiff's therein, that the lands in question were infast Moplah property.

In these eirsumstances, it appears to their Lordships not only that the suit of the later year, 1867, was one which definitely dealt with the question of property now under appeal, but that it would be unreasonable to endeavour to found rights under a decree of 1864 by ignoring the proceedings of 1867. In any view of the ease, it must be admitted that the later proceedings were at least of an interpretative character; they were directed to the avoidance of mistake as to the ambit or scope of the 1864 litigation, and to igrore them, and to treat the 1867 proceedings either as if they had never been brought or were of no avail is, in their Lordships' opinion, contrary to sound principle. The deseription of the suit itself in the judg. ment of 1867 makes it clear that,-

"This suit is brought to prosure a that two cherikkals deelaring deeree (groups) consisting of thirty four are not included within the boundaries two bills called of second defendant's Pakkath Villiyari for which he has brought a Suit No. 25 of 1864 against third defendant and others and establishing plaintiff's reversionary right to those thirty-four bills valued at Bs. 1,500."

Puting all the proceedings, therefore, together, the question that remains for the Board on title is to see what is the scope of the judgment in the 1867 proceedings which were conducted between these rival families and in fore contentiose.

Upon that subject the judgment in the Court of the Principal Sudder Amin of Tellieberry, November 4, 1868, is clear and is final. The learned Judge says that,-"Upon a consideration of there circum. stances I am of opinion that the decree No. 25 of 1864 is not binding upon the plaintiff."

"The next question," he adds, "is ore of boundaries."

The learned Judge discusses that, and, after referring to the report of a Commissioner who held a local investigation, he concludes,-

"Upon the above grounds I am of opinion that the middle stream in the Commissioner's plan represents the Alamb river mentioned in the defendant's documents and that the twenty four hills situated on the southern banks of that river constitute the Pannikottur declare that the plaintiff (i.e., the Kuthali family) is entitled to the reversion of the first twenty four hills which are proved to be the enm of Kubeli Sthanam and reject his elaim to the remaining bills (twenty five to thirty four),"

In the opinion of the Board it is thus definitely settled that the title to the twenty four hills, the property of which is under appeal, is in the Kutheli family.

Their Lordships thick that the High Court erred in not treating the case from this point of view. It is not a case of doubtful title, but of elear title. Had the High Court been of the opinion that the title of the appellant was clear, it is very probable that they would have reached the result on a review of the evidence and of the law about to be stated, that no contrary right to these properties has been. acquired by the Moplah family by reason of possession. The rule stated by this Board in Radhamoni Debs v. Collector of Khulna (1) seems to be very applicable to the present case. It is as followe:--

"It is necessary to remember that the onus is on the appellant, and that what she has to make out is possession adverse to the competitor. That persons deriving from her any right they had have done possession during of twelve years in controversy may be conceded evidenced by indeed and is dispute which erded in the Megistrate's order of 1885. But the possession required must be adequate in continuity, in publicity, and in extent, to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor. The appellant does not present a case of possession for the twelve years in dispute which has all or any of these qualities. The best attested cases of possession do not cover the whole period, and apply to small portions of the ground."

thinks that the learned The Board Temporary Subordinate Judge of Tellisherry approached the case correctly from this point of view, and so approaching it the Board, after full consideration, accepts his analysis of the evidence and is of opinion that possession upon the part of the respond. ent of these hills has not been adequate "in continuity, in publicity, and in extent" co

as to "show that it is possession adverse to the competitor." That competitor is the appellant, and the foundation of his title is the judgment of 1868 which has just been cited.

Their Lordships cannot part with the case without referring to, and following the dostrine of onus probands in such cases, as laid down by this Board in Secretary of State for Ohelikani India v. Ram 1 Rao (2). Standing a title in "A," the alleged adverse possession of 'B," must have all the qualities of adequasy, continuity and exclusiveness which should qualify such adverse possession. But the onus of establishing these things is upon the adverse possessor. Assordingly, when the holder of title proves, as in their Lordships' view he does with some fullness prove in the present case, that he, too, has been exero's. ing during the surrency of his title various acts of possession, then the quality of these acts, even although they might have failed to constitute adverse possession as against another, may be abundantly sufficient to destory that adequacy and interrupt that exclusiveness and continuity which is demand. ed from any person challenging by possession the title which be bolds.

Their Lordships will bumbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be allowed, the decree of the High Court set aside with easts, and the decree of the Subordinate Court restored. The respondent will pay the costs of the appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2-

Hindu Law-Alienations by widow-Reversioner, separate suit by-Cause of action.

The estate of a Hindu widow is not a life-estate. She is a proprietor of the estate with a right of alienation subject to certain qualifications. Each alienation by the widow in the exercise of that right must be judged by the circumstances in which it is made, [p. 457, col. 2.]

An alienation by a Hindu widow of her estate or a portion of the estate is not void ab initio but is only voidable if it transgresses the limitations imposed by the Hinda Law on the power of alienation, The death of the alienor does not necessarily render the alienation inoperative. The death of the alienor widow only enlarges the reversioner's right of barely challenging the alienation into a right of entering into possession of the property covered by the particular alienation. His right to challenge the validity of the alienation is, therefore, a permanent factor of his title to the property which developes from a bare spes successionis into a vested interest as an effect caused by the death of the widow. Further, as the validity or otherwise of each alienation depends upon the circumstances in which it is made and, as these circumstances vary with each alienation, it follows that the reversioner's right to challenge the validity of one alienation is different from his right of impeaching the validity of a separate and independent alienation though both the rights may arise out of the one and the same title. Again, he has a right of election; he may choose to challenge one alienation and assent to another, or he may challenge both or assent to both. He may exercise his right of election in regard to one alienation at one time and in regard to another alienation at another time. [p. 457, col. 2; p 459, col. 1.]

Therefore, a reversioner has a separate cause of action in respect of each alienation made by the widow, and a suit to recover property comprised in one alienation is not barred by Order II rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code by reason of a prior suit for the recovery of property comprised in another alienation. [p. 460, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 20th April 1921, confirming that of the Munsif, South Unao, dated the 23rd December 1920.

Mr. St. S. Thompson, for the Appellants. Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 5.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the decree of the Sabordinate Judge of Unao dated the 20th of April 1921. affirming the decree of the Munsif (South). Unao, dated the 23rd of December 1920, by which the plaintiffs appellants' suit was dismissed.

One Ishri Singh was the owner of some property, including the property in suit, which is a specific plot No. 2691, measuring 2 bighas and 3 biswas, situate in village Dih, Pargana Hadha, District Unac.

BAHADUR SINGH U. SULTAN BUSAIN KHAN,

Ishri Singh died sometime in 1905 and was succeeded by his widow, Musammat Gundah, who admittedly took a Hindu female's estate in the inheritance of her husband.

Musammat Gundah effected several alienations by way of sale in respect of her husband's property in favour of the defendantsrespondents' ancestor, Nawab Muzaffar Husain Khan. The chronology of the saledeeds is as follows:—

- 1. 31st October 1905.
- 2. 1st February 1903.
- 12th August 1907.
- 4. 2nd October 1907 (Exhibit 1.)
- 5. 16th August 1909.
- 6. 13th August 1910.

Musammat Gandah died about 8 years ago. The plaintiffs appellants and the defendant No. 2, Jawahir Singh, are admittedly the reversioners entitled to succeed to the inheritance of Ishri Singh on the death of his widow, Musammat Gundah.

On the 5th of August 1912 the appellants commerced an action in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Unao against Nawab Muzaffar Husain Khan by which they challenged the propriety of the alienations above-mentioned except the sale of the 2nd October 1907 which they omitted to include in their elaim. The lands covered by the five cales were specifically mentioned in paragraph 2 of the plaint of that suit and at the foot of the same plaint were set out the five sale-deeds with reference to their dates. The substantial relief prayed for was the possession of these of those lands, the remaining th being owned by Jawahir Singh who occupied the same position in the array of parties of that suit as he does in the present suit (Exhibit A.1). The elaim was decreed on the 26th of February 1913 (Exhibit 3).

On the 7th August 1920 the plaintiffs. appellants instituted the present suit, out of which this appeal arises, against the same Nawab Muzaffer Husain Khan who has since died and is now represented by his heirs, the respondents. By this suit the alienation of the 2nd October 1907 is challenged and possession is sought of $\frac{3}{4}$; the of the plot No. 2691 which is the only property conveyed by the sale deed of that date. The main plea set up in defence with which alone I am concerned in this appeal is the bar prescribed by Order II, rule 2. of the Code of Civil Precedure (Act V of 1908). It is founded on the previous litigation to which reference has already been made. The plea has been accepted by both the Courts below as effective and the plaintiffs' suit has consequently been dismissed; hence this second appeal.

The sole question for determination is, whether or not the present suit is barred by the provisions of Order II, rule 2. The answer to this question depends upon the answer to a further and single question, whether the cause of action of the present suit is the same as the cause of action of the previous suit?

Now, Order II provides rules the function of which is to regulate the frame of suit, and the object which the partisular rule 2 is intended to serve is stated by the Legislature itself in rule 1, which runs thus: "Every suit shall as far a practisable be framed so as to afford ground for final decision upon the subjects in dispute and to prevent further litigation conserning them." Therefore, the inquiry whether the bar prescribed by rule 2, sub rule (2), is applicable or not is necessarily influenced by the consideration of the obligation of complying with the avowed object of the Legislature. The principle under lying these provisions of law is the same as is expressed by the maxim, nemo debt bis vezari pro una et eadem causa. The same principle is equally the basis of the rule of res judicata supported by another maxim found. ed on public policy, Interest reipublica ut sit finis litium; Lockger v. Ferryman (1) Bearing there general principles in mind, I now proceed to examine what constitutes the cause of action in a suit of the nature of the present suit.

The first step in the process is to determine the exact and legal characteristics of the estate of a Hindu widow, in rallation to her powers of alienation and the right of reversioner arising therefrom. The estate of a Hindu widow is not a life estate and it is an error to suppose, as seems to have been done in this case, that all alienations effected by her automatically exhaust themselves by the determatically exhaust themselves by the determination of her life as would generally be the case in respect of transfers made by a life tenant. In the case of Goluckmoney Dabee v. Diggumber Day (2) Peel, Chief Justice, observed as follows:—

"It was contended by Mr. Theobold, that the estate of a Hindu widow, when she takes as heir, is a life estate There is always danger of error in proceedings upon rules or terms of one body of law, whilst applying a different law. If by life estate is meant an estate of the same nature, and involving the same consequences, as the life estate known to the English Law, then it is elear that the estate of a Hindu widow, taking as heir, is not that estate, and differs importantly from it." In the case of Sreemutty Jado. money Dabee v. Sarodaprosono Mookerjee (3), Colvile, C. J., said :- "The estate of a Hindu widow is very different from a mere life estate......." Sir Lawrence Peel says: "The estate though sometimes so expressed to be, is not an estate for life; when a widow alienates, she does so by virtue of her interest, not of a power, and she passes the absolute interest, which she could not do if she had but a lefe estate." In the same judgment the learned Chief Justice refers to the case of Cossinaut Byenck v. Harroosocndry Dosses (4) decided by the Privy Conneil, and says, that it "establishes that the estate of a Hindu widow is something higher than a life estate; that it entitles her to the possession of the property without restriction, and that she has a qualified power of disposition in it the limits of which it is difficult, if not impossible. exactly to define further than by saying that the propriety of any particular exereise of that power must depend on the eircumstances in which it is made, and must be consistent with the general prineiples of Hindu Law regarding such dispositions." In the above quotations the italies are mine. In the well-known case of Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly Vencata Narrainapah (5), Lord Justice Turner observed:-"It is olear that under the Hindu Law the widow, though she takes compared with any estate that passes under the English Law by inheritance, it is an anomalous estate. It is a qualified proprietorship and it is only by the principles of Hindu Law that the extent and nature of the qualification can be determined." These authorities, therefore, establish the following conclusions:—

(1) The estate of a Hindu widow is.

(2) She is a proprietor of the estate with a right of alienation subject to certain qualifications.

(3) Each alienation by the widow in the exercise of that right must be judged by the circumstances in which it is made.

These propositions have recently been affirmed by the Privy Council in two cases to which reference will be made hereafter, As a logical corollary to the above propositions follows the proposition that an alienation by a Hindu widow of the estate, or a portion of the estate, is not void ab initio but is only voidable if it transgresses the limitations imposed by the Hindu Law on the power of alienation. It further follows that the death of the alienor does not necessarily render the alienation icoperative. These logical deductions were affirmed by the Privy Council in the case of Modhu Sudan Singh v. Rooke (6). In delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in that case. Sir Richard Couch made the observation:- "In considering their effect it must be observed that the putni was not void; it was only voidable; the Raja might elect to assent to it and treat it as valid. Its validity depended upon the circum. stances in which it was made. The learned: Judges of the High Court appear to have fallen into the error of treating the putni as if it absolutely same to an end at the death of the widow,"

In the present ease, therefore, the death of Musammat Gundah ereated no alteration in the legal characteristics of the alienations, the validity of each of which depended upon the circumstances in which it was made. The only difference which her death made was the enlargement of.

the reversioner's right of barely challeng. ing the alienation into a right of entering into possession of the property envered by the particular alienation. His right to challenge the validity of the alienation is, therefore, a permanent factor of his title to the property which developes from a bare spes successionis into a vested interest as an effect caused by the death of the widow. Farther, as the validity or otherwise of each alienation depends upon the eirenm. stances in which it was made and, as these circumstances vary with each alienation, it follows that the reversioner's right to challange the validity of one alienation is different from his right of impeaching the validity of a separate and independent alienation though both the rights may arise out of the one and the same title. Again, be has a right of election; he may choose to challenge one alienation and ascent to another, or he may challenge both or assent to both. He may exercise his right of election in regard to one alienation at one time and in regard to another alienation at another time. Nothing is a surer indication of election than a challenge by suit. The following observations of Lord Davey in the case of Bicy Gopal Mu erji v. brishr.a Mahishi Debi (1) are, in my judgment, conclusive on the point:- A Hindu widow is not a tenant for life, but is owner of her busband's property subject to certain restrictions on alienation and subject to its devolving upon her husband's beirs upon her death. she may alienate it subject to certain conditions being semplied with. Her alienation is not, therefore, absolutely void, but it is prima facie voidable at the election of the reversionary heir. He may think fit to effirm it, or he may at his pleasure treat it as a nullity without the interevention of any Court, and he shows his election to do the latter by sommensing an action to recover possession of the property."

The next step is to determine what cause of action means. In the case of Cooke v. Gill (8), Brett, J., said:—
"'Oause of action' has been held from the earliest time to mean every fact which is material to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to succeed-every fact which the defendant would have a right to traverse." Lord Esher, M. R., in his judgment in the case of Read v. Brown (9) defined cause of action' in the following words:- "every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove, if traversed, in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court. It does not comprise every piece of evidence which is necessary to prove each fact, but every fact which is necessary to be proved." The Master of Rolls further explained the above defigition in his judgment in the case of Cohurn v. Colledge (10) and that explanation is apposite to the point under consideration. He said:- 'The words 'if traversed' were inserted to make it clear that the facts spoken of were those which the plaintiff must allege in his statement of claim, as it is now called, or his declara. tion, as it used to be called." This exposition of the term 'sause of action' makes it perfectly clear that it has no relation to defence. It primarily includes such material facts which the plaintiffs must allege to show his right to t e judgment of the Court in his favour. This is substantially the same as what Lord Watson said in the case of Chand Kour v. Partab Singh (11). He said: - Now the cause of action has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up by the defendant nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff, It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action; or, in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour. also Mahomed Riasat Ali v. BAHADUR SINGH &. SULTAN HUSAIN RHAN.

Ohetty (13) I have already shown that it is the right of the reversioner to challenge or to affirm an alienation made by the widow, and I have also shown that the validity or invalidity of a particular alienation depends upon the circumstances in which that aliena. tion was made. This right is not in any manner affected by the fast that the reversioner slaims a declaratory relief in the lifetime of the widow and a possessory relief after the death of the widow. It has been held that a judgment in the reversioner's suit for a declaration impeashing the validity of a particular alienation by the widow in her lifetime operates as res indicata in a subsequent suit for possession by him in respect of the property covered by the same alienation after the death of the widow. It follows that his right to impeach any particular alienation is the same in both cases and that is his cause of action with regard to that alienation. I have already said that the plaintiffs asserted their right to challenge the five alienations in the former suit. They have now asserted their right in respect of the sixth alienation. The eause of setion of the two suits therefore, quit different. Strietly speaking, they could have brought as many as there were alienations. But because they joined many causes of action in one suit, as they were permitted to do by Order II, rule 3, there is no rule of law which further compels them to have joined all their causes of action in the same suit.

Though the cause of action has no relation to the defence which may be set up by the defendant, yet it would be an error to suppose that it has no relation to the defendant and his acts preceding the suit. A cause of action is not a theoretical term entirely, picked up from text books and placed on a plaint. In cases of torts, the right of the plaintiff and its infringement by the defendant will generally make up the cause of action In Williams v. Morland (14), sited by Bowen, L. J., in Brunsden v. Humphrey (15) Littledate, J., said "Generally speaking, there must be a tempotal loss or damage accruing from the wrongful act of another, in order to entitle a party to maintain an action on the case. " Order VII, rule 5, (Act V of 1908), is based on the same principle. It is as follows :--"The plaint shall show that the defendant is or slaims to be interested in the subject. matter and that he is liable to be salled upon to answer the plaintiff's demand." Now, in the present case the defendants' connection with the land in suit is wholly different from his connection with the lands covered by the other sales both in point of time and the subject matter of the alienations. Their act of infringement of the plaintiffe' right quathe property in suit is different from their act or acts of infringement of the plaintiffs' right qua one or the other of the properties previously in suit. "The claim in respect of the personality was not a claim arising out of the cause of action, which existed in consequence of the defendants baving improperly turned the plaintiffs out of possession of Vicavaram. It was a distinct cause of action altogether, and did not arise at all out of the other. It is not like the cause of conversion of several thinge. There the act of conversion of the several things is one cause of action and you cannot bring an action for the conversion of one of the things, and a separate action for the conversion of another. The conversion of the whole is one elaim and one cause of action" Per Sir B. Peacock in Littapur Raja v. Suriya Row (16). So here one unlawful act of the defendants in regard to one property is different from another unlawful act of theirs in regard to another property. The following three cases decided by this Court are referred to in the jugdment of the lower Court, but they are not in son flist with any of them.

IERMANAND C. LAKHMICJAND,

I am, therefore, of opinion that each alienation gave rise to a separate and distinct cause of action and, consequently, the present suit is not barred by Order II, rule 2.

I allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and grant a decree to the appellants for possession of the of the plot in suit, but dismiss their elaim as to mesne profits before the institution of the suit. The appellants will get their costs throughout from the respondents Nos. I to 5 except as regards their elaim for mesne profits.

I may observe that though the judgment of the lower Appellate Court decides the suit on a preliminary point only and I have reversed that judgment, yet there remained no other point in the case which might have necessitated a remand. The only other point in the case was one of legal necessity which was decided adversely to the respondents by the Court of first instance but was not re opened by them in the lower Appellate Court.

A minor defendant who is not represented in a suit by a properly appointed guardian is not a party to the suit in the proper sense of the term, and the proceedings in the suit cannot bind him. Under Order IX, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code it is the defendant in the suit who may apply to set aside an exparte decree. A minor not represented by a competent guardian not being a defendant, cannot maintain such an application.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Applicant, Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT .- The applicant, Soth Parmanand, instituted against the non-applicant, Lakhmieband, and two others Suit, No. 100 of 1908 in the Court of the District Judges Seoni, and on the 25th January 1910 obtained a decree ex pirte against him. On the 17th February 1921 the non-applicant filed the present petition praying that the ex parte deeree be sat aside on the ground, among others, that he was a minor when the suit was instituted and no guardian for the suit had been appointed. He stated that he came to know of the decree against him only on the 21st January 1921 when he was served with a notice in excention proceedings. The applicant denied these allegations. The lower Court passed an order setting aside the ex parte decree. It found that the non-applicant was a minor when the suit was instituted and the decree passed and that he had no knowledge of the decree till the 21st January 1921. It held that as no guardian was appointed for him the decree so far as he was concerned was a nullity. The applicant applies for revision of the lower Court's order.

A minor defendant who is not represented in the suit by a properly appointed guardian is not a party to the suit in the proper sense of the term and the proceedings in the suit cannot bind him: Rashid-un-nisz v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (1). On the non-applicant's own allegations he was a minor at the date of the institution of the suit and was never a defendant in the suit. It is the defendant in the suit who may apply under Order IX, rule 13. First Schedule, Civil Procedure Code. The non-applicant, therefore, not being a defendant cannot make the

FARHAT ALI AND OTHERS-DEPUNDANTS
-RESPONDENTS.

Permissive possession does not rest barely on an expressed agreeement by means of which one party permits another to take possession of his property. It is a question of legal inference from the circumstances of a particular case. [p 463, col. 2; p. 464, col. 1.]

Where on partition being effected between coparceners each by mistake gets into possession of certain plots which have been allotted to the other, and such possession continues even after the mistake is discovered, each must be deemed to hold possession of the plots with equal consciousness that he is entitled to hold possession of them so long as the other party holds possession of his plots, in other words, each holds in lieu of what the other holds, and each is liable to restore the plots which he holds as soon as the other party delivers the plots which that party holds in lieu of the former, [p. 463, col. 2.] The possession held under such conditions is lacking in the permanent presence of the essential element animus domini in the conception of juristic possession. A person who has acquired possession precaris, is not deemed to have juristic possession. He is liable to be condemned to deliver up such possession to his opponent as soon as the latter is ready and willing to restore what he holds to the other. The possessory relation in such circumstances is imperfect. It is vitiated by the duty to restore and must, therefore, be deemed as equivalent to permissive possession. [p. 463, col. 2.]

In such a case, where the parties hold possession of the wrong plots in ignorance of the title of the other party, then both must be held to be labouring under a mistake of fact and when restoration of one party takes place to his original position he cannot recover from the other without surrendering the benefit which he derived under the mistaken act. This principle of equity is not limited only to cases of agreements, but extends even to acts committed under a common mistake of fact.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki, dated the 20th March 1920, confirming the decree of the Muncif of Ramsanehighat, dated the 27th November 1919 with a slight modification, which will be considered hereafter. The plaintiff is the appellant in this appeal as he was in the appeal before the Subordinate Judge.

A short redigree may be given at the outset of the judgment to elucidate the relationship in which the main parties to this litigation stand to each other.

Maqbul Ahmad, plaintiff-appellant. MAQBOL AHMAD C. PARHAT ALI.

The defendants Nos. 2 to 6 are transferees from the defendant No. 1, Farhat Ali. Bhagan, Angna and Haider were owners of the patti called Angon comprising a 1 anna 6 pies share in the village Kondra Sukhipur. Pargana Rudauli, District Bara Banki, in equal shares, that is, each owned 6 pies. In the year 189; an application was made to the Court of Revenue for partition amongst the ec-sharers of patti Angnu. Partition of arbitration. effected by means arbitrators prepared two sets of chittis, each set comprising three lots. One set was filed in the Revenue Court and the chitthis of the other set were given to Farhat Ali, Bagar Ali, and Zahid Ali, one eash. The chitthi, therefore, which was delivered to Farbat Ali, indisated the separate property to which he was entitled. Another chitthi similarly indicated the property which was allotted to Bigar Ali and the third chitti showed the property which the arbitrators had allotted to Zahid Ali. The other set of the lots which was filed by the arbitrators in Court was accepted by each of the three brothers. On the 25th August 1896 Angna's chitti was marked lot A, Zabid Ali's chitthi was marked lot B and Farhat Ali's chitthi was marked lot C. Each chitthi was made up of a large number of plots of land. The chitthi which the arbitrators delivered privately to the parties were signed by the arbitrators and in the chitthi so obtained by Zahid Ali there were mentioned, among a large number of other plots, plots Nos 1/1, 69, 102/1 and 260. In the chitthi which Farbat Ali, defendant No. 1, received from the arbitrators appear plots Nos. 25, 106-1, 242 and 254 1. In respect of these two sets of plots there was a discrepancy between the chitthi privately delivered to Farhat Aliand Zahid Aliand the chitthi which these two persons obtained from the Court on the 25th August 1896. Plots Nos. 1/1, 69, 102/1 and 26J were shown in Farhat Ali's chitthi while plots Nos. 25, 106/1. 242 and 254/1 were shown in the chitthi of Zahid Ali. There is no doubt, however, that Zabid Ali and Farhat Ali entered into the possession of the plots in assordance with the chitthi privately delivered to them by the arbitrators. It must also, in the circumstances of the case, be presumed that both Zahid Ali and Farhat Ali having obtained chitthis from the Court were conscious of the discrepancies existing between the two sets of the chitthis.

In 1911 proceedings were started for the correction of the village papers, the result of which was that those papers were altered in accordance with the Court chithis.

The plaintiff-appsllant brought this suit for possession of plots Nos. 1/1. 69, 102/1 and 260 on the ground that he had acquired title to these plots by prescription, alleging that he had been dispossessed of them in 19.5. In the alternative, he claimed posses. sion of plots Nos. 25, 106/1, 242 and 204/1. His claim was contested mainly by the defendants transferees Nos. 2 to 6. The suit was dismissed in its entirety by the Court of first instance but the lower Appellate Court has given the plaintiff a decree for plot No. 1/1. As regards the former set of the plots, the defense was that the plaintiff did not acquire title to those plots by continuous adverse possession for 12 years. As regards the eesond set of plots, the defence of the transferees of those plots was that their possession combined with the possession of their transferor, Farhat Ali, constituted adverse possession, which had run continuously for a period of 12 years as against the plaintiff and that they had. therefore, asquired title to those plots by prescription. This defence as regards both sets of the plots has prevailed except with regard to plot No. 1/1 as bas already been stated.

I will first deal with the question of plots Nos. 69,102/1 and 260. There can be no doubt that the title to these plots, as much as the title to the other set of plots, must be founded on the chitthis which were delivered to Zahid Ali and Farhat Ali by the Court on the 25th 1896 and with reference to those chitthis it is perfectly clear that the plaintiff has no title to these plots. His ease of acquisition of title by prescription has also, in my opinion, been rightly negatived by both the Courts below. Not only has plaintiff failed to prove continuous adverse possession for a period of 12 years over the plots in question as found by the lower Appellate Court but his possession. in the circumstances hereafter to be considered in detail, cannot be constituted to be adverse.

The question of bare possession by the plaintiff of the plots apart from the natura

and characteristics of it must be determined before taking into consideration the question of his right to recover the other set of plots. The learned Subordinate Judge on this question of possession has considered the oral evidence in support of it, as entirely detached from the documentary evidence bearing on the same point. In criticising the oral evidence be saye, "I agree with the learned Munsif that this evidence is not sufficient to prove adverse possession for 12 years." After recording this finding, he advorts to the consideration of the documentary evidence with reference to which his only comment is as follows:- 'The documentary evidence, if it has any value, relatee only to a period of 8 years." Toese 8 years cover the period between 1934-1911 and the evidence with regard to that period sonsists of khasras and khataunis (Exbibits 5 to 12). It is not disputed before me that these dosuments furnish sufficient proof of the plaintiff's possession over the plots in question during the period to which they relate and this I take it to be the result of the finding of the lower Appellate Court as well. Though the plaintiff failed to establish his continuous adverse possession for a full term of 12 years as required by law, it must be held, in agreement with the lower Appellate Court, that he held possession of these plots for a period of 8 years from 1904 to 1911.

Having determined the question of the plaintiff's possession over plots Nos. 69, 102/1 and 260, I now some to the consideration of his right to plots Nos. 25, 106/1, 242 and 254/1. It has already been shown that these plots had fallen within the chitthi which the plaintiff's father, Zahid Ali, obtained from the Court on the August 18:6. It follows that the plaintiff has a title to these plots and has a right to recover them unless the title has been extinguished by the operation of the law of limitation as pleaded by the defendants and given effect to by the Courts below. Exhibits 13 to 16 are copies of khasras and khataunis relating to those plots in respect of the years 1911 to 1915. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the plaintiff was in possession of the plots in question during that period of time. The defendants' ples, however, is that they had perfected adverse possession of these plots and consequently acquired title by prescription prior to the year 1911. Their case must be taken to be that their possession commenced from the year 1826 in virtue of the chitthi, which was delivered to Farhat Ali by the arbitrators. The question which I have to decide is, whether the possession of Farhat Ali and his transferees can be regarded, in the circumstances of this case, adverse to the plaintiff, who admittedly had title to these plots under the chitthi which his father Zahid Ali obtained from the Court.

There is, perhaps, no legal conseption more open to a variety of meaning than possession,' said Lord Justice Fry in Lyell v. Kennedy (1). The position of the parties in respect of the plots which they had obtained under the chittis privately delivered to them by the arbitrators in my opinion comes to this. Each party was conscious, in view of the proceedings in Court of the 25th August 1896, that he had no title to the plots but that each had possession of them with equal consciousness that he was entitled to hold possession of the plots in virtue of the private chittis so long as the other party held possession of his plots under the similar chitthis; in other words, each held in lieu of what the other held and each was liable to restore the plots which he held as soon as the other party delivered the plots which that party held in lieu of the former. The possession held under such conditions is lacking in the permanent presence of the essential element animus domini in the conception of juristic possession. According to Roman Law such a possession will only amount to detention. A person who has asquired possession precaris, is not deemed to have jurietie possession. He is liable to be condemned to deliver up such possession to his opponent as soon as the latter is ready and willing to restore what he holds to the other. The possessory relation such eireumstances is imperfect. It is vitiated by the duty to restore and must, therefore, be deemed as equivalent permissive possession. Permissive posses. sion does not rest barely on an expressed agreement by means of which one party permits another to take possession of his property. It is a question of legal inference from the circumstances of a particular case. (Sie Sohm's Institutes of Roman Liw by Ladlie, Second Edition, pages 354 and 355). This characteristic of possession is not limited to Roman Law but is equally a part of the English system of jurisprudence (See Adnam v. Eirl of Sandwich (2), Mr. Justice Markby, in delivering judgment in the ease of Bejoy Chunder Baneriee v. Kally Prosonno Mco'ser ee (3), observed as follows: - By adverse possession I understand to be meant possession by a person holding the land on his own behalf, or some person other than the true owner, the true owner having a right to immediate possession. If by this adverse possession the Statute is set running, and it continues to run for twelve years, then the title of the true owner is extinguished and the person in possession becomes the owner." The important words in this pronouncement are "the true owner having a right to immediate possession." In the present ease none of the parties had a right to the possession of the property which belonged to him under the Coart chitthi and whish was held by the other party under the private chitthi until the former was dispossessed by the latter. The maxim of law is Contra non valentem agere This maxim was nulla currit præscriptio. applied by the Privy Council to the case of Diwan Manuar Ali v. Annodapersad In delivering the judgment of Rai (4). the Privy Council in that case Sir James W. Colvile observed as follows: - 'In these eireumstances it seems to their Lordships that even if, technically, the lands now in question remained, pending the appeal, in Samdal, there was no necessity or duty lying upon the plaintiff to assert his rights Nasiruddin's beirs in those lands until were put into possession, or, at all events until the rights of the parties had been finally determined by the dismissal of the appeal,"

There is one more aspect of this question, which may now be considered. I have already held that the parties must be taken to have possessed the knowledge of the discrepancy in the two chitthis from the very beginning; but if it is possible to so construe the circumstances of the case as to hold that the parties were in ignorance of the discrepancy, then it would follow that both were labouring under a mistake of fact and when restoration of one party takes place to his original position he cannot resover from the other without surrendering the benefit which he derived under the mistaken act. This is a well-known principle of equity and is, in my opinion, perfectly applicable to the fact of this case. The principle is not limited only to eases of agreements, which are provided for by sections 64 and 65 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) but extends even to acts committed under a common mistake of fact (See Story's Equity Jurisprudence, section 141). The same principle underlies the provisions of section 86 of the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882). The defendant, Farhat Ali, and such of his transferees as are in possession of plots Nos. 25, 106/1, 242 and 254/1, became entitled to restore those plots to the plaintiff when he was dispossessed of plots Nos. 69, 102/1 and 260 in or about the year 1912. The plaintiff's suit is admittedly within limitation from that period.

The defendant No. 7, Bagar Ali, has lodged cross-objections in respect of plot No. 1/1. This plot, as already shown, is not in the Court chitthi of the plaintiff's father but is in the chitthi of the defendants' father Apgnu. The plaintiff, therefore, has no title to it and I have already held that no question of adverse possession does arise in this case as amongst these persons. As I am going to award a decree to the plaintiff for the plots which his father obtained under the Court chitthi, it is obvious that be must surrender the posses. sion of plot No. 1/1 which belong to him but belongs to the defendant Nc. 7.

I allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and grant a decree to the plaintiff for possession of plots Nos. 25 measuring 1 bigha 13 biswas, 106/1 measuring 1 bigha 1 biswas, 242/1 measuring 13 biswas, and 254/1 measuring 1 bigha 1 biswa, as detailed in paragraph 11 (b) of his plaint, and dismiss his suit with regard to plots Nos. 1/1, 69, 102/1, and 260. The plaintiffappellant will get his socts from the respondent No. 2 and the respondents Nos. 3 to 6 will get their costs from the plaintiff appellant in all Courts. The eross objections of the respondent No. 7 are allowed, as already indieated. He will get his costs from the plaintiff-appellant in this Court but will bear his costs in the lower Court.

Appeal allowed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAU No. 414 OF 1921. April 5, 1922.

Present:-Mr. Hallifax, A. J. C. BHOLARAM - DEFENDANT - APPELLANT

tersus TUKARAM-PLAINTIPF-BESPONDENT.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), ss. 192, 229 -Lambardar-Remuneration not fixed under s. 192 -Remuneration, any, whether allowable - Admission in First Court, whether affected by denial in Appellate Court.

Section 229 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act, II of 1917, continued the state of things existing under Act XVIII of 1881 in regard to the remuneration of lambardars and the fact that the Deputy Commissioner did not fix the remuneration of a lambardar of a village under section 192 of the Act could not disentitle such a lambardar to the remuneration.

A party cannot deny in appeal what he admitted

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Bhandara, in Civil Appeal No. 50 of 1921 decided on 4th May 1921.

Mr. D. T. Mangulmurti, for the Appellant. Mr. B. V. Pradhan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the lambardar of a village slaimed from a so sharer His remuneration as lambardar for the first three years during which the Land Revenue Act, 1917, was in force. He claimed a sum equal to 5 per cent, of the land: revenue of the village, at which rate this "hagq" had always been paid to him assording to the sixth of the rules framed by the Chief Commissioner under section 137 of the Land Revenue Ast, 1881. In the First Court the defendant never made even a distant suggestion of a denial that the lambardar was entitled to recover a sum equal to 5 per cent. of the land revenue from him as his remuneration. began by denying that the plaintiff was the lambardar during the years covered by the elaim, but eventually admitted it and expressly confined himself to the single plea that the plaintiff was not entitled to get any interest.

.(2). The beginning of the judgment of the First Court runs as follows: "The defendant's Pleader now admits that the plaintiff is entitled to Rs. 83.4.0 for three years for his remuneration as lambardar. only point pressed is that no interest can be elaimed by plaintiff and so elaim for Rs. 26-10-0 is denied out of Rs. 109-14-0." The learned Muneif went on to say that there was no law debarring the plaintiff from getting interest and he ought to get it by way of damages, as the defendant was shown by his own pleas to have been refusing to pay, and that the rate elaimed (2 per cent. per mensem) was not unreasonable.

(3). The defendant appealed against the decree on two grounds. The second ground, which was apparently regarded as subsidiary, was that interest should not have been allowed as no demand for payment had been made in writing, and to that extent the defendant susceeded and the decree was modified. The main ground was that the plaintiff was not entitled to get any remuneration at all as lambardar because the Deputy Commissioner had never fixed the remuneration for the lambardar of that village under section 192 of the Land Revenue Act, 1917.

(4). The learned District Judge held that, as the defendant had admitted in the First Court that the plaintiff was legally entitled to recover this money from him. he sould not deny it in appeal, and that, in any case, sestion 229 of Act II of 1917 continued the state of things existing under Act XVIII of 1881 in regard to the remuneration of lambardars. Against this the defendant has appealed. I consider it unnecessary to say more than that I YARUB KHAN C. EARMAN.

agree with the learned District Judge on both points. The appeal is dismissed and the defendant appellant is ordered to pay all the costs incurred in it.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Attock, at Campbelliur, dated the 11th March 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Pindigheb, District Attock, dated the 27th October 1920.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellant. Mr. B. D. Eureshi, for the Respondents, JUDGMENT -On the 14th of January 1919 one Shera sold 44 kanals 15 marlas of land, situate in Patti Said Khan, village Thalla, for Ra. 650 to Attar, son of Nawab. Karman, Amir and Faja, sons of Subs. On the 13th January 1920 Yakub Khan instituted a suit for possession of the land sold by pre emption. He alleged that he was entitled to pre-empt, firstly, as be was an owner in the village which the vendees were not; secondly, that he was an owner in Patti Said Khan which the vendees were not, and, thirdly, that he was entitled to a share in the shamilat which the vendees were not. He also challenged the correctness of the consideration stated in the deed, alleging that only Rs. 325 had been paid. The Trial Court framed the necessary issues, the first one being, "is the plaintiff's right of pre-emption superior to that of the defendants vendees?" The other issues related to the market. value, the amount paid, etc. It was found that Rs. 650 was the correct amount and that, of the verdess, Altar, son of Nawab, was not an owner in Patti Said Khan, while the other three were. It was also found that the other grounds alleged in the plaint as giving the plaintiff a superior right to pre empt, were not made out. The result was that the Trial Court granted the plaintiff a decree for postession of 4th of the land sold, namely, the fourth share of Attar on payment of Rs. 162 8.0 and dismissed the suit qua the rest of the land.

Against this decree the plaintiff preferred an appeal to the District Judge, alleging that the enit qua the the share of the land had been wrongly dismissed, inasmuch as the three vendees who owned land in Patti Said Khan, had associated with themselves Attar, son of Nawab, who was not a proprietor in that pitti Reliance was placed by the appellant on Achbru v. Labhu (1) and Maghi v. Narain (2). The learned District Judge held that the point raised was a new one, and that it could not be gone into in appeal. While discussing the anthorities relied on, the learned District Judge referred to Irangowda

v. Feshapa (3) and Zora Singh v. Jagta Singh (4), and dismissed the appeal.

Against this decision the plaintiff has preferred a second appeal to this Court through Mr. M. S. Bhagat, and I have heard Mr. B. D. Kureebi on behalf of the respondents.

In Achhru v. Labhu (1) it was held that if a purchaser having an equal right of pre-emption associates with himself in the purchase a person with rights inferior to those of the pre-emptor, he is not entitled to resist the claim of such pre emptor to enforce his rights even as to his share of the purchase. The facts in Maghi v. Narain (2) were very similar to those in the ease under consideration. There certain land was sold to five persons for R. 1,000. In the deed it was stated that the sale was to the first four vendees as regards four shares and to the fifth vendee as regards the remaining fifth share. for pre emption of the whole property was brought, the transaction being treated as indivisible and the vendor sought to lead parol evidence to show that the sale was a divisible one. It was held that persons, who, by elothing their transaction in a particular form, have induced a pre-emptor to come forward and claim pre emption in respect of the transaction as a whole, cannot be allowed to turn round thereafter and elaim to show that their real intention was something quite different. It was also held, following Achhru v. Labhu (1), that where the purchase money for a sale is paid by the various vendees in a lump sum without specification of the amounts paid by the various vendees, the transaction must be regarded as indvisible, though the shares to be taken by the various vendees may have been specified in the dead.

In the present case the dead of sale shows that 1th of the land was sold to Attar and the remaining 1ths to the other three vendees. The amount each of the vendees was to pay is not specified and it seems clear on the authorities cited that the transaction as evidenced by the deed of sale was clearly indivisible. Mr. Kurschi urged that this point had not been specifically raised in the Court below allowed to lead parol would have been evidence to show that the transaction was a divisible one and that Attar had to pay a specific amount of money out of the total ecusideration. As to the first question, it seems to me that it is not straining the point to hold that this question was raised in the plaint, although not specifically. The plaintiff definitely stated that he had a right to pre-empt which was superior to that of the vendees, inasmuch as he was an owner in Patti Said Khan while the vendees were not. He has saccessfully shown that one of the vendees is not an. The transaction being owner in that Patti. indivisible it would follow that the preemptor's right to possession would be superior to that of the vendees as a whole. Wnether or not the ven less could be allowed to lead parol evidence to show that the sale was in fact one of a two fold charaster is extremely doubtful, having regard to the provisions of section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act. In any event, I would adopt the principles enunciated in Maghi v. Narain (2) and hold that presons, who, by elothing their transaction in a particular form, have induced a pre-emptor to some forward and elaim pre emption in respect of the transaction as a whole, cannot be allowed to turn round thereafter and claim to show that their real intention was something quite different from that expressed in the sale-deed. The desisions referred to by the learned District Judge do not appear to me to be in point. In Zora Singh v. Jagta Singh (4) the plaintiff had sued for pre-emption, basing his right on his relationship to the vendor. After he had led a certain amount of evidence he made an application asking to be allowed to amend the plaint by adding that he was a land owner in the same Thulla while the vendee was not. The application was not specifically granted and it was held that as the plaint had not been amended and the vendees had had no opportunity of pleading to the amended plaint the suit could not be decreed on that ground. As stated above, even if the matter had been more specifically asserted it would not, in my opinion, have been open to the defendants vendees to assert that the transaction was not as the sale deed showed it to be. Irangouda v. Seshapa (3) is also not in point. In that ease the plaint,

as the absolute property of A and the matter was tried on the issue whether A was the absolute owner of the property. The First Court of Appeal found that although A was not an owner be was a permanent tenant. This was held to be a setting up of an entirely new case.

As, in my opinion, the venders could not be allowed to prove by evidence that the sale was in fact one of a two-fold character, the point is purely one of law, which could be decided without any further evidence, and the learned District Judge should, therefore, have decided it.

I accordingly accept this appeal with costs throughout and cetting aside the decree of the Courts below grant the plaintiff a decree for possession of the entire property in suit. The balance of the sale-money, namely, Rr. 487 & 0, must be deposited by the plaintiff by the 21st January 1922. Failing such payment, the decree will be null and void and the suit will stand dismissed.

JUDGMENT,-Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, minors, are the sons and defendant No. 3 is the widow of one Dalpat, deceased. Defendant No. 3 is the guardian of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The plaintiff's case is as follows:-Plaintiff No. 2, Ganbhat, in execution of a decree against Dalpat, got attached and sold two felds belonging to Dalpat and purchased them bimself. He then leased the fields to plaint. iff No. 1, Chataria, on the 25th May 1918. Chataria sowed the fields. When the crops were ready the defendants prevented him from removing them unless they were given balf of them. Obataria thereupon under duress gave half the crops and took receipt therefor. This suit is for the value of the crops so given. It is said that defendant No. 3 was throughout acting on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Defendant No. 3 did not appear or defend the case on behalf of the minor defendants Nos. 1 and 2. She appeared at a late stage of the ease and merely adopted the pleas raised by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 through their guardian, the Court Reader. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 pleaded that Chataria held the field as their lessee under a nimbatai contract and gave balf the crops to their mother in accordance with the terms of the contract. They denied that Chataria was a lesses of Ganbhat.

The defendants' pleas were not proved. The lower Courts decreed the claim against defendant No. 3 only. In this appeal the only question is, whether the plaintiffs' elaim for a decree against the estate of defendants Ncs. 1 and 2 on the ground that the estate got the benefit of the crops taken by defendant No. 3 in their names From Sonu allowed. should have been Vishram v. Dhondu Vishram (1) referred Zaruturi Gopalan v. Karuturi in Venkata Roghavulu (2) it would appear that if the mother seted in the interests of the minors' estate and added the crops to that estate the estate would be liable.

The lower Appellate Court states that there is no plea by the plaintiff that she really did so. Paragraphs 2 and 5 of the plaint sufficiently make out that the mother was acting on behalf and in the interest of the minors and that the minors have benefitted by her act. There is no sugges. tion in the defendants' pleas that the mother had comitted the trespass, if any, on her own behalf and for her own banefit and that the minors' estate benefitted thereby. There is no plea and no issue as regards the liability or nonliability of the minors' estate as distinguished from the liability or non-liability of the guardian. All the pleadings suggest, if anything, that the minors' estate got the benefit of the crops taken by the mother. As, however, minors' interests are concerned, I think it necessary to remand the case for a detailed examination of the parties and trial on the points whether the guardian was acting on behalf and in the interests of the minors, and whether the minors' estate benefitted by the crops taken by her. The findings of the lower Courts adverse to the defendants on issues Nos. 1 and 3 will stand. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside. Costs in this and the lower Courts will abide the result.

AND ANOTHER- DEPENDANTS.

Common carrier—Loss of goods—Loss measureable in sterling—Damages—Rate of exchange, applicable.

Where in a suit for damages against a common carrier for loss of goods by negligence, the loss caused is, in the first instance, measureable in sterling, judgment must be based upon such sterling sum converted into rupees, at the rate of exchange prevailing on the date of the judgment and not the rate prevailing at the idate of the loss. [p. 470, sol. 2.]

Mr. Langford James (with him Mr. S. M. Bose), for the Plaintiff.

Mr. A. K. Roy, for the Second Defendant. JUDGMENT .- In this case the question arises as to the proper principles upon which the damages have to be calculated. The action was tried before me a considerable time ago and I held the second defendant Company to be liable to the plaintiffs on the ground of negligenes and under the provisions of the Indian Carriers Act. The plaintiff Company are incorporated in England and the question arises with regard to '6 packages of tea out of a total cosignment of 343. The tea was being sarried by the defendant Company to Chittegong and the plain purpose of its carrying was that it might be shipped from Chittagong to England and sold there. I am relieved of having to consider any disputed fact as to whether there is or is not a market for tea at Chittagong. If there was it may well be that the measure of damages would have to be assersed accordingly to the rates prevailing in that market. But Mr. Roy for the defendants has relieved me of much unnecessary trouble by pointing out that, upon the facts in this ease, he has no interest save in establishing that the true way of calculating in rupees the damages which the plaintiff can recover is by taking the rate of exchange to-day, that is to say, prevailing at the date of judgment as distinct from, let us say, the rate prevailing at the date of the breach. The exact terms of the submission made by Mr. Roy I have already read out, but I will incorporate them for convenience in this judgment. Mr. Roy's submission was as follows:- "Without prejudice to any right of appeal upon law or otherwise, I am prepared to accept the figure of Rs. 6,339 3.0 as damager, should the following contention fail, namely, that the loss caused to the plaintiff being in the first instance measureable in sterling, judgment must be based upon such sterling sum converted into rupees at the rate of exchange prevailing on the date of the judgment." Mr. Langford James for the plaintiff Company says that the sum of Rs. 6,339-3 0 will content his elients. I am, therefore, relieved, from con. sidering any question as between the rate of exchange prevailing on 21st December 1915. being the date on which this ten wa's destroyed by fire and the rate prevailing one or two mertle afterwards, at the date, ranely, on which the tea would normally have arrived in England and been sold in the Erglish market. The question is confined to this -le the rate of exchange on the date of judgment applicable ?- In support of the propreition that the rate of excharge to cay is to be adopted, Mr. Roy has relied upon the fact that the plaintiff Company is incorporated in England. To my mind that is an entirely irrelevant eircumstance. The reference to English prices or the English market srices, if at all, entirely by reason of one or other of two facts, first, that the goods were going to be sold in England and, secondly, that there was no market at Chittagong or short of England upon which damages could be fairly assessed. That England is the place where the Company was ircorporated has no bearing whatscever. Mr. Roy has also relied upon a decision of my learned brother Mr. Justice Buckland given arrarently in November 1919 in a Suit No. 623 of 1919 tetween the Leutsche Asiatiche Bank and D. K. Fania & Co. The decision appears to have been given before the decisions to which I am about to refer and I must draw attention also to the fact that the case there was a case of debt and not of damages. It appears to have been a suit cn a Bill of Exchange and I do not understand that there is any written judgment in which the principles of the metter can be found disenseed.

Now, bearing in mind the question, which is simply whether or not the date of judgment is the date upon which the rate of exchange is for this purpose to be taken. I find that the matter is concluded by recent authority. There is the decision, in the first place, of Mr. Justice Roche in the case of Di Ferdinando v. Simon Smits & Co. (1) which was affirmed unanimously on this point by the Court of Appeal whose decision is reported in L. R. 1920, 3 K. B., page 409 [Di Ferdinando v. Simon Smits & Co. (2)]. In addition to this case there is the decision of Mr. Justice Bailbacke in Barry v. Van Den Hurk (3) and there is also the decision of Mr. Justice McCardie in the case of Lebeaupin v. Orispin (4). At one time, American authorities seem to have rendered it doubtful whether the rate of exchange on the date of judgment was not the true rate in the case of an action for debt as distinct from damages; but in my view, as Mr. Justice McCardie bas showr, that proposition is not now in accordance with the best opinion. question before me is, whether the rate prevailing on the date of judgment is the rate applicable in a suit for damager, and as to that the whole body of recent authority is against the contention of the defendant. The reasons given by Mr. Justice Bailhache are very convincing, that the plaintiff may sue immediately a breach takes place, that the damages are then orystalized, that the law will in general take no account of necessary delay in bringing the suit to a hearing. The inconvenierces of taking the rate as on the date of judgment are printed cut by Mr. Justice McCardie very foreibly. The desisions seem to be all one way except for the first desision of Mr. Justice Roote in the case of Kirsch & Co. v. Allen, Harding & Co. (5). That opinion was subsequently altered. I would only add, for myself, that a Court which can only give judgment in terms of one surrecey can never undertake to ensure payment of the exact equivalent at the time of payment of a given quantity of another surrency. The rate of exchange on the day of payment may be an ideal, but it is an impossible ideal: the rate at the time of judgment is not the ideal: it is not necessarily nearer to the rate at the time of payment than the rate of any other day. The contention put forward by the defendant Company most, I think, be overruled. Judgment must, therefore, be given for Rs. 6,339 3.0 in terms of the submission made by Mr. Roy. The plaintiff

(1) (1920) 2 K. B. 704. (2) (1920) 3 K. B. 409; 83 L. J. K. B. 1039, 26 Com. Cas 57; 36 T. L. R 797; (1920) W. N. 273.

(3) (1920) 2 K. B. 703; 89 L. J. K. B. 899; 123 L. T. 719; 64 S. J. 602; 36 T. L. R. 663.

JUDGMENT.

Courts, J.—This is a suit for declaration of the plaintiffs' title to, and for possession of, a considerable area of land which is described in the plaint. The plaintiffs are the owners of village Nasun Nawaz, which is usually known as Gamail; the defendant first party are proprietors of a village contiguous on the east of Gamail, named Hathiondha, and the land in dispute is on the boundary of the two villages.

The plaintiffs' ease is that in the year 1902 there was a partition by which this land fell to their share but that at the time of the Settlement it was wrongly recorded in the name of the defendants, and that, on the strength of this wrong record, the defendant first party dispossessed the plaintiffs and then settled the land with the defendants second party. The land is described partly by Settlement numbers and partly by Batwara numbers. The Survey numbers are 1414, 1415, 1416 and 1417, and the Batwara numbers are 1165 and 1168 to 1175. The land described by Batwara numbers lies principally to the east of the land described by Survey numbers and is coloured red in the map filed with the plaint, the land described by Survey numbers being coloured indigo.

The suit has been decreed only in respect of the land described by Survey numbers which is a small portion of the whole land and the plaintiffs have appealed in respect of the rest.

It appears that, at the time of the Cadastral Survey, there was a boundary dispute between the villages Gamail and Hathiondha which was decided on the 13th June 1901 by the Assistant Superintendent of Survey. By this desigion the bcundary Was dealared to be a black dotted line A C D E F GHIJK LM NOPQ R: this is the line which was adopted at the time of the Cadastral Survey, and it is this line which has been made the basis of the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge, and he has found that east of the line the plaintiffs bave failed to establish possession within 12 years, and that consequently their suit is barred by limitation.

The Assistant Settlement Officer's desision being so very largely the basis of the desision it has been made the first ground of attack by the learned Counsel for the appel: lants, who contends that it was passed without The jurisdiction. learned Subordinate Judge treats the decision as having the force of a Civil Court deeres, and the first point for consideration is, whether this is so or not. It is admitted that if the order is within jurisdiction it has the fores of a Civil Court deerse under section 41 of the Survey Act, but the learned Counsel for the appellants contends that the plaintiffs have not established that the Assistant Settlement Officer had jarisdiction. See. tion 41 of the Bengal Survey Act (Act V of 1875) says that the boundary is to be determined by the Collector assording to actual possession and 'the order of the Collector under this section shall, until it be reversed or modified by competent authority, have the force of an order of a Civil Court declaring the parties to be in dilw sensbroses ni bast ed to noissessed BALGOBIND FUMAR U. RAI BEBARAI LAL MITTER.

The person then who has jurisdiction under section 41 is the Collector, and "Collector" is defined in the Act as an Officer who is generally or specially vested with the powers of a Collector for the purpose of this Act; and "Deputy Collector" includes any Deputy Collector to whom the Collector or the Superintendent of Survey may delegate any of his functions under this Act.

Now, it appears from Notification No. 11574
L. R., dated the 7th December 1914, that a Revenue Officer appointed with the additional designation of Settlement Officer is vested with the powers of a Superintendent of Survey under the Bengal Survey Act, and it is not disputed that he has the powers of a Collector under section 41 of the Act. It is also admitted that he has power to delegate his functions under this section to an Assistant Settlement Officer; but what is contended is, that it has not been shown that in fact there was delegation in the present case.

The contention is, in my opinion, without force. The point is an entirely new one taken for the first time in appeal before The delegation must have been by an office order and if the objection had been taken at the trial stage it would have been a simple matter to produce the order, or, if the order were destroyed in the ordinary course, as is probable, to have examined witnesses. We are precluded from taking such evidence at the appellate stage and it would, in my opinion, be improper and unfair to remand the ease on this ground. The ordinary rule of law is that official acts are to be presumed to be legally performed and in the present ease the jurisdiction of the Assistant Settlement Officer not having been questioned in the Trial Court, it must be presumed that he acted within his jurisdiction in passing the order of the 13th June 1904. This being so, his order has the force of a Civil Court decree as to possession, so that in regard to all the land west of the boundary line laid down by him it was in possession of the plaintiffs on the 13th June 1904 and all the land east of that line was in the possession of the defendants. The present suit was filed on the 27th of Jane 1916, so that the plaintiffs were notilin presession of the land east! of the boundary line within 12 years of the filing of the suit, and their suit is barred by limitation in respect of this land unless they can establish that they had since that date dispossessed the defendants. Mr. Das, the learned Counsel for the appellants, frankly admits that he has not established this.

I may note here that in addition to the order of the Assistant Settlement Officer there is a mass of other evidence, both oral and documentary, to show that before the time of the decision of the boundary dispute and at that time, the plaintiffs and defendants were in possession of the land as therein defined. This evidence has been very earefully considered by learned Subordinate Judge but in view of my finding that the order of the Assistant Settlement Offiser has the effect of a Civil Court decree as to possession, it is unnecessary to do more than say that I fully agree with his finding that on this evidence the plaintiffs were clearly not in possession even before the date of that order.

The only other question then is, where the boundary dispute line, which is the same as the Cadastral Survey line, runs. assist us in this, we have four maps, the map attached to the plaint, the boundary dispute map, the Cadastral Survey map and a map prepared by a Commissioner for the purposes of this ease. The learned Subordinate Judge has disearded the Commissioner's map, because he says it started from a doubtful point. In this he appears to be correct, but so far as the line of the Cadastral Survey shown by him on the map is concerned, it corresponds very closely to the plaint map in accordance with which the decree has been passed, and both agree very closely with the Cadastral Survey map and the boundary dispute map. It is in accordance with the plaint map that the decree has been passed, and, accordingly to this, plots, Nos. 1414, 1415, 1416 and 1417 of the cadastral Survey have been decreed in favour of the plaintiffs. This is correct so far as it goes; but it is contended by the learned Counsel for the appellants that it does not go far enough inacmuch as it would appear from the Cadestral Survey map, the boundary dispute map, and the Commissioner's map, that there is a portion of land within Gamail which will include some portion of Batwara plots Nos. 1173, 1174 and 1175, in regard to which the plaintiffs' suit has failed.

Now, it appears from the order of the Assistant Settlement Officer in the boundary dispute that certain plots Nos. 83 to 87 in the map prepared by him are within Gamail, and on a comparison of this map with the plaint map, it would certainly appear that this contention has some force. Without, however, having the line re-laid it is impossible to definitely say whether this is so or not, and the difficulty is that, the question does not appear to have been considered in the Trial Court. It is suggested by Mr. Sen for the respondents that, even if we accepted the fact that this was so, it does not definitely settle the matter, because the order of the Assistant Settlement Officer is dated the 13th June 1904, whereas the sait was filed on the 27th June 1904 and there might have been dispossession within the fourteen days intervering between the 13th of Jane and the 27th of Jane 1904. I do not propose. at this stage, to express any opinion on this point, but I think that if it were to be found that any portion of the Batwara plots Nos. 1173, 1174 and 1175 was included within Gamail at the time of the boundary dispute, it would have a very considerable bearing on the sase so far as these lands are concerned. It is necessary, therefore, to have this matter considered.

In the result, then, the appeal is decreed to this extent only that the suit is remanded for a decision whether any, and, if so, what, part of the land enclosed by the letters M N O P Q R of the map prepared in the boundary dispute (Exhibit B1) is claimed in the plaint, and if so, whether the plaintiff is entitled to any, and what, relief in respect thereof. Costs will abide the result. Both parties will be entitled to adduce evidence in regard to that portion of the suit which has been

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—The question which has been referred to this Court by the Board of Revenue, as the Chief Revenue Anthority, is whether the Royal Calcutta Turf Club is liable to excess profits duty under the Excess Profits Duty Act of 1919. The case was stated at the instance of the Royal Calcutta Turf Club and it is as follows:—"In this case, an application has been made by the Secretary of the Royal Calcutta Turf Club, on behalf of the Club, to the Board of Revenue, as the Chief Revenue Authority, under section 51 (1) of the Indian Income Tax

CALCUTIA TURY CLUB D. SECRETARY OF STATE POR INDIA.

Act, 19 8, which has been made applicable to excess profits duty by section 15 of the Excess Profits Daty Act, 1919, with the modifications prescribed by rule 31 of the Excess Profits Duty Rules, 19.9, for a case to be stated on the question whether the Club is liable to excess profits duty. It appears from the Collector's record that the Club was assessed to income tax for the first time in 1918 and the Club's liability to income tax is rot disputed, but it is contended that its income does not include any profits of a business, within the meaning of the Excess Profits Duty Act. The grounds for this contention are set forth in a statement of case arnexed to the Club's application, which also sets forth the sources of the Clab's income.

"In the Board's opinion, the Club is liable to excess-prefits duty in respect of the following sources of income, in so far as the sums received under these heads are not paid by memters of the Club: -

"Entrance fees to the stand, paddosks and enclosures, or gate money.

"Entrance fees paid by owners of horses.

"Book-makers' license fees.

"Percentages on the totalisators.

"Percentages on sweeps on the Derty and St. Leger.

"The care appears to the Board to be parallel to that of the Carlisle and Silloth Goif Club v. Smith (1). That was a case in which a Golf Club admitted persons other than its members, without discrimination to play gelf on its ground on payment of certain fees, and it was held by the learned Judge who tried the ease in the first instance, as well as by the Court of Appeal, that the fees received from such vicitors were income of an adventure or concern in the nature of trade. Royal Calcutta Turf Club similarly admits the public to its stands, paddocks and enclosures, on race days, on payment of entrance fees, or gate money; allows persons, who are not members of the Club, to enter horses for the races which it conducts, on payment of entrance fees; allows bock-makers to carry on their calling in its enclosures on payment of lisense fees; allows persons, who are not members of the Club to make bets through its totalisators, and to buy tickets in the sweepstakes on the Derby and St. Leger races conducted by it. Whether the receipts from these sources yielded a profit, after deducting expenses properly chargeable against them, in the accounting period on which excess profits duty is leviable, is a question of fact for determination by the Collector.

"The fast that the members of the Club do not derive pecuniary profit from its or erations and that a part of its income is devoted to charity, do not, the Board thinks, affect its liability to excess-profits duty."

The opinion of the Board was that the Clab was liable to excess-profits daty in respect of the following sources of income in so far as the same received under these heads were not paid by the members of the Clab:

(i) Entrance fees to the stand, paddocks an l enclosures, or gate money.

(ii) Entrance feas paid by owners of horses.

(iii) Bock makers' license fees,

(iv) Percentages on the totalisators.

(v) Percentages on sweeps on the Derby and St. Legar.

It was stated by the learned Counsel for the Royal Calentte Turf Club, Mr. S. R. Dis, in opening the Reference, that he anticipated that the last head would not now be relied upon by the Crown and the learned Counsel who appeared as Junior Counsel for the Orown has just informed us that he is instrusted not to press that item. Consequent. ly, this Reference may be taken as if the 5th item was struck out. We have, therefore, to deal with the first four items which I have mentioned. It is to be noted that the Board stated that if it were decided that the Royal Calcutta Turf Club were liable to exsess profits duty there would still be the question whother the receipts from sources which I have yielded a profit after diducting expenses against them in properly chargeable the accounting period, on which expense. profits duty was leviable, and that that would be a question of fact for determination by the Therefore, the only question Collector. which this Court has now to determine is whether, on the facts of this case, the Royal Calcutta Turf Olub is liable to excess profits duty, if there be any excess profits in respect of the four heads. Whether any profits will be assessable to that duty will still remain a question which will have to be investigated by the Collector.

CALCUTTA TUBY CLUB &. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

The objects of the Club are set forth at length in the case which the Turf Club submitted and the material portions may be stated as follows:—

"The present large operations of the Club are the result of a gradual development. The proprietors of the Club are the present members, none of whom derive or ever have derived any pecuniary profit from the operations of the Club.

"The objects of the club are the control and encouragement of Racing, the conduct of the Calcutta Races, the encouragement of country bred horse breeding, the comfort and convenience of the members of the Club and the general public attending the races in Calcutta and subsidizing of up-country meetings."

After setting out the history of the Club and stating that, originally, there were Stewards of the rases distinct from the Turf Club Stewards, the case proceeds: "Gradually the Turf Club Stewards appear to have assumed control not only of the Club but also of the racing in Calcutta and gradually—how is not known—of up-country racemeetings." From 1880 there has been a continuous increase in the popularity of racing which produces more funds. Bookmakers have been licensed and totalisators provided, both of which form a source of revenue.

"Considerable amounts have been spent on improving the race course, building tanda and the stakes and contrihave been increased. In 1817 butions a lease was obtained from Government of the race course and enclosures at a nominal No income has been rental. retained beyond the sum considered advisable as a reserve to meet special expenditure in connection with racing. The club has always made considerable contributions to charities, but during the war the expenditure on racing was kept as low as possible and certain necessary renewals and improvements were held back, so that there might be as large a surplus as possible. Donations to war sharities were made to the amount of such purplus and the whole of this was given away in charity. The donations of those years do not form a correct guide to the Club's surplus in other years as ordinarily the expenditure would have been largely increased. A Club house has been held on lease siree 1891, but in the year 1919 it was found that the assommodation the office establishment was insufficient and in view of the rising value of Calcutta properties it was thought advisable to secure the Clab's position by purchase of premises in Russell Street. A very large olerical staff is employed by the Club in addition to the official staff and labour. As before stated, it has been the policy of the Club to spend its annual receipte, after suitable charitable payment, either on inereased stakes and contributions and in improvemente, all with a view to the benefit of racing generally. During the war the policy was to save as much as possible, and give the amount to sharities. Oertainly, since the year 1800, no member of the Club has ever received any preuniary benefit. No profits have ever been divided.' It was then submitted as follows: "It is impossible to say that a Club which has never sought to make a profit and of which the members have not derived and do not seek to derive any pecuniary benefit, carries on a business as described in the Act or at all. It is clear that its operations are not trade, commerce or manufacture, nor have they the remotest recemblance to any of these descriptions. It is understood that it has been proposed that it should be decided whether the Club carries on a business before undertaking the somewhat complicated problems of accountancy to ascertain what are the profits, if any, liable to excessprofits duty and accordingly this statement of the case is submitted for consideration with a view to show that the Olub is not liable to excess profits duty."

The question depends upon section 3 of the Excess Profits Daty Act which is as follows: This Act, shall apply to every business (other than the businesses specified in Schedule I) which is, during any part of the accounting period, either carried on in British India by any person, or owned or carried on in any place in India by a person ordinarily resident in British India." In order to see what is meant by the word business," reference must be made to section 2 of the Act. There we find that

"business" includes any trade, commerce or manufacture or any adventure or concern in the nature of trade, commerce or manufacture. The question which we have to decide is whether, on the facts of this case, and by reasons of the sums received by the Club from persons who are not members of the Club, in respect of the first four heads set out in the Reference, the Club can be said to be earrying on "business" within the meaning of section 2. On the one hand, the learnd Counsel Mr. S. R. Das and Mr. Pugh who appeared for the Royal Truf Club argued that the definition of "business" in section 2, was an exhaustive definition and that the word "includes" must be read as being equivalent to "means and includes." On the other hand, Mr. Sirear on behalf of the Crown argued that "includes" means "includes." Our attention was drawn to the fact that in other definitions which are to be found in section 2 the word "means" is used; for instance, "assounting period means the twelve months ending on, etc.; "Chief Revenue" authority meins the Board of Revenue; 'prescribed' means prescribed by rules. The learned Counsel for the Crown further argued that if the definition of "business" in rection 2 was intended to be exhaustive, then there would be no reason for the insertion in Schedale I of the Act, of the second and third instances which are given in the list of "excepted business" in that Schedule. In my judgment, it is not necessary for us to deside the question whether the definition of "business" in section 2 is exhaustive : and, indeed, the learned Counsel for the Crown did not invite us to decide that question, for he said that he was content to base his case upon the contention that the Royal Calcutta Turf Olub were carrying on either a trade or an adventure or concern in the nature of trade. In my judgment, the contention of the Crown is correct; consequently, it is not nessessary for us to deside whether the definition of the word "business" in sestion 2 is exhaustive or not.

The opinion of the Board of Revenue was based upon an English case Carlisle and Silloth Golf Oluby. Smith (1) which in the first instance was decided by Mr. Justice Hamilton and afterwards by the Court of Appeal, which upheld the judgment of Mr.

Justice Hamilton [Oarlisle and Silloth Golf Olub v. Smith (2)]. It is true that that is a desision upon the question whether the Golf Clab was liable to pay income tax, but the decision was to a large extent based upon the consideration of the question whether the Golf Club was earrying on "ousiness" within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Viet. c. 35), Schedule D of which specified "The daties to be charged in respect of any trade, manufacture, adventure concern in the nature of trade not entained in any other Sabedale of the Act." These words, it will be seen, bear a close resemblance to the words which we have to enstrae. The facts may be taken from the head-note: "The appellants, an ordinary members' Golf Club,' acquired land under a lease from a railway company and laid out a golf course and erected a Club house thereon. In addition to the members of the Club, who were entitled on payment of annual subscription to play on the links and to other privileges for the current year, a considerable number of visitors were per nitted to use the Club premises and to play on the links in assordance with a provision contained in the lease which required the Club to allow such visitors to play on payment of certain green fees. The total annual expenditure insurred by the Olub in maintaining the links in a proper endition for play exceeded the total amount of fees received from visitors. It was held by the Court of Appeal that the appellants were sarrying on an enterprise which was beyond the scope of the ordinary functions of the Club, and as to which separate accounts might bekept so as to ascertain whether there were any profits, and that any profits derived from the visitors' green fees were, therefore, taxable under Schedule D of the Income Tax Act."

The learned Master of Rolls in the coarse of the judgment said as follows: "It seems to me that there is a real difference between merceys received from members, and applied for the benefit of members and moneys received by the Club from strangers. I cannot draw any distinction between gate moneys, which might be, and I believe sometimes are, reseived by a Golf Club, and green moneys. In each ease the Club would be assessable."

Lord Justice Buckley said: "If it were necessary (which it is not) to decide whether the Club were earrying on an adventure or concern in the nature of trade," I am of opinion that they were. To determine this question it is not the character of the person who carries on but the character of the concern which is carried on that has to be regarded. If a land-owner laid down upon his land a golf course and charged fees for admission and user—if, that is to say, the links were a proprietary golf links carried on with a view to profit—there can be no question but that the proprietor would be assessable."

sessable." Lord Justice Kennedy said : "But upon the facts appearing in the case, it appears to me that this Club is really earrying on basiness of supplying to the public for reward a recreation ground fitted for the enjoyment of the game of golf, and that the receipts derived from this business are in the nature of profits and gains in respect of which it is liable to assessment for income tax." In my judgment on the facts of this case, the Royal Calcutta Turf Club is carrying on the business of supplying to the public for reward a ground fitted for the purpose of racing-some portion of the public use it for the purpose of racing their horses, namely, the owners of race horses; other members of the public use it for the purpose of earrying on their business, namely, the book makers who resort thereto under licenses which are issued to them for reward by the Royal Calcutta Turf Club; other members of the public use it for watching the races and for the purpose of betting on the races. these, according to the case presented to us, pay money to the Club either in respect of entrance fees at the gates or in respect of fees for the entries of horses in the rases or in respeet of licenses issued to book makers or in respect of the commission which is taken by the Club from the totalisators. In my judgment, upon the facts stated in the case submitted to the Court, it must be held that the Royal Calentia Turf Club is carrying on an "adventure or concern in the nature of trade" and concequently is carrying on a "business" within the meaning of section 3 of the Act, in respect of sums received under the first four heads mentioned in the ease, from persons other than members of the Club.

An argument was founded on an observation made by Hamilton, J., in the Trial Court Carlisle and Selloth Golf Olub v. Smith "Strangers," said the learned Judge, (1). are admitted to the Club house as well as to play upon the sourse and that seems to me a feature outside the ordinary scope of that which this Club is found to be, namely, an ordinary bona fide members' Olub." It was that the enterprises of the Turf Club, from which it derives a profit from public, were all within the scope and purpose of the Club, which is to encourage horse-racing. If that be so, the Turf Club differs all the more from an "ordinary bona fide members' Club" and the present case, therefore, is an a fortiori case.

It only remains for me to deal with one other point which was raised by the learned Counsel for the Olub, and that is that the members of the Olub have not and do not receive any profit out of the transactions which are carried on by the Club, and that the admitted surplus has been, and is, used for the purpose of subsreibing to charities.

It does not seem to me material what is the altimate destination of the surplus, if any, which the Royal Calentta Turf Club reseives in respect of these matters. The test is, whether the moneys are received by the Club from non-members of the Club and in exchange for something which is given by the Club and in respect of which profit is made.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the answer to this Reference should be that the Club is liable to excess profits duty, if upon the accounts being taken, there be any excess profits upon which the duty is leviable in respect of the following sources of income, in so far as the sums received under these heads are not paid by members of the Club; namely, (i) entrance fees to the stand, paddocks and enclosures, or gate money, (ii) Entrance fees paid by owners of horses, (iii) book makers' license fees, (iv) parcentage on the totalisators.

The Royal Calcutta Turf Olub must pay the costs of this Reference. We direct that a copy of our judgment be sent to the Board of Revenue.

Partnership-Accounts, partial-Dissolution.

In regard to suits by one partner against another for a partial account, the general rule as applied in India, is that if the account is sought in respect of a matter, which, though arising out of a partnership business, or connected with it does not involve the taking of general accounts, the Court will, as a rule give, the relief applied for. It will be for the Court to determine under what circumstances it will be equitable to order a partial account, having regard to the rights of the parties under the contract There is no rule of law now in force that a partial account can be ordered only under exceptional circumstances. [p 479, col, 2.]

Where a partner withholds the profits of a concern from a member of the firm, the partner excluded from the profits may bring a suit for an account and for his share of the profits, and such a suit cannot be dismissed for the reason that the plaintiff does not claim a dissolution. [p 480, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 7th February 1917, modifying the preliminary decree passed by the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lyallpur, on the 11th March 1916.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., and Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant. Bakhshi Tek Ohand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit for accounts. The following facts will disclose the nature of the suit:—

Three firms, namely (1) Kirpa Ram Brij Lal, plaintiffs (2), Rai Bahadur Harji Mal-Mela Ram, defendant No. 1, and (3) Seth Sukh Dev Bakhah, defendant No. 2, by a dated the 19th October 1913, agreed to a certain portion of the income of their respective ginning and press factories. As regards both the fac ories one document was executed, but it is apparent from the document that there were two separate agreements relating to the gipping factories and the press factories respectively. The agreement relating to the press pool was for three years commencing from the 20th October 1913 up to the 20th October 1916. It was provided, however, that any partner would be at liberty to dissolve it by giving notice on the 15th June of any year. The agreement as to the ginning factories was for two years commencing from the 14th October 1913 and ending on the 14th Ostober 1915 with liberty to dissolve it by giving notice on the 15th Jane 1914. On the 15th Jane 1914 the plaintiff factory gave notice dissolving the ginning pool expressly stating therein that the press pool would continue. The plaintiff states that the press pool continued according to the agreement, but the defendant No. 1 by his conduct put an end to it on the 15th June 1915. The plaintiff firm, therefore, instituted the present suit on the 13th Ostober 1915 for the settlement of partnership assount of the press pool from the 15th June 1914 to the 15th June 1915.

The defendant No. I resisted the suit on the allegation that by the notice of the 15th June 1914 both the ginning and press pools were dissolved, and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to sue for the settlement of account for the period between the 15th June 1914 and the 15th June 1915. In the alternative, he pleaded that even if the press pool was not dissolved the plaintiff was not entitled to sue for a partial settlement of account without sning for the dissolution of the partnership and that as he could not sue for the dissolution of the partnership during the term of the agreement, the suit was premature.

The Court of first instance held that the notice of the 15th June 1914 did not put an end to the press pool, as it was expressly mentioned in the notice that it was to continue. The Court also held that neither by the consent of the partners nor by the conduct of the defendant No. 1 was the partners ship dissolved on the 15th June 1915 as alleged by the plaintiff. As to the right of the plaintiff to maintain the suit for a partial settlement of accounts during the continu ance of the partnership the Court held that as the assounts for the season 1914 15 sould be settled without reference to the accounts for the season 1915 16, the suit was maintainable. A preliminary desree under Order XX, rule 16, Civil Procedure Code, was accordingly passed by the Trial Court for the setilement of assounts of the press pool for the season 1914-15.

Against this decree both parties appealed. The defendant's appeal impugned the decree of the Trial Court for the settlement of assounts, and reiterated the objections relating to the maintainability of the suit. The plaintiff's appeal challenged the decision of the Trial Court relating to the continuance of the press pool, and maintained that the partnership had been dissolved by the conduet of defendant No. 1 on the .5th June 1915. The lower Appellate Court accepted the plaintiff's appeal and modified the preliminary decree of the lower Court by declaring that the partnership had dissolved on the 15th June 1915, and that the account was to be taken from the 15th June 19:4 to the 15th June 1915. The other appeal on the above findings necessarily failed and was dismissed with sosts.

.The defendant has some up in second appeal to this Court and it has been contend. ed on his behalf that the finding of the lower Appellate Court to the effect that the partnership as to the press pool had dissolved on the 15th June 1915 by the conduct of the defendant No. 1, was arrived at without any evidence. The learned Judge Court below has recorded the following find-1bg:-

'It is quite obvious that the plaintiffs only dissolved the cotton ginning pool and not the press pool. The conduct of defendant No. 1 showed quite clearly that he intended that the press pool should also be dissolved. He did not give notice as required by the agreement, but his conduct was equal to a notice. Such notice could only have effect from 15th June 1915 and not earlier. So I hold that the ectton pressing pool must be considered as dissolved on 14th June 1915."

The finding as to the dissolution of the press pool partnership on the 15th June 1915 is based almost entirely on the correspond" ence between the parties. We have examined the lettere, Exhibits P4, P5, P6, P7, P8, Po, PlO and Pll, but we have failed to find anything in those letters, which may support the finding of the learned Judge. In our opinion, there is no evidence in support of this finding. We are, therefore, constrained to hold that the finding of the First Court was correct and that the press pool partnership continued and that it was not dissolved either by the notice of the 15th June 1914 conduct of the or by the defendant No. 1.

The only question that remains for determination is whether, having regard to the fast that at the date of the institution of the suit the partnership had not dissolved, the plaintiff was competent to sue for a partial settlement of accounts for the season 1914-15. In the case of Karri Venkata Reidi v. Kollu Narasayya (1) it was held that

"In regard to suits by one partner against another for a partial assount, the general rule as applied in India, is that if the account is sought in respect of a matter which, though arising out of a partnership business, or connected with it does not involve the taking of general assounts, the Court will, as a rule, give the relief applied for. It will be for the Court to determine under what eireumstances it will be equitable to order a partial assount, having regard to the rights of the parties under the contract. There is no rule of law now in force that a partial ascount can be ordered only under exceptional eireamstances,"

The same rule was laid down by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the ease of Raghubar Dayal v. Sheoram Das .

The case of Fairthorne v. Weston (3) was referred to by the learned Jadges of both the High Courts as supporting their views. Mr. J. P. Singhal in his Law of Partnership in British India has given a summary of cases in which partial settlement of accounts was allowed. It is to be found at pages 344 to 345. of certain English cases mentioned in the foot note the following rule is stated: -

"It is, therefore, clear that where a partner withholds the annual profits of a concern from a member of the firm, the partner excluded from the profits may bring a suit for an account and for his share of the profits and such a suit shall not be dismissed for the reason that the plaintiff does not claim a dissolution. To hold the contrary, would be contrary to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience; it is the duty of the Courts to bring about the fulfilment of the expectations of the parties, and where a partnership has been entered into for a fixed term, the Courts should not permit a partner to drive the others to a dissolution. Every partnership is formed for the acquisition of gain, and if a partner were allowed to exelude his co-partners from the profits of the business, the very object of the partnership would be frustrated and it would some to a premature end. Where before the expiry of the term, the defendant so conducted himself as to make it impossible to earry on the partnership business, with a view to compel the plaintiff to dissolve the partnership and the latter brought a suit for an account of the partnership dealings and transactions since the last settlement, the Court decreed the suit and overruled the objection of the defendant on the ground, that if the Courts failed to grant the relief prayed for, a person fraudulently inclined might, of his mere will and pleasure, compel his co-partner to submit to the alternative of dissolving a partnership, or ruin him by a continued violation of the partnership contrast."

Now, in this ease it is admitted that the business of the pool was managed by the defendant through his agent, Jog Raj, and that prior to the notice of the 15th June 1914 the accounts were rendered daily and dividends distributed daily, but after that date the defendant's agent stopped the giving of the account daily and the payment of profits. Several letters were written by the plaintiff to the agent, Jog Raj, and to the defendant himself pressing them to render the accounts and distribute the profits, but no heed was paid by the defendant or his agent to those letters. In these cirsumstances, the plaintiff was compelled to institute the suit for settle.

In our opinion the authorities referred to above justified the source adopted by the plaintiff. The decision of both the Courts below on this point is correct and is fully supported by authorities. As already indicated, the decision of the lower Appellate Court as to the dissolution of the partnership on the 15th Jane 1915 is incorrect. We accordingly set aside the decision on that point. The result is, that we accept the appeal to the extent above indicated and restore the decree of the Court of first instance. In other respects the appeal is dismissed. Having regard to the fast that the appeal has succeeded in part and failed in part we make no order as to costs.

Execution second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Budaun, dated the 2nd March 1921.

Mr. P. N. Banerii, for the Appellant. Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings. Bansidhar got a decree on the 30th of January 1917 in a suit which he brought against Debi Singh describing him as a member of a joint family and heir of one Tej Singh, deceased, and claiming a certain sum of money as assets of Tej Singh in the hands of Debi Singh after Tej Singh's death. Debi Singh did not contest that suit and it was decreed ex parts. The decree was in terms of the prayer, namely, against the assets of Tej Singh in the bands of Debi Singh after Tej Singh's death. An application for execution of this deeree was filed on the 23rd of January 1920 and sertain property was attached. Debi Singh objected on the ground that he was not the heir of Tej Singh but was his natural son born of a Brahmin woman who was living with Tej Singh and that, as far back as the 28th of January 1905, Tej Singh had made a gift of all the property of which he was then possessed and which had been attached. He, therefore, asked for removal of the attachment on the ground that the property was his own and was not the assets of Tej Singh which had come into his hands after Tej Singh's death. The decreeholder contended that the property was the assets of Tej Singh and had some to the possession of Debi Singh as such after Tej Singh's death. The learned Munsif upheld the objection and ordered the attachment to be removed. The decree. holder appealed and the learned District. Judge has found as a fact that Debi Singh was the natural son of Tej Singh by a woman of another easte and could not susseed to his property as his heir. With reference to the deed of gift, he does not hold that it was not executed. What he says is, that having regard to its terms he thinks that it was not a deed of gift really but was a Will to some into operation after the death of Tej Singh and that, having regard to the fact that no steps had been taken during Tej Singh's life to have the revenue papers altered and to bring the name of Debi Singh on to the Revenue Records, he thinks that it was evidence to show that the deed of gift had never been given effect to. On this ground he allowed the appeal and dismissed Dabi Singh's objection. It seems to us that it was not open to the learned . District Judge to come to this conclusion. This was really a new question which had . not been raised in the Trial Court. The learned Judge seems to be under the impression that among Hindus, a deed of gift, to be valid, must be accompanied by delivery of possession. In this view, he , is mistaken, side sestion 123 of the Trans. for of Preparty Ast, which has been explained in many rulings of this Court, for instance, Pahlwan Singh v. Ram Bharose (1) which followed Phul Chand v. Lakking (2). It must be remembered that when the deed of gift was executed Debi Singh was a shild of tender years living in the house with his father Tej Singh and his mother. By the execution of the deed of gift followed by its registration, the ownership of the property was transferred to Dabi Singh and the possession by his father was possession on his behalf from that date. In our opinion, therefore, the learned Munsif was right. We, therefore, allow the appeal and, setting aside the order of the District Judge, restore that of the learned Muneif with costs throughout inelading in this Court fees on the higher seale.

Practice—Order relating to dismissal of suit in default of payment—Order, construction of.

In a suit the following order was passed "Adjourned till at une; Ks. 200 as condition precedent to be paid before at lune. If the money is not paid by the lat lune the suit will be dismissed with costs" The money was not paid by the at lune. On a question arising as to what was the effect of the order:

Held, that inasmuch as the order did not contain the words, "In default the suit will stand dismissed," the suit was not dead and a further order was necessary by the Court before it was dead and that it was open to the Court, if the circumstances appeared to the Court to justify such an order, to further extend the time for making the payment.

Mr. H. U. Masumder, for the Plaintiff.
Mr. N. N. Ghatak, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This suit appeared on the Special Board sometime in Desember last.

ERWAJ MUHAMMAD C. AHMAD KHAN.

When the suit was called on, the defendants contended that the suit was dead by virtue of an order passed on the 10th April 1919. That order has never been drawn up. But it appears from the Minute Book that the order was made in these terms :- "Adjourned till let Jane; Rs. 200 as condition precedent to be paid before let June. If the money is not paid by 1st June the suit will be dismissed with costs," The money was not, in fact, paid in by the 1st June, and has not been paid up to this day. On the 4th June, Mr. Mandal, Attorney for some of the parties, wrote a letter to the plaintiff with regard to the drawing up of the order for dismissal. On the 25th June the case came on, and another ease in which a similar order had been made, and in which on the 25th an order for dismissal was made. On the 21st June one of the plaintiffs had died and on the 25th the case was ordered to go out of the list for substitution to be made, and in August of the same year an order for sub. stitution was made. I have been referred to the cases of Script thonography Co. v. Gregg (1), Metcalf v. British Tea Association (2), King v. Darenport (3) and also to the ■BSB of Whistler v. Hancock (4).

It seems to me that the real question is the effect of the order of the 10th April 1919. If that order had contained the words: "In default the suit will stand dismissed," should have thought that as from that date the suit in the circumstances was dead and that, irrespective of subsequent proceedings and any question as to the drawing up of the order, the Court could not revive the suit in the absence of any appeal from the order of the 10th April 1:19. But, I think, baving regard to the terms of the order of the 10th April 1919, a farther order was necessary by the Court before the suit was dead, and that, on an application for such an order, it would be open to the Court, if the eireumstances appeared to the Court to justify such an order, to further extend the time for making the payment. Under the sireumstances, I think, it is now open to had only a life-estate, as the mother of the last male owner, Abdul Nabi Khan, shall not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiff, Ahmad Khan, after the death of the dozor. The donees were the daughter's sons of the said lady; or in other words, sons of the sister of the last male owner. It was claimed that Musammot Sahitzudi having only a life tenure could not make a valid gift, that the property should revert to the collaterals of the original donor, and that there was no custom under which sister's sons sould susseed as heirs. The Trial Court decreed the suit and on an appeal by the defendants District Judge confirmed the decree. The defendants have now come up to this Court in second appeal and we have heard Mr. M. S. Bhagat for the appellants and Dr. Nand Lal for the respondents.

A preliminary objection was raised by Dr. Nand Lal that the certificate granted by the District Judge on a question of custom in this case was not properly granted, as the requisites of section 41 (3) of the Panjab Courts Ast were not fulfilled, but after duly considering his arguments on this head we overruled his objection and the case was argued before us at length by both sides on the merits.

The parties are Pathens of Ludhiana District and it has been held that, as agriculturists, they are governed by agricultural custom. The following pedigree-table, which is taken from a fuller table on the record, will illustrate the relationship between them:

The plaintiff's case is that the property in dispute had some to Zusammat Salahan Bibi as a gift from her father, and on the death of Musammat Sahitzadi it should revert to the plaintiff and his brothers as the collaterals of the original donor, and that the sons of Abdul Nabi's sister have no right to get the land after the death of their maternal grandmother, either by virtue of the gift or by succession. The defendants say that they do not know how Musammat Salahan Bibi got the property, they do not admit any gift in her fayour and dispute the right of the plaintiff to sue.

Mr. Bhagat has taken his stand, in his arguments in this Court, mainly on the fact that there is no evidence at all on the resord of a gift having been originally made in favour of Musammat Salahan Bibi, He contends that Abdal Nabi and his ancestors held the land in their own right and not as persons descended from Ali Khan and that, therefore, Ahmad Khan had no locus standi to bring the suit, as he is not a collateral of Abdul Nabi, a female having intervened in the line of ascent connecting Abdul Nabi with Ali Khan. Dr. Nand Lal, on the other hand, argues that the Courts below have concurrently found that the land in suit was acquired by Musammat Sılahan Bibi from her father and as she was not entitled under sustomary law to succeed to land in the presense of her brother, it is a fair inference that a gift in her favour had been made. He urges that the findings, that the land came to her from her father and that it came as a gift, are findings of fact, which must be held to be final. We are prepared to take the finding that Musammat Salahan got the land from her father as a conclusive finding of fast. Mr. Bhagat argued that there was no evidence in support of this finding, but this is not correct. We find that there is evidence, the most important piece being the pedigree table. This finding cannot, therefore, be questioned in second appeal, We must say, however, that the Courts below have not come to any finding at all as to the alleged gift in favour of Musammat Salahan nor is there anything on the record to prove the said gift. We hold, therefore, that the plaintiff cannot succeed in his case on the ground that the land must revert to him as a descendant of the original denor, Ali Khan. In this view of the care it becomes unnecessary to consider or disenes at any length the arguments addressed to us by Counsel on both sides on the question whether it is necessary to exhaust the line of desent of Musammut Salaban Bibi both as regards her male and female descendants in the direct line before Ahmad Khan can bring any claim. Mr. Bhagat insisted in this connection that the dones (ecns of the daughter of Nathe Khan and Musammat Sabitzadi) were the direct lineal desserdants of Musammat Salahan and as such were entitled to eneceed, in preference to Ahmed Khan, independently of the gift in their favour made by Musammat Sahitzadi. He relied upon Gurait Singh v. Musammat Frem Kaur (1), Lochhmon v. Ehoguan Sahai (2) and Shchanchi Eh n v. Begam an (3), in support of his contention, Dr. Nand Nal in reply relied on Januat v. Abaulla (4), in which a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court has differed from the view taken in Gurdit Sirgh v. Musammat Frem Raur (1). We were asked to refer the question to a Full Bench to have the apparent sorflist between Gurdit Singh v. Musommet Frem Raur (1) ard Janual v. Abdulla (4) set at rest and we would have done so but for the reason that we hold that the original gift in favour of Musammat Salaban bas not been proved and the question involved in the rulings above sited no longer arises in the €BB€.

Coming to euccession pure and simple as a basis of decision in this case, we bave to difficulty in firding that Atmad Khan's claim stards on a firmer focting.

As shown by the pedigree table, the parties are undoubtedly descended from Ali Khap. As regards Musammet Salahan Bibi, a female intervening in the line of dettent, Lehna v. Thabari (5), ie en satherity Abdul Nabi Khan was ber last male lineal descendant and on his death his mother His sister or the sons got a life estate. of her sister had no rights in his property according to the enstomary law. It appears from the answer to question No.52, in Donnet's Customary Law of the Lidhiana District, that " sieters and their sons do not succeed in the presence of any collaterals who can prove their relationship to the deceased. instances of sisters or their sons succeeding are very rare." In face of the above statement in the customary law of the distriot, and without an iota of evidence to the contrary, it must be held that the lower Appellate Court's decision that Ahmad Khan, a descendant of Ali Khan, the original owner of the land, has a much better right to the property left by Abdul Nabi than the sons of the latter's sister, is quite correct. This appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

GOBIND LALL DUTT-DEFENDANT,

Letters Patent (Cal), cl. 12-Jurisdiction-Agree. ment to mortgage land outside original jurisdiction-Suit for specific performance - Leave to sue.

A suit for specific performance of an agreement to mertgage lands situate outside the ordinary original jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court, is a suit for land within the meaning of clause 12 of the High Court's Letters l'atent, and the plaintiff is no entitled to obtain leave under that clause to proceed with the suit in the High Court. [p. 4.5, col. 1.]

MELA MAL U. GORI.

Mr. H. D. Bose, (with him Mr. S. M. Bose), for the Plaintiff.

Mr. M. N. Basu, (with him Mr. J. Langford James), for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this snit asks for (a) leave under clause 12 of the Obarter, (b) for judgment for a named sum, and (c) for an order on the defendant to execute and register a mortgage in his favour, and for ancillary reliefs in respect of these prayers.

The land in respect of which relief is sought under elause (c) of the prayer is situate outside the jurisdiction of this Court, and the defendant urges that this is not a case in which the Court can give leave under clause 12 of the Charter. I think this contention is correct and that a suit for specific performance of an agreement mortgage lands outside the jurisdistion, even if the title is accepted, is a suit for land within the meaning of clause 12 of the Charter, and accordingly that leave cannot be given. I have been referred to the case of Sreenath Roy v. Cally Does Ghose (1). That decision seems to me to cover the present case and with the decision I respectfully agree. In the result, I hold that no leave can be given under clause 12 of the Charter, and the sait cannot proseed so far as regards the reliefs elaimed other than the relief (b) as to which no desision is sought on the present application. The injunction granted on the 28th September last should be dissolved. Defendants to get coats of both the matters in the list to day.

Hindu Law-Joint family-Decree against one member, when can be enforced against joint jamily property.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur and Kangra Districts, dated the 20th January 1917, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Kangra, at Dharmeala, dated the 20th July 1916.

Lala Balwant Rai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respond. ..

JUDGMENT.-This second appeal has arisen out of the following fasts: -

One Naud Ram along with his sous Guri. Munshi, Dani, plaintiffe, and Raj Mal, defen. dant No. I in the snit, formed a joint-Hindu family. He died in 1903; On the 7th January 1913 Mala Mal and Shib Dayal, defendants Nos. 3 and 4, traders of Hoshiarpur, filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hosbiarpur against ... Nand Ram and Raja Mal, defendant No. 1 for the recovery of Rs. 1,270 due on bahi account. Nand Ram having died before the suit, as already stated, the defendants. Nos. 3 and 4 proceeded against Raj Mal alone as the sole defendant in the care. The suit was decreed against Raj Malslone and a deerse for the amount was passed against him. In the execution of the deeres. a debt of Rs. 2,051 due from the estate of the Raja of Goler in the hands of the Court of Wards was attached. The plaintiffs objected to the attachment of 1th of the debt. on the allegation that the debt for which the elaim was preferred had not been incurred for the benefit of the joint family and that the decree being against the defendant No. 1 alone could not be executed against The objections were disallowed and them. the 3 h share of the debt was not released from attachment. Thereupon the plaintiffs instituted the present suit for a deelaration to the effect that the sum of Rs. 2,051 due from defendant No. 2 which the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 bad got attached in execution of their deerce against defendant No. 1 was not liable to be attached and sold in excess of the share Raj Mal and that the share of the plaintiffs to the extent of a h ought to have been released from attachment. It was also pleaded that the defendant No. 1 was a man of bad character and of extravagant habits and had incurred the debt for immoral, purposee, and that in any case the decree being egainst defendant No. I alone the shares of the plaintiffs were not liable to be attached in execution thereof.

The suit was resisted by the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 on the following grounds, namely, that the defendant No. 1 was the manager of the joint family, that he had incurred the debt as such along with the father of the plaintiffs for the purchase of articles for a shop which belonged jointly to the plaintiffs, defendant No. 1 and their father. The charges of immorality and extravagance were denied, and the debt due from the estate of the Raja of Goler was alleged to be the joint property of the family.

The Trial Court framed two issues,

(1) Was not the debt for which the defendents Nos. 3 and 4 obtained a decree for Rs. 1,270 incurred for the benefit of the joint family comprising plaintiffs and defendent No. 1?

(2) If so, is not the whole debt of Rs 2,051 due by defendant No. 2 to the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 attachable and liable to sale in execution of the said decree?

The onus was placed on the plaintiffs in respect of both there issues. On the first issue the finding of the Trial Court was that the plaintiffs had failed to discharge the onus and that it was not necessary under the eireumstances to discuss the evidence of defendants Nos. 3 and 4.

The decision on the second issue naturally followed the decision on the first issue and was necessarily against the plaintiffs.

The suit was accordingly dismissed. On appeal by the plaintiffs the decision of the Trial Court has been reversed and a decree has been granted in favour of the plaintiffs. Here: this appeal.

The following facts may be taken to have either been admitted or found :-

(1) that the sum of R: 2,051 which has been strached, belongs to the plaintiff and Raj Mal, the defendant No. 1; and

(2) that the decree under execution was passed against Raj Mal reconally and not in his representative capacity as the manager of the family.

The first contention put forward by Mr. Balwant Rai in his argument was that the attached debt belonged to the defendant No. I explusively and that the plaintiffs had no share in it. This contention, however, does not appear to have been urged in the Courts below. In fact, from the line taken in defence and from the wording of issue No. 2, it would appear that the said sum was treated by all parties as being due both to the plaintiffs and defendant No. I. We are, therefore, not prepared to listen to this contention put forward in second appeal for the first time.

The second contention of the learned

Vakil was that, inasmuch as the decretal debt had been incurred for the benefit of the joint family, and as the defendant No. 1 was admittedly the manager, the plaintiffs must be held to be liable for the debt, in spite of the fast that the decree under execution had been obtained against the defendant No. 1 alone. This contention is opposed to the well-recogn zad role that where a ereditor sues for a debt due from a joint family and does not join all the members of the family as defendants and obtains a decree against one of the members of the family alone, it cannot be executed against the whole co-parcenary property, unless the person sued happens to be the manager of the family and the decree is obtained against him in his capacity as manager representing the family. This rule is clearly stated in almost all the commentaries on Hindu Liw. See, for example. "Principles of Hindu Law by Mulla, III Edition, page 229, paragraph 208" where the principle, deducible from decided cases is thus summed up:

"Where a person seeks to enforce a claim against a joint Hindu family, it is advisible that he should join all the members of the family as defendants. If he sues only one of the members and obtains a decree against him, the decree cannot be executed against the whole co-parcenary property, it can only be executed against the defendants' interest in the property. To this, however, there is an exception which is noted below.

"Exception .- A decree passed against the manager of a joint family as representing the family, provided it be in respect of a debt contracted by him for family necessities or for the family business, may be executed against the whole co-parsenary property. although the other members were not parties to the suit. It is otherwise, if the decree passed is against the manager personally. A desree, even for a family debt, passed against the manager personally, cannot be executed against the whole co parsenary property; it can be executed only against his interest in the property," The same rule is stated by Dr. Goor in his Hindu Code at page 613, paragraph 1359, as follows:-

"If the manager may sue or be saed on behalf of the joint family, it follows that any decree passed in such suit for or against him, would bind the family which he represented. This was the ratio decidendi of the Privy Council decision Sheo Shankar Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (1).] It is immaterial whether the manager was the father or any other relation, provided he was the manager, and had or was sued in that capacity. This must be clear from the resord. It cannot be presumed."

The same rule is stated by Mayne in his work on Hindu Law, IV Edition, section 324, at page 372, in the following words:

"If the managing member of the family executed a document which would bind the other members, the proper course is to see them all. If the creditor choses, he may only see the person who executed the document. But if he adopts this course, his execution will only take effect upon the share of the execution debtor. He cannot enforce it against all other members (not being the sons of the debtors) merely by proving that the transaction was entered into for the benefit of the family."

In this ease it has not been shown that the debt was insurred for the benefit of the family or that the plaintiffs were any way banefited by the transaction. held in Bhura v. Banarsi has been Das (2) that "there is no presumption that a debt contracted even by the manager of a Hinda family was contrasted for the beneft of the family or firm." Therefore, in each case it ought to be proved that the debt for which all the members of the family are sought to be made liable was insurred for the banefit of the family. Tois question, however, is not very material and eannot affect the main question on which the decision of the present case depends. The main question is, whether the property of the plaintiffs can be attached in execution of a decree passed in a sait to which they were no parties and were not represented by any one. As a general proposition of law there can be no doubt that a desree can be executed only against a person against whom it has been passed, but it is contended in this ease that, although the plaintiffs were not impleaded as defendants in the suit they were substantially represented by defendant No. 1 who was the manager of the joint family. It has, however, been held in numerous eases that in order to make the other members of the joint family liable under a decree passed against the managing member it ought to be shown that the suit was brought against bim in his representative capacity. In addition to the authorities quoted above, the following cases, among others, too numerous to mention, may be sited as fully supporting this proposition:-

MELA MAL C. GOBI.

Virarogaumma v. Samudrala (3), Garurappa v. Thima (4), Sothuratyon v. Muthusomi (5), Bolbir Singh v. Ajudhia I rasad (6), Ram Dayol v. Durge Singh (1) and Lackmi Narain v. Kunji Lol (8).

Mr. Balwant Rai har, however, etrongly relied on the case of Sakharam v. Devii (9), and no doubt the desision in that ease goes a long way to support his confention. The rule is thus stated in the head note:

"Where a debt is insurred by a Hindu as manager of the family for family purposes, the other members of the family, though not parties to the suit, will be bound by the deeree passed against him in respect of the debt; and if in execution of the decree any joint property is sold, the interest of the whole family in such property will pass by the sale."

It has, however, not been shown in this case that Raj Mal had incurred the debt as the manager of the family and for its benefit. An examination of the facts of decided cares leads us to the conclusion that no general rule can be laid down which may be applicable to every care. If. in any particular case, it is shown that the debt was incurred by the Karta of a family for the purposes of the family trade or for its benefit otherwise and be was sued as manager and a decree substantially against the family in the name of its manager, all the members of the family will be liable for the decretal These facts, however, must amount. proved by evidence. It was held Bahgasawmy Iyengar v. Annathurai Iyengar (10) that 'there is no presumption of law that a suit by a manager of a joint Hindu family is in his representative eapacity as manager; and where the question itself is rot raised as to his having represented the family, a Court deerse.

will be acting rightly in bolding that he sued in his own personal capacity." The same rule, we take it, will apply in a converse care, namely, where a suit is brought against a manager of a joint family.

Mr. Belwant Rai has referred to three more eases to which we will bris fly refer:-

(1) Boldeo Sonar v. Mobarak Ali Khan (11). This case, in our opinion, does not lay down any different principle. The rule laid down in the judgment is summed up in the head note, which runs as follows :-"A member of a joint Hindu family, not being a son of the debtor, would be bound by a decree and sale of the family property under the deerce, although he was not a party to it, if the creditor or the purchaser, as the case may be, could prove that the debt had been contracted for the benefit of the family or the purposes of a trading business in which they were interested, and if the decree was substantially one against them, although in form it might be against the head member or members of the family, who contracted the debt.

"This would especially be so, if the other eo-parcepers were mirors at the time the debt was contracted and the suit was brought."

- (2) The facts of the case in Hari Vithai v. Jairam Vithal (12) are clearly distinguish. able from the facts of the present care. Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25-Revision-High Court, when can interfere.

Under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act it is not open to a High Court to interfere except where some clear error of law and injustice resulting therefrom are apparent. It cannot interfere merely because, upon the evidence before the lower Court, it would have come to a different finding.

Application for revision against the desision of the Small Cause Court Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Rolumal Lekhras, for the Applicant.

Mr. Isardas Oodhram, for the Opponent. JUDGMENT -The question before the Small Cause Court was, whether the common intention to pay by way of difference and not by delivery had or had not been proved. The law on the subject is clear. The burden of proof is on the defendants; and such common intention is a question of fact in the, sase of each contract on the evidence : in that particular suit It cannot, therefore, be assumed, even in the ease of the other contracts between the same parties, much less in the case of contracts between different parties.

The line between a contract which is members were, therefore, rightly held to be 'speculative and one in which such common intention exists is not always clear and must be a question depending upon the evidence in each case. How narrow the line may be is easily seen from eases such as Burgerii v. Bhagwandas (1) which went up on appeal to the Privy Council Bhagwandas v. Burior i (2). In that case the High Court and the Privy Council differed as to whether the trans. action was merely speculative as far as one party was concerned, or whether there was such common intention on the part of both. Again, the fast of cover is merely evidence which is relevant but not nesessarily sonslusive; Motichand Magandas v. Keshan Appa, i Kulkarni (1).

In the present 'case, we cannot accept the " contention of the applicant and ask ourselves whether, upon the evidence before the lower Court, we should or should not have arrived at the same conclusion. In this application under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Ast, the contention of the opponent, must, we think, be allowed that it is not open to ng to interfere except where some elear error of law and injustice resulting therefrom are apparent. There is a certain amount of evidence in the case on which the finding of the Court of Small Causes is sustainable; and, therefore, we do not think that, under section 25 of the Act, we can interfere and set aside the finding that, in this particular contract, there was common intention to pay by differences and not by delivery. The applieation fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 31st January 1918, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 7th February 1916.

FACTS appear from the following Order of Reference made by Sir Shadi Lal, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Harrison, on the 7th June 1921.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

The defendant, Mian Ghasita, hada contract to construct a building at Labore, and employed the plaintiffs to supply Italian marble and other stones and to do all the work to be performed for placing the marble and the stones in their proper places in the building. The suit, which has given rise to this appeal, was for the recovery of a certain sum of morey alleged to be due to the plaintiffs for the materials supplied and the work performed by them. Now, the learned District Judge, upon a consideration of all the evidence, has determined the various questions of facts which arose between the partier, and has fixed the amount which the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the defendant.

The findings of facts recorded by the learned Judge cannot be assailed on second appeal; and the only question of law which arises in this appeal, is whether the suit is governed by Article 120 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act and is consequently within time. Now, it may be stated at once that the claim would be barred by time unless it is governed by the six years' rule as laid down by Article 120 or Article 52 (the period of three years preseribed by the latter Article has been enlarged to six years by the Panjab Loans Limitation Act, 19(4). As the plaintiffs supplied not only the meterials but also the labour it is elear that neither Article 52 nor Article 55 governs the whole of the claim, and a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court in Radha Kishen v. Bosant Lal (1) has held that, as no single Article was applicable to the entirety of the elaim, the suit fell within residuary Article 120. The correctness of this decision has been impeached before us, and, as at present advised, we are not inclined to affirm the rule laid down in that judgment.

Now, it is a well-settled rule of law that the combination of several claims in one suit does not deprive each claim of its specific character and description—tide, interalia, Chrinicas v. Hanmant (2), and there is, therefore, no valid reason why the claim, in so far as it relates to the price of the materials supplied by the plaintiffe, should not some within the purview of Article 52, and that relating to the price of the work done should not be governed by Article 56. Assuming, however, for the sake of argument, that the entire claim must come within one Article, we consider that the residuary Article for actions arising out of contracts is Article 1:5, and that Article 1:0 has, therefore, no application to an action based upon a contract,

As the judgment sought to be impeashed was delivered by a Division Bench, we do not think that we would be justified in dissenting from it without referring the matter to a Full Bench. We accordingly refer for the determination of a Full Bench the question, whether the suit as described above is governed by Article 52, Article 56, Article 115, or Article 120.

Bakhshi Tek Chani, for the Respondente.

JDDGMENT .- The action, which has led to this reference, was brought by the plaintiff for the recovery of a certain sum of money on the basis of a contract. It appears that the defendant, who had taken a contract to construct a building at Labore, employed the plaintiff as a sub contractor to do the work of flooring in the building. plaintiff was to supply Italian marble and other stones required for the floring, and also to do all the work necessary for constructing the floor, and was to be paid a certain sum of money for every square foot of the flooring done by him. The rate, though varying with the stone used in flooring, did not specify separately the price of the stone and other materials supplied by the plaintiff, and that of the labour required for doing the work. In other words, the parties fixed for each kind of flooring a consolidated rate including the price of the materials to be supplied and the work to be done by the plaintiff.

The action brought by the plaintiff was for the recovery of the balance of the money due to him on the strength of the contract described above: and the question for consideration is, what Article of the Limitation Act governs the claim. Our attention has been invited, in the first instance, to Article 52, which prescribes a period of three years

(enlarged to six years by the Punjab Loans Limitation Ast of 1904) for the resovery of the price of goods sold and delivered to the defendant; and also to Article 56, which lays down a period of three years for a suit to recover the price of work done by the plaintiff for the defendant. Now, as stated above, the plaintiff supplied not only the materials. but also the labour, and it is slear that neither of the aforesaid Articles governs the suit in its entirety. It is, however, nrged that the action comprises two claims, one for the price of the materials supplied by the plaintiff, and the other relating to the price of the work done by him, and that these two slaims should be dealt with separately, and that they are governed by Article : 2 and Article 56, respectively. The rule of law is, no doubt, firmly established that a combination of several claims in one action does not deprive each claim of its specific character and description. The Code of Civil Procedure allows a plaintiff, in certain circomstances, to combine in one action two or more distinct and independent claims, and it is quite possible that one of the claims may be barred by limitation, and the other may be within time. though both of them arise out of one and the same sause of action. In a cese of that description there is no reason why the Court should not apply to each elaim the rule of limitation specially aprlicable therete. It is nowhere laid down that only one Article should govern the whole of the sait, though it may ecceist of several independent claims, and that the suit should not be split up into somponent parts for the purpose of the Law of Limitation,

The question, however, is whether the action as brought by the plaintiff can be treated as a combination of two distinct elaims. Now, the plaint makes no mention of the price of the materials as distinct from the price of the work, and contains no reference whatsoever to two claims. There is only one indivisible elaim, and that is for the balance of the money due to the plaintiff on the basis of a contract, by which he was to be paid for everything supplied and done by him in connection with the flooring of the building at a comprehensive rate. The claim as laid in the plaint is an indivisible one; it cannot be split up into two portions. We must, therefore, hold that it falls neither under Article 52, nor under Article 56.

The learned Advocate for the plaintiff contends that as no ther of the above Articles governs the claim, it should some within Article 120. The judgment in Radha Rishen v. Bosant Lol (1), which is relied about in support to this contention, no doubt, related to a suit for the resovery of a sum of money alleged to be due for the work performed and materials supplied by the plaintiff to the defendant under a contract, and the learned Judges held that neither Article 52 nor Article 56 was applicable to the entire claim. They then made the following observation:—

"There is no other Article specifically applicable, and hence the only Article which can be applied is Article 1:0."

Now, with all deference to the learned Judger, we are unable to hold that there is no other Article governing a claim of that character. It seems that their attention was not drawn to Article 115, which governs every suit for compensation for the breach of a contract not in writing registered and not specially provided for in the Limitation Act. It is beyond doubt that this Article is a general prevision applying to all actions ex contractu not specially provided for otherwise; and the present claim certainly arises out of a contract entered into between the parties. The word "compensation" in Article 115 as well as in Article 116 has the same meaning as it has in section 73 of the Indian Contract Act, and denotes a sum of money payable to a person on account of the loss or damage caused to him by the breach of a contract. It has been held, and we consider rightly, that a suit to recover a specified rum of money on a contract is a suit for compensation within Articles 115 and 116-vide Noboccomer Siru Muliick (d) and Mookhopadhaya v. Husain Ali Khan v. Hafiz Ali Khon (4).

We are accordingly of opinion that the present claim must be regarded as one for compensation for the breach of a contract, and that there is no special provision in the Act which governs the claim. It must, therefore, come under the general provision

(3) 6 C. 94; 6 C. L. R. 579; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. s.), 61. (4) 3 A. 600 (F. B.); A.W. N. (1881) 33; 6 Ind. Jur. 42; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 323. every action arising out of a contract, not otherwise specially provided for.

Our reply to the question referred to us is, that the suit is governed by the three years' rule as prescribed by Article 115. The case must now go back to the Division Bench for final determination.

Oase remittet to Dicision Bench.

Punjab Courts Act (VI of 198), s 41 (31-Appeal, second - Question of burden of proof involving question of custom - Certificate, necessity of.

A second appeal on the question of the burden of proof, when that question involves a question of custom, cannot be entertained without the necessary certificate under the lunjab Courts Act. [p. 493, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a desree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 10th January 1918, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 3rd November 1917.

Mr. B P. Khosla, for the Appellant.

Mesers Fakir Chand and Amar Nath Chona, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts giving rise to this second appeal may be summarised as below. One Ghania was a joint holder in 675 konals 15 marlas of lard. He died leaving Musam. mot Punni as his widow. Her name was mutated in the Revenue Records. She applied for partition of her half share. Gopals, the plaintiff in this case, objected that she, as a widow, was not entitled to claim partition. He was referred to the Civil Courts to get the question determined. Accordingly, this suit was instituted for a declaration to the effect that 675 kanals 15 marlus of land being the common ansestral property of the parties, the defendant had no right to have it partitioned.

The Court of first instance at first framed the following issue: - 'is not the widow entitled by soustom to obtain particion of a joint khata?" It was first inclined to hold that the case was governed by Bhog Bhari v. Watir Khan (1) and that the burden of proof lay upon the plaintiff to provs that, according to eastom, Musammat Punni had no right to partition. After, however, recording a part of his judgment the learned Subordinate Judge changed his mind as to the burden of proof and framed an issue in the following words: -"Is the widow entitled by sustom to obtain partition of a joint khata?" The object of framing this issue was to throw the borden of proof upon the defendant Musammat Punni. An opportunity was given to Musammat Panni to addues evidence to prove that under eustom she was entitled to elaim partition. learned Subordinate Judge, after going into the evidence given by the parties, came to the conclusion that according to custom Musam. mat Panni as a widow was not entitled to elaim partition. The suit was accordingly deersed and a declaration was granted to the plaintiff according to his claim.

An appeal was preferred by Musammat Panni to the lower Appellate Court. The lower Appellate Court has come to a different conclusion and has held that the case is elearly governed by the rule as to caus probanti laid down in Bhag Bhari v. Watir Khan (1). Evidence was given on behalf of the plaintiff to prove the sustom assord. ing to which a widow would not have the right to claim partition. That evidence has been econsidered by the lower Appellate Court and the conclusion at which the lower Appellate Court has arrived is, that the plaintiff has failed to discharge the burden of proof which lay upon him. In Bhay Bhart v. Watir Khan (1) the learned undges who desided the case made the following observation :-

A widow has a clear, unequivosal, statutory right in virtue of her possession noder the Land Revenue Act to demand partition. Toat Act provides many safeguards against the improper grant of such a request and where the Revenue Authorities see fit to grant it and a suit is brought in a Oivil Court to restrain such grant, we are quite clear that no considerations of desirability or undesirability should have any weight at all in this Court; and that the question to be considered is the simple one, whether or not the plaintiff has succeeded in proving the existence of this power of restraint under the Customary Law."

The effect of that decision we take to be this that, according to the statutory law, a widow has got a right of partition but that right may be cartailed or limited by a oustom which may be proved by a person who objects to her right of partition. Now, in this case it has been held by the lower Appellate Court that it lay upon the plaintiff to prove that Musammat Panni, though entitled to claim partition, was not entitled to get partition under the custom applicable to her. Under the sireumstances abovementioned, the plaintiff's suit has been dismissed by the learned Judge of the Court below and the plaintiff has come up to this Court in second appeal. In his memorandum of appeal four pleas have been taken. The second ples raises the question of burden of proof. Pleas Nos. 3 and 4 object to the finding of the Court below as regards the question of sustom.

On the appeal coming on for hearing before us a pre iminary objection was taken by Mr. Fakir Chand on behalf of Mus:min it Punni, the respondent, that, inasmuch as the appellant has not produced a certificate, he is not entitled to question the finding as regards enstom. Mr. Khosla, on the other hand, has argued that plea No. 2 raises a pure question of law, inasmuch as it questions the desision of the lower Appellate Court as to the burden of proof. The question which we have to decide ie, whether the question of barden of proof in this case is a pure question of law or it involves a question of eastom as well. From the statements of the facts of the case as given above it is quite clear that the question of burden of proof can in no way be separated from the question of eustom in this case. S, in this case the question of burden of proof clearly involves a question of equatom.

We must, therefore, hold that, for want of the necessary certificate, the appellant is not entitled to argue this appeal. We allow the DWYER D. DWYER.

JUDGMENT.—This is a hopeless appeal. We can only hope that the parties, in spite of the miserable charges that they have made against one another, will take the learned Judges' advise. There is one respeet in which the learned Judge, it is perhaps well to mention, has departed from the ordinary rule. There is no erossobjection and, therefore, we cannot alter his order, but he should have realised that the regular rule, to which there is practically no exception, is, that even alwife's defence fails, or her though a counter charges break down, or she has been proved guilty of adulters, the husband has to pay her costs. This was not a case in which the Judge should have ordered each party to pay their own costs. The policy of the Matrimonial Law in England and it is the same among the Christians in India, has always demanded that the husband shall be responsible for his wife's costs. Indeed, the usual practice in every husband's petition is to require bim to deposit a sum for the wife's costs before the petition is allowed to proceed. The reason for that is obvious. The husband has the control of the purse-strings and it may often happen, if he is not ordered to provide security for the wife's costs, that he may secure a decree in an undefended case, because the wife had no money to defend her honour. The appeal must be dismissed with sosts including fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT .- The pedigree-table of the family, and those of other families in which instances of succession, have been relied upon are attached to the judgment of the first Court and should be referred to. They are referred to as G-I., G II, etc., in this judgment.

In this case there is a quadrangular dispute relating to property possessed by one Barkat Ali, who died in 1872. This property was, till shortly before the suit, in the possession of Musammat Bismillah Begam, deseased, his last widow, or her donees.

The claimants are,-

(1) Musammot Nasib-un-Nira, the daughter of a predeceased brother of Barkat Ali.

(2) Afzal Ali, the son of sister who survived Barkat Ali.

(3) Musammat Abmdi-un-Nissa, a sollateral in the fourth degree.

The above three claimants have instituted separate suits. The principal defendants are the sons of one Umar Ali who elaimed half of two villages, Kanal and Salakbni, by right and much of the other property by gift Barkat Ali's widow, Musammat from Biamillab Begom.

The parties belong to the well-known litigating family of Sayads residents of Kharkhanda, in the Robtak Districts. There Sayade, although their numbers are small, have on many oceasions beginning from 1876 brought their cases to the Chief Court and the High Court at Labore. As between the plaintiffe, it is common ground that they are governed by general agricultural enetom which, however, allows special concessions to femaler; while the defendants, sons of Umar Ali, contend that they are governed by Muhammadan Law. On this point the Trial Court has held that the strict Muhammadan Law of succession has rarely been acted upon and that the next heir gets the property whatever his or her ger may be. The Judge has further held that, this being the case, Musammat Abmadi. un-Nisa, as a remote collateral, has no right of sussession in the presence of nearer beirs of Barkat Ali. As far as Musammat Nasib-un-Nisa and Afzal Ali are concerned, the Judge was of opinion that it had not been proved that a predeceased brother's daughter had any right of succession and that such right was opposed Muhammadan Law and oustom. as the sister's son was concerned, he followed previous desisions of this Court, in which such right of inheritance had been upheld, and considered that he was the nearest beir. As, however, Afzal Ali, in a plaint of 1896, bad admitted Muszm. mat Nasib un Nies to have equal rights with himself, the Judge considered that he was bound by this admission and that, therefore, Musammat Nasibon Nisa Afzal Ali were entitled in equal shares in the property, the share of Afzal Ali being reduced to 1/24th owing to the presence of other members of his family who did not sue. As far as the half share of Kanal and Salakhni lands was concerned, it was decided that there was no sufficient proof that it belonged to Barkat Ali; and Musammat Nasib un-Nissa who alone sued for lands lost her ease in this respect. only other remarks necessary regarding the judgment of the Trial Court are, that Afgal Ali's suit in respect of certain houses and the suits of both of the successful plaintiffs were dismissed in so far as they elaimed mesne profits. Against this finding of the lower Court all the parties have preferred appeals, the plaintiffs asking for their full claim and the defendants for the dismissal of the suits as far as the land in their possession is concerned.

The first point for decision is, whether the parties are governed by their personal law in matters of succession or by custom. The lower Court, as we have shown above, same to a somewhat indecisive finding on this point. There can be, however, in our opinion, no doubt whatever that for a very long period the parties have followed eastom. This has been held in a series of desisions beginning with Kadir Ali v. Sikandar Ali (1) and concluding with Qivil

NASIB. UN. NISA C. AHMDI-UN-MISA.

Appeal No. 2295 of 1913 [Ahmadi ul-nissa v. Nasib ul missa (2)]. Other intermediate judgments to the same effect are Mir Mumta: Ali v Jawad Ali (3), Bunyad Ali v. Faie Muhammad (4), Aman Ali v. Mus.mmat Amina Begam (5), Umat u'. Said-ul-nissa (6), Musammat Ala ∇. Ali (7) Mansur ٧. Nassb ul nisa and Friz-ud Din v. Amam Ali (8). The authorities and evidence on this subject are so clear that it is unnecessary to discuss this question in any detail. Niez Muhammad for the defendants has referred us to certain evidence of a period prior to the Chief Court desision, but much of this evidence was produced in the case was decided on appeal in Mir which Mumtaz Ali v. Jawad Ali (3) and much of it is worthless. It is possible, or even probable, that in old times the parties followed their personal law, but we consider that there is no doubt that they have followed sustom for the last 45 or 50 years. There is also no doubt that in matters of sussession they have been somewhat influenced by their own personal law and have widely recognised the rights of succession of females. This is shown by many decisions and still more numerous instances. The first decision on this point was Mir Mumtar Ali v. Jawad Ali-(3) and other notable judgments on the same point are Fair ud din v. Aman Ali (8), Nasib ul nisa v. Mansur Ali (7) and Ahmadiul nissa v. Nasib ul nissa (2.)

We will now proceed to sonsider the main question arising in these appeals, namely, whether under the sustom of the Sayads of Kharkhauda the rights of a brother's daughter are superior to those of a sister's This question sannot be desided upon the mere admission of parties as has been done by the learned District Judge. In the 1896 case reported as Fair ud.din v. Amam Ali (.), Musammat Nasib no-Niss, the descendant of one son, and Afzal Ali and Aman Ali, descendants of two sisters, sued jointly for property left by Musammat Miro, the widow of Rabmat Ali. In the plaint they described their shares as : -

Musammat Nasib un. Nisa Aman Ali ... Alzal Ali ...

This has been taken by the Trial Court as a clear admission as between Musammat Nasib-un-Nisa and A'zal Ali, the present plaintiffe, of the equality of their shares in the same of any collateral succession. Mr. Tek Chand for Musimmit Nasib un-Nisa urges, in our opinion rightly, that he eannot be held in any way bound by this so called admission. In the first place, it is an admission on a point of law and, in the second place, it was a gratuitous one as for the purposes of that suit, it was in no way necessary to describe the respective shares of the parties. We may also mention that the Chief Court held in this ease, that Afral Ali and Aman Ali had no share. We do not think that the lower Court was justified legally or otherwise in coming to a conclusion upon this admission. It has, therefore, to be seen upon the evidence which party has established a superior right.

Barkat Ali, as we have stated, died in 1872. His brother Sarfraz Ali, father of Musummat Nasib-un-Nisa, died in the Mutiny in 1857. It appears whether he was in reality a rebel, the only information on the point being the statement of Musammat Bismillah Begam herself. An elaborate record containing the names of rebels was sent for at the request of the defendants and this does not include the name of Sarfraz Ali, Some arguments have been based on this point, but they appear to us not justified on the facts and to have no bearing on any point of law or eustom involved. The first question in the case is, whether the succession to Barkat Ali's estate should be considered to have opened at the date of the death of Barkat Ali or at the date of the death of Musammat Bismillah Bagam. If the latter view be accepted, then both Musammat Nasib up Nisa and her rival Afzal Ali are respectively the daughter and son of a predecessed brother and sister. In this sase a brother having admittedly a priority over a sister Musaminat Nasib-un Nisa will succeed. Mr. Tek Chand has referred us to two decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council on Hinda Law, Moniram v. Keri Kolitani (9) and Janaki Ammal v. Narayanarami Aiyır (10) as authorities that the whole estate vests in the widow and that the husband's life is assumed to continue in her person, and that succession, therefore, opens at the date of the death of the widow. The same principle has been followed in a case of custom by this Court in Bhagi v. Muhammad (11). On this view of the ease, which appears to be correct, there can be no doubt as to the superior rights of the brother's daughter as against the sister's son.

The same, in our opinion, is proved to be the result even if Musammat Nasib-un-Nisa be considered as the daughter of a predeseased brother of Barkat Ali, and Afzil Ali, the son of a surviving sister. As Mr. Tek Chand has shown, the right of representation has many ossasions ao held to exist in the family. As far as males are concerned, this was desided in Kadir Ali v. Sikandar Ali (1) and indeed the proposition is not seriously contested before us. There are also many good decisions that this same right οŧ representation exists in favour of females. In Mir Mumtae Ali v. Jauad Ali (3) Afzel Ali, the present plaintiff, himself, and other sister's sons challenged alienations by widows and the right of representation was allowed in favour of the sister's sons. It is hard to see how A'zal Ali can now deny a similar right to a brother's deughter. In Fais.ud-din Amam Ali (8), Mus:mmat Nasib un Nisa herself succeeded collaterally to the property of Musammat Miso widow of Bahmat Ali (pedigree table G.1). The rights of the sister's son Afzaf Ali, etc., were negatived in the presence of Musammat Nasib un-Niss. In Nasib'ul nisa v. Mansur Ali (7) it was again held in favour of Musammat Nasib un Nisa that, in the absence of sons, daughters succeeded like sons and that the right of representation existed in their case.

A similar finding Was arrived Ahmadi ul nisa (2). ٧. Nasib ul nissz This is a very significant judgment and is to the effect that a sister of a pre-deceased male has no rights in the presence of his There are many other good daughters. instances showing the resognition of the right of representation among females. Pedigree G. II shows the family of Musammat Mahfuzan. She succeeded to the property of her father's brother in the presence of collaterals of the fifth degree. A more relevant instance is that illustrated by table pedigree G III. There estate of Azim un-Din was inherited bø his brother's daughter and another brother's grand daughter. It is only by the recognition of the right of representation that the latter obtained 8 share. The instance is illustrated by pedigree table G IV. In this family the estate of Musam. mat Sughra Begam was inherited Najm-ud Dip, a brother of the last male holder, by Musammat Altafan, a widow of another brother, and by Musammat Nasira Begam, the daughter of another brother. Two sisters' sone, Nisar Ali and Bashir ud Din, were alive at the time and neither obtained a share. This, beside showing the right of representation, shows the natural preference, arising from the recognition of this right, to a brother's daughter over a sister's son. Pedigree-table G.V illustrates the family of Mir Abdullah. In this family the two sons, Mardan Ali and Wazir Ali, were succeeded by their daughters, Musammat Fabiman and Musammat Mamtez Bigam. Oa Musammat Fahiman's death her estate was inherited by W.zr Ali's daughter. This itstance is eritieised on the ground that at the time Wazir Ali's widow was still alive, but the fast remains that the property has devolved for many years on Musammat Mumtez Begam without any contest by Asad Ali or his sons. Asad Ali, as has been pointed out to us, was the father-in-law of Musammat Mamtez Begam, but he had other sons who have been vigorous litigants, but have never contested the rights of Musummat Mumtez Begam. The pedigree tables G VI and G. vII relate to eases Numb. u! nisa v. Minsur Ali (7) and Fais.u.L. din v. Amam Aii (8) which have been referred to above and pedigree-table G.VIII is that of the parties concerned in the ease decided by Civil Appeal No. 2295 of 1916 Ahmadi-ul nissa v. Nasib ul nissa (2). Another very strong case in favour of Mr. Tek Chand's elient is that of the succession to the property of Zabar Beg who was succeeded by two sons, a predeseased son's son and a predeseased son's This case is proved by the mutation proseedings printed in paperbook II at pages 194.95. It goes further than many other instances of succession inasmuch as it recognises the rights of females in the presence of nearly related males. None of these instances are of recent date or now open to contract except the last one.

As against this mass of evidence showing the existence of the right of representation in favour of females, Mr. Mokerji, on behalf of Afzal Ali, has been able to refer us to no well anthenticated case in his favour. We do not think it necessary to deal with some very ancient cases deposed to by such biased witnesses as Mozaffar Beg. Musbarraf Ali, Sakbawat Ali and Shamebad Ali. The only ease of which he has been able to give authenticated details is that illustrated by pedigree-table GIX. This merely shows that a sister's son and a sister's daughter succeeded equally. In any ease it helps to establish the right of representation relied upon by Mr. Tek Ohand. Mr. Mukerji eriticised some of the instances ground that other against him on the had consented to the parties affected successions in question. Consent, bowever, strongest indication the recognition of right. On this point we have no hesitation in soming to a finding that representation of right the in favour of females among the Sayads of Kharkbanda at least in the absence of near male heirs, and this being the case Musammat Nasib-un Nisa takes the place of her father Sarfraz Aliand thus becomes the heir to Barkat Ali. We hold, therefore, that she alone is entitled to the whole property. This finding also disposes of the elaim of Musammat Ahmadi-un-Nissa.

The next question for decision is whether a half share in the villages of Salakhni and Kanal belonged to Barkat Ali. As for these villages the lower Court has relied upon documents showing Umar Ali alone mentioned as Lambardar and the oral evidence of tenants which shows that Barkat Ali had nothing to do with the management of there villages. In 1872 also his three widows stated that he had no right in this land which belonged exclusively to Umar Ali. The Court, therefore, held that both the villages were the exclusive property of Basharat Ali and that Barkat Ali taking advantage of the minority Ali, had a fraudulent entry made in his name. As against these findings Mr Tek Chand has shown us that a lease of Salakhni land was granted originally by Government to Basharat Ali for twenty years in 1837. Basharat Ali was shot as a rebel in 1857 and his property was confiscated. Barkat Ali had remained loyal and had rendered valuable services to Govern. ment. At the end of 18:8, the land of both villages was restored to Barkat Ali and Umar Ali, son of Basharat Ali, as is shown by correspondence and letters printed at pages 2 to 5 of paper book II. The entries in the Revenue Resords were to the same effect and the lower Court is not correct in stating that Umar Ali alone was Lambardar as is clear from the entry on page 10 of paper book II. It is, moreover, established beyond any dispute that the restoration of the land was made to Barkat Ali's family and the grant of a half share was made to him as a reward for his services-vide letter No. 1233, dated 18th May 1858, from the Government of India to the Chief Commissioner, Panjab. From this it is obvious that the opinion of the lower Court, that Barkat Ali obtained this land by fraud, is not justified. We have also perused the oral evidence showing that Umar Ali alone used to manage this land. We do not consider that this evidence is of any value, and, even if true to some extent, it does little to establish the opinion formed by the lower Court. Barkat Ali remained a soldier till 1872, and it was owing to this fact that he had taken little part in the actual management of these lands. We differ, therefore, from the opinion of the lower Court on this point, and hold that half the lands in Salakhni and Kanal were the property of Barkat Ali and that Musummat Nasib-un-Nisa is entitled to them. The gift by the widows of Barkat Ali in favour of Umar Alican have no effect against her.

BAM SUNDAR TEWARI C. KULWANTI KUNWAR.

In connection with the gifts to Umar Ali, we should mention the contention of Mr. Niez Muhammad on behalf of his beire, namely, that although a female may have a right of inheritance it does not follow that she has a right to contest an alienation even by a widow. The subject in general is of a somewhat contentious character but we may say that we agree generally with the remarks of Robertson, J., in Mageud-ul-nisa v. Kanie Zohra (12). These remarks apply with special force in the present case owing to cur finding that Musammet Nasib un Nisa is entitled succeed by the right of representation and as a daughter who succeeds in such capacity has in every way the rights of a male. The right of a male to contest alienations sannot be disputed in this family, as Umar Ali bimself had alleged such right in a ease which was fought up to the Chief Court. There are also many good authorities as to the right of a female heir to contest alienations by widows [see, for instance, Pir Mumtae Ali v. Jauad Ali (3) and Fais ud din v. Amam Ali (8)1. We do not consider that there is any force in this argument.

The only other point requiring any decision on our part is the right of Musammat Nasibun-Nisa to mesne profits from the date of the institution of the suit till delivery of possession. This claim was refused by the lower Court on the ground that the plaintiff's suit was premature and could not be determined in this litigation. We fail to understand the meaning of the learned Judge who obviously overlooked the provisions of Order XX, rule 12, Civil Procedure Code. Indeed, on this point the elaim is not contested by the persons in possession. We hold, therefore, that a decree should have been passed directing an enquiry as to the rent or mesne profits from the institution of the suit until the delivery of possession to the decree holder.

There were other points raised in the source of the appeal before us which either do not require any remark in view of our finding in favour of Musammat Nasibun Nies or have not been pressed by Counsel. Mr. Tek Chand did not press his case regarding Lashbman's house, nor did he press ground No. 12 of the appeal.

The result, therefore, of this appeal is that Musammat Nasib un Nisa's appeal is accepted and she is given a decree for the whole instead of balf of the property described in the decree of the First Court, and also for the half share claimed of the Kanal and Salakhni lands and for mesne profits from the institution of the suit till date of delivery of possession. The Executing Court will make due enquiry into this amount. We award her the full costs of litigation as her suit has only failed in respect of properties of trifling value. The appeals of the other appellants are dismissed with costs.

His failure to sign it is undoubtedly a legal flaw, but it is a flaw which the plaintiffs cannot take advantage of, because they procured it. On that ground alone we think that the learned Judge should have decided as he did, although it is true that he has not expressed himself very well on the subject. Lower Burma Courts Act (VI of 1900), s. FC-Appeal, special - Whole case whether re-opened - Facts, concurrent findings of, interference with.

The special appeal allowed by section 20 of the I ower Burma Courts Act re opens the whole case, but, as a general rule, the Chief Court will not, in such an appeal, interfere with concurrent findings of fact, unless very good grounds for that interference are made out. [p. £00, col. 2; p, £01, col. 1.]

Special civil second appeal against the judgment passed by the Divisional Judge, Hanthawaddy, mcdifying the decree passed by the District Judge, Hanthawaddy.

Mr. Anklesaria, for the Appellant. Mr. Moore, for the Respondents. JUDGMENT.

Bonson, C. J.—The plaintiff-appellant brought a suit against Pavadai Padayashi and obtained an order for attachment before judgment on certain Laterite lying on some land of his. The respondent then applied to have the attachment removed, claiming to be the owner of the Laterite by virtue of an agreement with the defendant. His application was rejected and he thereupon brought this suit for a declaration that he was the owner of the Literite, and for damages for wrongful attachment.

Both Courts have held that he is the cwner of the Laterite and have granted him damages for wrongful attachment, but the lower Appellate Court has varied the decree in respect of the damages by a sum of about Rs. 200. A further appeal was then filed in this Court, under section 30 of the Lower Burma Courts Act.

A question has been raised as to whether any appeal lies in regard to the ownership of the Laterite, there being concurrent findings of fact as to this.

It was brought to our notice that the question whether the appeal allowed by section 30 re opens the whole ease or only that portion of it on which the decree of the first Court has been varied is one that is constantly raised and has never been decided by this Court in any case that has been printed. We, therefore, decided to hear Counselon this matter before we continue the apreal any further.

Under the ordinary law, there would be no further appeal except on points of law or procedure as allowed under section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Lower Burma Courts Act allows a spesial appeal wherever the decree of the Appellate Court varies or reverses otherwise than as to costs the decree of the Court below. It allows special appeals on any ground which would be a good ground of appeal, if the deerse had been passed in an original suit. The question of concurrent findings of fact as to one or more of the issues arising in the case is not dealt with, and, taking the section as a whole, it is clear that an appeal lies on the whole case. If the decree is varied or reversed, the appeal will lie, and to that extent it must be taken that the whole sase is re opened, but it does not, therefore, follow that the Court should depart from the wellestablished rule as to concurrent findings of fact, and the general rule must always be that the Court will not interfere with PUBLE CHAND ANIE CHAND U. consurrent findings of pure matters of fast, noless vary good grounds for that interference are made out. In our opinion the Court should be guided by the principles which are acted on by their Lordships of the Privy Council in this matter, and those principles are to be found collected in Woodroffs and Amir Ali's Civil Procedure Jode, Second Edition, at page 441, etc.

In the present case, therefore, we will hear Counsel as to whether this is a case in which we should go into the question of the oxpership of the Laterite which it is open to us to do, if good cause therefor be assigned. It may be that in this case it is not a pure question of fact but rather one of mixed law and fact, and we should have to consider whether all matters arising and necessary for the decision of the question have been considered and weighed.

The appeal will, therefore, he set down for further hearing and he placed first on the list as a part-heard case.

Promisery-note, writen assignment of, whether valid—Assignee, right of.

A written assignment of a promissory-note is valid, and under the general law, apart from the Transfer of Property Act, such assignment gives to the assignee a right of suit upon the note. [p. 5.18, col .]

Application for revision of an order passed by the District Judge, Pegu, reversing the decree passed by Township Judge, Nganuglebin, Mr. N. S. A'yır, for the Applicant. Mr. Buriories, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for Rs. 3:63.3, alleged to be due on a promissory note, payable to order, which had been assigned to the plaintiff applicant by the payee by means of a bond. The transaction took place in Pega District.

Toe First Coart decreed the suit, but the learned Judge of the District Coart dismissed it, holding, in effect, that, ionsometh as section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act is not in force in Pegu District, a pro note can only be transferred by indorsement and delivery under the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act; or, in other words, that in Pegu District, or where the Transfer of Property Act is not in force, a pro-note cannot be transferred as an actionable claim but solely as a negotiable instrument.

In this case there was no indorsement of the note.

The sole point taken up on revision before me is, that the learned Judge erred in law in overlooking the fast that a pro note may be transferred under the general law, as well as under the Transfer of Property Act or by the Law Merchant, or that, in the alternative, the Judge erred in not holding that the principles deducible from section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act should be enforced as rules of equity, justice, and good conscience.

I will deal with the last point first. It seems to me that the real point in such a case as this is, that we have to consider what was the law in India in regard to assignments of "choses in action," before the Transfer of Property Act was brought in at all. I also think that, whereas the Negotiable Instruments Act codified the law relating to pro-notes, in so far as they are Negotiable Instruments, Transfer of Property Act codified the law relating to them as "actionable elaims," which law existed before the latter Act was brought into force. If this is correct, and I consider that it is so, it simplifies the matter under discussion to a great extent.

I am now asked to hold that there are three ways in which a Negotiable Instrument, such as this pro note in suit, may be transferred, viz:—

1. By indorsement and delivery, as a Negotiable Instrument, under section 48 of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

2. By written assignment under section

130, Transfer of Property Act.

3. By transfer under the General Law applicable before the Transfer of Property Act was put into force in India, i.e., by delivery for value or assignment for value, just as a mere chattel may be transferred.

The first method would be good anywhere.
The second method is equally indisputable in places to which the Transfer of Property Act has been extended, but, of source, it would not render the transferee a "holder in due course." In regard to the third method, there are authorities in support of its existence. Binode Bishore Goswami v. Ashutosh Mukher ee (1) shows that there is a general law, which regulates the transmission and transfer of Negotiable Instruments "as chattels." I refer especially to page 667 of this decision. The case quoted and relied upon by the learned District Judge, Ulagappa Ohetty v. Ramanathan Ohetty (2), was the work of a single Judge, andit does not seem that he exhausted the authorities. The gist of his decision that a man cannot sue on a note which is not indorsed to him, is not, therefore, of great weight, Muhammad Khumaruli v. Ranga Rao (3). and Muthar Sahib Maraikar v. Kadir Sahib Maraikar (4) support the view that this third method of transfer exists. The ease reported in Soucer Lodd Govinda Doss v. Lepati Muneppa Naidu (5) appears to be a parallel case, supporting the contention that a promissory note may be transferred independently of the Aegotiable Instruments Act and the Transfer of Property Act, and that, too, even without a written assignment. I should say that this case deals with a fransfer by the Court of Wards. It was followed in Lodd Govind Das v. Karnam Munusaumi Psilai (6) where also the Court of Wards made the transfer. There can be no doubt that the cumulative effect of these decisions is that a Negotiable instrument may be transferred so as to enable the transferee to maintain a suit thereon by mere transfer, even without indorsement or written assignment. would apparently be much more so when, as here, we have a written assignment.

At the same time, it is odd that I can find no authorities amonget the published decisions of other High Courts.

Here, in Burma, we have a single Judge decision of Manog Kin, J., in T. A. R. A. R. M. Chetty Firm v. S. E. Eolomon (7) dated in 1919, which lays down that a negotiable instrument can be transferred as a negotiable instrument by indorsement and delivery, and as an astionable slaim by assignment in writing but that it eannot be transferred by mere delivery, so as to entitle the transferse to sue upon it. The learned Jadge was, of course, dealing with Rangoon case, where the Transfer Property Act is in force, and, so far the present case is concerned, his decision amounted to nothing more than this,that a verbal assignment of promissory. note is invalid. In the same of Babu Goridut Bogla v. Ebrahim Esoof Doopley (2) even a verbal assignment appears to have been contemplated by For, C. J, and Irwin, J.

In the present case there can be no doubt that, if the Transfer of Property Ast was in force in the District, the transaction would be covered by section 130, the fact that no notice was given under the provisions of section 131 being of no consequence. However, the said Ast was not in fores at the time with the exception of certain sections of which section 130 is not one.

The question, therefore, is whether the written assignment of this pro note was valid, and gave to the plaintiff applicant a title to maintain a suit on the instrument.

I consider that the assignment in writing was valid and that it did give the plaintiff a right of suit upon the note.

In the case of Basant Singh v. Burma Railways Co. (9) Sir Charles Fox, C. J., assumed that such a transfer of an astionable elaim could be effected within the Herzada District, but it does not appear that his attention was called to the fact that the sections in question were not in force in that District. and, really, he did not have to consider and deside the point. His desision, therefore, is of little assistance with reference to the present

Relying on the principles of the rulings quoted, I hold that this written assignment was valid, and gave the plaintiff a right of suit, quite agart from the Transfer of Property Act, which was not in force, and that this right arose under the general law, referred to by Chalmers in his work, which is quoted' in the Calcutta Weekly Notes case already referred to above. I am of the opinion that, before the Transfer of Property Act came into force at all, such a right existed, ie, a right of transfer by a written assignment, and that in places to which the sections of the Act concarned have not been extended, such a right still exists. Taking the view which I do, I consider that the learned Judge of the District Court acted illegally and without jurisdiction in deciding the case on this point adversely to the plaintiff applicant, and that this Court is entitled to interfere on revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

ORDER .- The decree of the District Court is set aside and the case is remanded to that Court for a desision on the merits. Respondent will pay the costs of this applica. tion.

of Mul Chand, the plaintiffs agreeing to pay him Rs. 2,000 within ninety days from the 30th of April 1918 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum. The plaintiffs gave the defendants cred t for certain items and sued for Rs. 1,906, the balance with interest.

The main defence of the contesting defendants was the denial of the execution of the hundi; alternatively, it was slaimed that execution by one member of the firm would not bind the other members as the money was not required for or used in the business of the firm.

The Trial Court decreed the suit. On apreal, a forther point was taken, namely, that as the hund: had not been presented the provisions of section 64 of the Negotiable Instruments Act barred the soit. The other pleas raised in the Trial Court were reiterat. ed On this new point the Court below held that this particular hundi was really a promissory note and, therefore, did not fall within section 64 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. In this view we are unable to agree; but it seems to us that the provisions of section 76 elause (d) render presentation upnecessary in this case. According to that section no presentation for payment is necessary "as against the drawer, if the drawer could not suffer damage from the want of such presentation." In this case the drawer and the drawee were the same, and, therefore, both of them knew when the hundi was executed that it was payable ninety days thereafter, and on the expiration of the ninety days, both of them knew that it had not been paid. Thue, no question of damage can arise and the cases cited are, therefore, not applicable.

There remains another point, however, which has not been decided and that is, whether, when Behari Lilexecuted this handi, he was acting for the firm, and whether the money was required for the business of the firm. On this point there is no clear finding by the District Judge, We, therefore, refer an issue to the learned District Judge, namely, did Behari Lal borrow this Rs. 2,000 for the business of the firm Behari Lal-Makurd Lal? No for her evidence will be taken. On return of the finding the usual ten days will be allowed for objective.

MUTBURANI NAIGERN O. PULAVARATTAL.

In any event, a prohibition against the senior widow's adopting should be implied from the facts of this case. The husband would not have given authority to a woman who disearded him and was living away from him for years.

Mr. A. Krishnoswami Aiyar (with bim Mr. S. Fanchapagesa Sastri', for the Respondents.—The rule of preferential right of making adoption vesting in the senior widow applies to Sudras. For all eastes adoption is a religious act though datta homam is not necessary among Sudras.

The preferential right of the senior widow is established by an even course of decision, Damara Rumara Ventatuppa Nayanim Bahadur v. Damara Fanga Boo (2), Kukerla Chukkamma v. Kakerla Punnamma (3), Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (4), Dayana Pandu v Tanu Balaram (5), and Kanjit Lal v. Bi oy Krishna (6).

The text of the Mitakshara which requires the wife who joins her bushand in making the edoption to be blameless refers only to acts of misconduct, such as unchastity. It cannot apply to more voluntary separation from the husband.

As to the implied prohibition, that can not be presumed from the mere fact of the wife's separation. There is no prohibition, express or implied, in this case.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCES, J.—The plaintiff in this suit seeks for a declaration that he is the adopted son of the deceased Ammasi Naicken and is entitled to the properties mentioned in the schedule which belonged to Ammasi Naisken in his lifetime.

Ammasi Naisken died on the 13th November 1915 of a carbunele. It is alleged that, on the morning of the day when he died, he adopted the minor plaintiff, who is the son of the deceased's second wife's brother, and that he associated the second wife, who is third defendant, with him in the act of adoption. It may here be stated that Ammasi Naisken left three wives, Pulvarthal, Sellayi and Poovayammal, and that the first wife has been living apart from him for about 25 years. As doubts were thrown upon the said adoption, it is alleged that the third defendant went through the essembly of adopting the plaintiff a second time on the 3rd Desember 1917. The Subcrdinate Judge found that the adoption alleged to have been made by Ammasi Naisken was not true, and that the adoption made by the third defendant was true but not valid.

Two questions arise for desision; first, whether the first adoption was true in fast, and, secondly, whether the second adoption was a valid adoption. On the first point I am of opinion that sufficient reason has not been shown for disturbing the finding of the lower Court. The Sabordinate Judge heard the witnesses deposing and he has good reasons for thinking that the deseased Ammaei Naisken did not adopt the plaintiff and that the in favour of the adoption was unsatisfactory. There are several circumstances which throw enspision upon the truth of the alleged adoption. One is, that the deesased was very ill on the morning of the 1 sth November and he died at 5 P. M. His third wife, the second defendant, says that he lost conscioueness on Saturday morning and that he had no control over his tongue. The act of adoption is alleged to have been made at or about the when the pray:schittim earemony was performed and at that time it is apparent that he was in extrenis. The statement of the 2nd witness for the plaintiff that the deceased was sitting up leaning against the wall and that he embraced the plaintiff and delivered him into his wife's hands 19 improbable. Very although the adoption is alleged to have been made on the 13 h of November 1915, the puthicaras statement was sent in on the let February 1915. This is signed by the Kornam who was not present at the alleged adoption but not by the Village Munsif who says he was present. It contains a statement that the obsequies of the deseased were performed by Chenga Naieken, the deseased's elder brother's son, as the agent of the adopted son. This Chenga Naisken has not been examined as a witness to prove that he asted as an agent for the minor; nor has Karuppa Naisken who, according to P. W. No. 2, had some for the adoption and is the eldest surviving Sapinda of Ammasi Naisken, been examined as witness. Then, the effect of the adoption was to disinherit all the three widows and a daughter and to make a relation of his second wife succeed to the whole of the deceased's property. when the find We second wife. defendant, propounding this adop. third tion, it suggests that she does so because she is interested in getting the property for her family.

On the second point, which is a question of law, the adoption on the 3rd December 1917 is attacked on the ground that there was no authority received by the second wife, either in writing or orally, from her husband to perform this adoption and that during the lifetime of the senior wife, the senior wife has a preferential right to make adoptions. This has been established by the decision in Damara Kumara Venkatappa Naya. nim Bahadur v. Damara Ranga Rao (2) which followed a decision of Sankaran Nair, J., and myself in Kakerla Chukkamma v. Kakerla Punnamma (3) and the Bombay and Calcutta High Courts have also held that the senior widow has a preferential right of adoption. See Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (4), Dnyanu Pandu v. Tanu Balaram (5) and Ban it Lal v. Bijcy Krishna (6), passage in the Mitaksbara that The treats of this topic has been translated in Major Basu's Yajuavalkya Smriti as follows: "When a wife of the same class (as that of the husband) exists, then religious works are not to be performed by a wife who is not of the same class." Upon this Katyayana comments, "Lot him who has many wives employ one of equal class in the case of the sacrificial fire, and in attendance on himself; but if there be many such, let him employ the eldest in those dutier; provided she be blameless." Now, it is argued that the eldest wife, Pulavarthal, had been disearded by Ammasi Naisken and, therefore, she was not in attendance on her husband and not blameless. An tempt to prove that she was an adulterous wife entirely failed. We only know that she was living apart from her husband for about 25 years, before his death. The question is, whether such separation makes her incompetent to perform the act of adoption, and thus causes the capacity to make an adoption to devolve upon the second wife. The text of Katysyana seems to me to apply to a case of adoption performed during the lifetime of the adoptive father, when he speaks of a wife being in attendance on himself. It is whether the word adushta or blameless should be interpreted so as to exclude a woman who voluntarily lives separate from her husband without having been guilty of unchastity or misonduct. So far as the facts of the separation in this case are known, there is nothing to attribute blame. worthiness to the elder wife. An adoption made by a widow without consulting the sepindas would be invalid for want of authorisation from them as it has been held that the consent of the sapindas supplies the want of the husband's authority. The other wives are sapindas and it was necessary third defendant to obtain their consent before any adoption could be made. In this case the third defendant sent a notice, Exhibit IV, to the senior wife in which she expressed her intention of confirming the adoption made by her husband and asked for an expression of her views respect of the permission given by next reversioner to her to adopt the plaintiff. When the senior wife has a preferential right of adoption, the proper course for a junior wife who wishes adoption to be made, would be to ask senior wife to get the consent of male sapindas to parform the adoption, and to perform it herself. If she was unwilling to perform it herself, it would then be soon enough to ask her to agree to the adoption ceremony being performed by the junior wife. Exhibit IV is not conched in such terms. It implies that Poovayamal was determined to carry out the coremony of adoption without giving a chance to the senior wife to adopt a son to their husband. Under the eireumstances of the present case, the absence of any relinquishment by the senior wife of her prior right of adoption invalidates the act performed by the junior wife, For these reasons, the second adoption cannot be supported as valid.

The result is, that the appeal is dismissed with sosts. The memorandum of objections is not pressed and is dismissed.

MUTHUSAMI NAICKEN &. PULAVARATTAL.

BIMESAM, J .- I agree. But I wish to add a few words. The first osession on which the adoption of the plaintiff by the deseased Ammasi Naisken was asserted Exhibit A, dated the 31st of January 1916, a petition by the second wife, the third defendant. The petition was nearly two months after the third wife sent Exhibit V and 17 days after the senior wife sent Exhibit G and was practically in reply to them. It seems to me that the delay was really due to the fact that the present adoption was concosted, in reply to the claims made by the other two widows, with the help of the Village Munsif and the Kurnam and the other male relations of the third defendant. It must be remembered in this connection. that the third defendant is the sister's daughter or niese of the fourth defendant who gives the consent. It is also significant that Vaidyanatha Iyer, the family purchit. who is said to have been present at the adoption, does not support the plaintiff's ease. I need not repeat the other reasons given by my learned brother and the Subordinate Judge with which I agree.

Coming to the question of law, the appellant's Vakil argues that the case in Damara Kumara Venkatappa Nayanim Bahadur v. Damara Ranga Rao (2) ought to be re-considered. For the reasons given by my learned brother and also for the reasons given by the learned Judges who decided the case in Dnyinu Pandu v. Tanu Balaram (5), where their Lordships say that an adoption with the concent of sapindas in Madras is not on the same footing as an adoption in an undivided family with the consent of the manager. I do not think it necessary to doubt the correctness of the former desisions of this Court.

Then it is said that, assuming that the senior widow has a preferential right to adopt, the principle does not apply to Sudras, because no religious scremonies are essential for an adoption in the case of Sudras and Puddo Kumares Debice v. Juggut Kishore Acharise (1) is relied on. In the first place it may be mentioned that the decision in Damara Rumara Venkatappa Naynim Bahadur v. Damara Ranga Ruo (2) was a case of Sudras, but the point was not expressly argued. It may be that, for

datta homam is not nesessary, but this does not mean that an adoption is not a religious act. Apart from this, as was pointed out by my learned brother and Sankaram Nair, J., in the case in Kakerla Ohukkamma v. Kakerla Punnamma the sepior wife is the wife "whom of duty concern" that is "who officiates in acts of religion and so forth." brooks Digest of Hindu Law, Book IV, Oh. i, Sloke 51. This shows that the acts of duty in which a senior wife has got a preferen. tial right need not necessarily be all religious duties. I, therefore, think that the principle is equally applicable to Sudras as well as the other classes.

The next ground on which it is said that Damara Kumara Venkotappa Nayanim Bahadur v. Damara Ranga Rao (2) does not apply to the present case is that in this case the senior wife is a disearded widow. Verse 88 of Ashara Adbyaya of Yajnavalkya was relied on in Damara Kumara Venkatappa Nayanim Bahadur v. Damara Eanga Rao (2) as one of the reasons on which the preferential right of the tenior widow is based. The translation of that verse as given in Dimara Rumara Venkatappa Nayanim Bahadur v. Damara Ranga Rao (2) runs thus: "When there is a wife of an equal elass present," etc., some stress is laid by Mr. Rangachariar, the learned Vakil for the appellant, on the word "present" in this translation. original Sanskrit is "Satyam" the meaning of "Satyam" is "being in existence" as opposed to death. The translation of this verse in Mandlik's Hindu Law, at page 173, in Major Basn's Edition of Mitakshara referred to by my learned brother the translation of Sir P. S. Sivaswami lyer in I Madras Law Journal (Journal part) 282 all show that what is meant by 'Satyam' is "existing" and not being present near,' (as opposed to being absent elsewhere). The fast, therefore, that the wife in this senior ... elsewhere does not make living taxt of Yajnavalkya inapplicable. Again, the text of Yejoavalkya, the commentary of Mitakshara on it, the verse of Katyayana and the text of Vishnu Balambhatta in the gloss of the Mitakshara and also in Colebrook's Digest, Book IV, the two latter Smritis used the MUTHOSAMI NAICERN D. PULAARVATIAL.

word "Adushta" all these are merely injunctions addressed to the busband as to what he should do during his lifetime, It may be that the husband is at liberty to disobey those injunctions, vide Annapurni Nachiar v. Forbes (7). Bat those injune tions do not touch the relative rights of the widows after the husband's death. These verses clearly prove the superior position of the senior widow. Once such superior position is established her preferential right to adopt after his death follows as an inference. In this particular case the evidence which merely shows that the senior widow was living agart from her husband for the last 25 years, apparently on assount of the second marriage of her husbard, does not justify us in ealling her a "Dushti" or "Nishiddha". As my learned brother has pointed out, the case of unchastity attempted to be made against her has failed. I think no eredence can be given to the evidence of the 6th and 9th witnesses for the plaintiff.

The last ground argued by the appellant on this portion of the case is, that a prohibition against her adopting must be implied from the facts of the case. It does not appear from the Subordinate Judge's judgment that any such point was raised in the Court below, but it is now said that the point was argued. Though, no doubt, a prohibition may be implied and need not always be expressed, such prohibition must be a case of a clear and necessary implieation, and it is not for the Courts to embark on speculations as to what the husband might have done during his lifetime or might have wished if the point was expressly mentioned to bim before hie death. One may well say the facts of this case, the husband, if he ever contemplated adopting during his lifetime, would not have associated the senior wife with him in such adoption. One may, perhaps, also say, that if he had left a Will expressly authorising an adoption he would probably have not anthorised the senior wife to adopt. But, on the other hand, one may also say that he, not having done either of these things was well content to allow the law to take its course as to what would happen after his death, and that, in the absence of any express prohibition against the senior widow, he left her to exercise the right which she has according to the Sastras. on account of her status as the senior widow. I do not think it is proper for Courts to spesulate on probabilities of this kind for the purpose of inferring an implied prohibition. If the husband was, however, anxious that the senior widow should never adopt for him, he might have left a Will in which he might have stated that the senior widow should not adopt for him, in eye his widows should contemplate adoption for him. In the absence of such an express prohibition from him or some equally elear indication of his intention, an implied prohibition eannot be inferred in this case. It was held in La's'mibai v. Sarasratib:i (8) that a prohibition ought not to be inferred from the mere fast that the husband and wife were living apart. In the ease relied on by the learned Vakil for the appellant in Dnynoba v. Radhabai (9) the much facts wera stronger; the wife was actually living in adultery with another man.

Coming to the third point argued in the ease that Exhibit IV is enough to satisfy the requirements of law in connection with the senior widow, I agrie with my learned brother in thinking that it does not, We are not here concerned with a question of obtaining her assent merely as that of a sapinds. On the other hand, until the senior widow clearly gives up her right to adopt, the junior widow has no such right. The letter in which she states that she had obtained the assent of the sapinda and was merely asking the senior widow's views followed by the silence of the latter cannot be construed to mean that the senior widow has waived her preferential right and authorised the junior widow to adopt. Not until she does any act amounting to this, can the right to adopt devolve on the junior widow. The fasts in this case fall short of this.

GANESH PRASAD SAHU &. DUKH HARAK SAHU.

Oce or two points have also been argued before us, namely, that the consent of the sapinda in Exhibit O is not a valid consent. The Subordinate Judge has found it to be so.

But we think it unnecessary to express an opinion on this question, in view of our finding with reference to the right of the senior widow not being waived. If it were necessary, I would agree with the appellant's contention, that there was no to the sopinda misrepresentation made merely because the third defendant was asserting a prior adoption by her husband. But I would hold that Exhibit C is not a valid consent, because, instead of giving the authority as one necessary and proper in the circumstances of the family, which is what a sapinda ought to address himself to, be gives it, in order to give effect to the wishes of the husband thus believing in the alleged prior adoption by the busband which we have already found to be not proved.

I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with sosts. The memorandum of objections is dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXXIX, r. 1, O. XLIII, r. 1 (n) - Injunction - Appeal - Revision - Error in erercise of jurisdiction.

Under Order XLIII, rule 1 (n) of the Civil Procedure Code, an appeal lies from an order issuing an injunction subject to a condition passed under Order XXXIX, rule 1 of the 1 ivil rocedure Code.

No revision lies on the mere ground of an error of judgment of the lower Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

Oivil revision against an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Basti, dated the 15th March 1921.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Applicant. Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT,-In my opinion this applieation for revision is without force. The Court of first instance made an order for the issue of an injunction subject to a condition. From that order an appeal was filed in the Court of the District Judge and the learned Judge modified the order in so far as it imposed a condition on the opposite party. It is urged that no appeal lay to the Court below, and that, therefore, the learned Judge had exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law. In my opinion an appeal did lie to the Court below under Order XLtiI, rule (1) (n). The order of the Court of first instance was an order passed under Order XXXIX, rule 1, and, therefore, an appeal lay from that order to the District Judge. The District Judge, therefore, had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. Whether in the exercise of the jurisdiction he committed an error of jadgment is not a matter upon which revision can lie. The application for revision is accordingly dismissed with costs.

SIN GEE MOH AND COMPANY— RESPONDENTS.

Contract-Goods, sale of Delivery period all October—Tender and refusal—Breach of contract— Re-sale—Subsequent tender and refusal—Suit for damages—Assessment of damages—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 107.

D. bought certain goods from P. and it was agreed that delivery was "to be taken ex-scale in all October 1919" On October 2nd P. called on D to take delivery but D refused: P. repeated his demand on October 4th, and on the 5th threatened to re-sell if delivery was not taken, but D. again refused, whereupon P. sold the goods and called on D. to pay the difference. Subsequently, on October 15th P. informed D. that he would give delivery on any date convenient to P. between October 15th and October 31st, but D. refused to take delivery on the ground that the re-sale having taken place before expiration of the contract period, he had exercised his option to treat the contract as rescinded. P. thereupon brought the present suit claiming as damages the difference between the contract price and the market rate of October 31st:

Held, that under the contract D. had not the option to take delivery whenever he liked in all October; that the goods having been tendered D. by refusing to take delivery had committed a breach of the contract, and P. was entitled to sue for damages on the footing of the market price on October 31st, it being immaterial whether the suit was based on the breach of contract on October 3rd, or on the breach committed on October 18th; that as at the time of the re-sale the property in the goods had not passed to D, P. could not exercise the right of re-sale under section 107 of the Contract Act, so as to enable P. to sue for damages on the footing of the results of the re-sale, and that P. was entitled to recover as damages the difference between the contract rate market rate of October 31st. [p. 512, col. 2.]

First appeal against the decree passed by Young, J., on the Original Side.

MAUNG KIN, J.—This is an appeal from a decree on the Original Side of this Court.

The facts are correctly stated in the judgment of the Trial Court as follows :-

By a contract, dated the 20th August 1919, the defendants bought from the plaintiffs 2,000 bags of new white beans delivery to be taken ez-seale in all October 1919. 2nd October 1919 the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants requiring them to come and take delivery. The defendants refused on the ord, saying the notice was "insane." The plaintiffs repeated their demand on the 4th, and on the 9th threatened to re-sell, if delivery was not taken. On the 10th the defendants descended from investive to explanation and stated that they had all Ostober in which to take delivery and would not take delivery at present. On the lith, plaintiffs wrote that they had re-sold to Mesars. Black & Co., for Rs. 8,278.40 and called on defendants to some and pay the difference. On the 15th the plaintiffs who had hitherto conducted the dispute themselves placed the matter in their lawyers' bands who wrote on that date stating that plaintiffs were willing to give delivery on any day between the 15th and 31st Ostober, convenient to defend. ants and cancelling all previous correspond. ence. The defendants in turn, now placed the matter in legal hands, and on the 18th wrote through their Advocate that the re-sale having taken place before the expiration of the contract time, they had exercised their option to treat the contract as reseinded and stated that they had already so informed them verbally. They, therefore, declined what they ealled plaintiff's new offer. On the 20th October, the plaintiffs wrote, denying that the contract was or could be rescinded and threatening an action for breach of contract if delivery was not taken in accordance with their letter of the 15th. On the 1st Novem. ber they wrote, claiming the difference between the contract price and the market rate of 31st October.

The learned Trial Judge stated in his judgment that it was not disputed that the words in the Bought and Sold Notes, "delivery to be taken ex scale in all October 1919," meant that it was to be taken whenever in all that month sellers called on defendants to do so. He held that the tender by the plaintiffs was made at a proper time and place, and that the buyers having refused to take delivery had sommitted a breach of the contract and could have been saed by the sellers. But he held that the re-sale was of the plaintiffs' goods but not of the defendants, and as before the sellers can exercise the right of re sale under section 107, Contract Act, the property in the goods BUNT HUAT & CO. v. SIN GEE MOH & CO.

must have passed to the sellers; the plaintiffs would not have been able to sue for damages on the footing of the results of the re-sale. I agree with this view. The goods were unascertained goods, and although it may be said that the sellers had appropriated part of the goods in favour of the buyers, the latter never assented to the appropriation. Therefore, at the time of the re-sale the property in the goods sold had not passed to the buyers, and the plaintiffs, the sellers, were not entitled to exercise the right to re sale.

The plaintiffs on the 15th treated the previous tender as bad and made a fresh tender. On the 18th defendants repudiated the contract and committed a breach of it. The plaintiffs then sued on that breach, assessing the damages at the difference between the contract rate and the market-rate of the 31st

October.

The learned Judge held that although the plaintiffs could have sued on the previous breach by the defendants, the second tender did not in any way prejudice their position. He observed that all that happened was that plaintiffs said they would accept defendants' contention, that their tender was improper, that they withdrew their claim for the loss on the re-sale and tendered again, and that the defendants could not prevent plaintiffs from accepting defendants' own contention. See Borrowman v. Free (1). Under the circumstances, the learned Judge saw no defence and granted a decree for the amount elaimed with costs and interest on the judg. ment-debt at the Court rate from the date of deeree till realisation.

In Leigh v. Paterson (2) the contract was for delivery in all Desember. It was held that the seller had the whole month for delivery. This case has been followed in mary other cases in England and India, as would appear presently.

The plaintiffs tendered delivery on the 2nd Ostober. The defendants refused on the 3rd, as stated before, so there was then a breach of the contract on the part of the defendants. The plaintiffs were then entitled to sue. If that tender can be held to have been treated as of no effect by the consent of both parties, the fresh tender made on the 15th having been refused on the 18th, the plaintiffe would then be entitled to one. It appears to me that it is immaterial whether the suit is based on the breash of the contract committed on the 3rd or on the breach committed on the 18th, because the damages to which the plaintiffs are entitled will have to be assessed in exactly the same way, that is to say, they would be measured by the value of the goods on the 31st October, that being the dae date of performance. This principle as to the measure of damages was first laid down in 1818 in Leigh v. Poterson (2), the case above cited.

The facts in that case are: - The defendant had agreed to supply the plaintiff with a certain quantity of tallow to be delivered all in December at 65s. per ewt. On Ostober 1st, when tallow was 71s. per ewt., the defendant informed the plaintiff that the goods were sold to another and that he would not execute the contract. On the 31st December the price of tallow was 81s. per owt. It was held that the tender of this should be regulated by the price on the 31st December. The Court said that the contract. being mutually made, could only be dissolved by the consent of both parties The defendant had all the month of December to deliver the tallow in, and the plaintiff is bound to recieve it until after the 31st. The law laid down in this case was affirmed by Phillrotts v. Evans (3).

In that case the contract was made early in January, to supply a quantity of corn to be delivered at Birmingham as soon as vessels sculd be obtained. On the 26th January the defendant gave notice to the plaintiff that he would not accept the corn, if delivered. It was at that time on its way to Birmingham, and on its arrival there, the defendant was required to ascept it, but refused, and upon this action was brought. The question was whether the damages should be ealenlated according to the market price on the 25th January when the notice was given, or the price on the last day when the contract could have been completed, vis., when the wheat was tendered for acceptance. The latter was held to be the proper rule.

In Boorman v. Nash (4) the same rule was laid down.

HUNT HUAT & CO. U. SIN GER MOH & CO.

In Hochster v. Dela Tour (5) it was laid down that where the defendant has utterly rencunced a contract, or has put it out of his power to perform it, the plaintiff may, at his option, are at once, or wait till the time when the act was to be done. But the measure of damages is the same in both cases, tie, the difference between the contract rate and the market rate on the date.

Mr. Borjorji contends that damages should, in this case, be measured by the value of the goods on the 18th when the defendants definitely repudiated the contract. The above cases show the contention to be unsustainable. See Frest v. Bright (6).

Leigh v. Pater:on (2) has been followed by Scotland, O. J., in Mansuk Das v. Rangayya Chetti (7), and also by the Calcutta High Court in Mackertich v. Nobo Coomar Ray (8).

It may be contended that in Fhillrotts v. Evans (3) and F.o.t v. Knight (6) the plaintiff did not treat the notice of repudiation as a breach of the contrast, and that that was the reason why he was allowed to see on the basis of the value of the goods at the due date. Hochster v. Dela Tour (5) shows that view to be incorrect and Mayne says on this point as follows:- "Even when the plaintiff has exercised his option of treating the contract as reseirded before the time for its completion has elarsed and has commenced bis action before that time, the damages could still be calculated with reference to the date at which it should have been carried out" (page 205 Mayne on Damages, 8th Edition) Sir Frederick Pollcok in his Indian Contract Act says that the election to take advantage of the reguliation of the contract goes only to the question of breach and not to the question of damages, and that the damages are to be calculated with reference to the date of breach only where no time was fixed for asceptance, because there is then no other measure possible. (Contract Act, 4th Edition, pages 562 and 5 3). It follows then that the plaintiffs in this case were entitled to sue for damages on the footing of the market price on the 31st October, whether their suit was leased on the breach of the 3rd of Ostober or of the 18th.

Mr. Barjorji contends that the words "delivery to be taken ex scale in all Ostober 1919," give the option to the hayers to take delivery whenever they like in all Ostober, and that it was not the option of the sellers to give delivery. Although it was not disputed in the Trial Court what the meaning of these words was, Conneel for the appellants can now dispute the correctness of the meaning assigned in that Court, because the point was one of law. I do not, however, agree with the contention. The words appears to me to mean clearly that delivery was to be given ex-scale in all Ostober, and that it was to be accepted when given. I think the point is quire simple. One cannot take delivery, until it is given. the words in question give the fore. sellers the right to deliver at any time during the month of October. Even if Mr. Barjorji's contention in this particular is correct, it does not appear to me to make any difference as to the result of the care. His eliente, the defendants, told the plaintiffs that they would not accept the tender made on the 2nd, and also the tender made on the 15th. The breach was on the part of the defendants in either case, and as I held before, damages would be assessed on the footing of the market rate of the 31st Ostober.

If it was right that the plaintiffs were entitled to claim damages only on the footing of the market-rate of the 18th October, the date on which the defendants were said to have clearly and distinctly broken the contract, the question would arise as to whether the plaintiffs should be allowed to amend their plaint accordingly. But the view I take being contrary to Mr. Burjorji's contention, there is no necessity to decide the question whether amendment should be allowed or not.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs. PR.TT, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 250-Compensation - Award of compensation by Magistrate in case triable by Sessions, validity of.

Where a case ordinarily triable only by a Court of Session is tried by a Magistrate empowered under section 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate is not competent to award compensation. The special provisions of section 30 which enable a Magistrate to try offences only triable by a Court of Session "as a Magistrate" do not make such offences "triable by a Magistrate" for the purposes of section 250, Criminal Procedure Code.

Revision against the order of the District

Magistrate, Thayetmyo.

Mr. S. S. Halkar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. B. Baneri, for the Respondents.

ORDER .- Ma E Dok was ordered by the District Magistrate, Thayetmyo, to pay compensation to the accused in Criminal Trial No. 5 of 1921 for having brought a false charge of an offense under section 376, Penal Code, against them. On revision it is urged that an offence under section 376 is triable by a Court of Session and not by a Magistrate and that, therefore, the District Magistrate had no power to pass an order for compensation under section 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The words used in the section are: "if * * a person is assused before a Magistrate of an offense triable by a Magistrate and the Magistrate by whom the case is heard discharges or acquits the accused." The words "triable by a Magistrate" would prima facis appear to refer to the schedule of statement of offeness in column 8: "By what Court triable" appended to the Criminal Procedure Code. This is the view taken in Schoni and Row's Commentaries and in the Punjab case of Crown v. Qadu (1) in which it was laid down that where a case ordinarily triable only by a Court of Session is tried by a Magistrate empowered under section 30 of the Oriminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate is not competent to award compensation. offences only triable by a Court of Session "as a Magistrate" do not make such offences "triable by a Magistrate" for the purposes of section 250, Criminal Procedure Code. I feel so doubt that this is a correct statement of the law. The object of the Legislature was apparently to exclude offences of great gravity from the provision of section 250. I set aside the order accordingly.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 63—Hearsay evidence—Statement made to investigating Police Officer by third persons, when admissible—Substantive or corroborative evidence.

In a proceeding under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the statement of a witness that he heard from certain persons who have not been examined that articles stolen in certain decoities were made over to the accused, is inadmissible in

Where in a proceeding under section 110, Oriminal Procedure Code, a person has not been examined as a witness by the Court the evidence of an investigating Police Officer with regard to the statement made to him by that person is inadmissible in evidence. If, however, the person has been examined as a witness by the Court, the evidence of the investigating Police Officer is admissible. But the statement made to the investigating Police Officer cannot be relied upon as substantive evidence against the accused. It should be used in order merely to contradict or corroborate, as the case may be, the statement made by the witness in Court. [p, 514, col. 1.]

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Debendra Narain Bhattacharyya and Lalit Mohan Sanyal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Ashraf Ali, for the Orown,

JUDGMENT.—In this case the accused before us has been directed, under the provisions of section 110, read with section 118, Criminal Procedure Code, to execute a bond of Rupees 200, with two sureties each in like amount, to be of good behaviour for one year, in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for the same period. The allegation against him was that he was by babit a receiver of stolen properties knowing the same to be stolen.

We have been taken over a considerable portion of the record, and we cannot but some to the conclusion that the trial or enquiry, in the present case has been vitiated by the admission of much inadmissible evidence; for instance, a person of the name of Gayaram, who ears that he and certain others committed dasoity at a place called Hirabati, gave evidence to the effect that be had made over the orgaments stolan in the course of that despity to the accused. That, of course, is admissible. He was further permitted to say that he beard from certain other persons that erticles stolen in three other descrities were also made over to the accused. informants have not been examined. portion of his evidence on which the Magietrate laysetress is clearly inadmissible. Then, at a search of the house of the petitioner, it is stated that a certain toering was found in his house and that toering, it is enggested, was one of the properties stelen in the course of a dacoity at the bouse of one Satis Ganguly in the village of Jagadangs. With regard to this toe-ring the Police Officers were permitted to state in the scarce of their investigation before the said Police Officers that the wife of Satis and the wife of his brother Sasadbar identified this toe-ring as belonging to Satis' wife. Neither of these two ladies was examined. Obviously, the evidence of the Police Officers with regard to the statements made to them by these two ladies is inadmis. sitle. Further, the statement supposed to have been made to the investigating Police Officer by the witness Sasadbar, the brother of Satis, has been obviously relied upon by as substantive evidence the Magistrate against the accessed, while it should have been used in order merely to contradict or corroborate, as the case may be, the etatement made by Sasadhar in the Court of the Trying Magistrate.

We next find that the statement said to have been made by a Pleader of the name of Sujey Das to the investigating Inspector has evidently been treated by the Trying Magistrate as substantive evidence against the positioner, while the statement Inspector was to be believed, should have been used at most in order to contradict Sujoy Das as regards the statement made by him in the Court of the Trying Magistrate. With regard, further, to the witness Gayaram, it is clear that he was a witness of whose evidence corroboration was necessary. What corroboration, then, is of his evidence as to what he knew of his own personal knowledge the Magistrate has not indicated. We find, further, that even in the evidence of the witnesses who speak to the reputation of the petitioner much hearsay evidence has been admitted.

For these reasons we must set aside the order new compleined of and direct that there has a re trial of this matter in the Court of a Magistrate of the First Class at the head-quarters of the District of Bankura. Such Magistrate to be nominated by the District Magistrate of Bankura, and he one other than the Magistrate in whose Court the order now set aside was made.

Burma Ercise Act (V of 1917), ss. 37, 44—Possession of excisable article, failure to account for—Offence.

A person who fails to satisfactorily account for being in possession of any excisable article, although the quantity he possesses is within the limit allowed for possession, renders himself liable to be convicted under section 37 of the Burma Excise Act. [p. 515, col. 1.]

Reference made under section 438, Oriminal Procedure Code, by the District Magistrate, Hantbawaddy.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the District Magistrate of Hanthawaddy recommending that the conviction and sentence be set aside.

The accorded was found in possession of four quarts of kazaw which he stated he purchased from a certain licensed shop. The Magistrate found that he could no satisfactorily prove his purchase, which is tentamount to saying that he could not satis' factorily account for his possession. The accused was found guilty under section 37 of the Excise Act and sentenced to pay a fine.

The learned District Magistrate contends that the conviction was wrong on grounds appearing in the following passage in his order of reference:—The Magistrate convicted the accused holding that the burden of proof was for the accused to show that he purchased the kazaw from a licensed shop and each purchaser must be given a rescipt showing that the kazaw parchased is from a licensed shop. There is no provision in the Exist Act or rules regarding the issue of receipts to purchasers. According to the Act any person may possess four quart bottles of country fermented liquor."

The Trial Magistrate held that the presumption allowed by section 44 of the Ast must be drawn against the assumed as he could not satisfactorily account for his possession and that he failed to rebut the presumption.

Because the quantity was within the limit allowed for possession, the accused could not have been convicted under section 30 (a) of the Excise Act. But section 37 provides that whoever without lawful author. ity has in his possession any quantity of excisable article, knowing or having reason to believe that the same has been unlawfully imported, transported, manufactured, oultivated or sollested, or that the preseribed duty has not been paid thereon, shall be punishable. This section is directed against the illicit manufacture, importation, ete, of any quantity of excisable article and it is, in the nature of things, nessassary to provide for a presumption against a person in possession of an excisable article and throw on him the onus of proving that his possession is not illisit, as the matter would naturally be within his special knowledge. So the Legislature provides by enacting sestion 44 that the presumption is, until the contrary is proved, that the accused has committed the offense charged under section 37 in respect of any excisable article for the possession of which he is unable to assount satisfactorily.

The Trial Magistrate has not grounded the conviction upon the fact that the accused must produce but had not produced a receipt from a licensed shop. What he said was:—"To my mind the only safe means to protect purchasers who take liquor home is to obtain a receipt from the vendor for every purchase." Primafacie, this is not a bad suggestion.

The conviction was correct. The papers will be returned.

The proposition laid down in Queen-Empress v. Tun E (1), that presession of half a quart of country spirit is no offeness and a man is not bound to assount for such mere presession is not wholly correct under the provisions of the present Excise Act.

Where a Judge, acting under section 476, Criminal. Procedure Code, orders a trial under section 193, Indian Penal Code, a High Court can only interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 516, col. 1.]

A District Judge concluded an order under section 476 charging certain persons with various offences thus:

"A copy of this order will be sent to the District Magistrate...with a request that he will cause proceedings to be instituted against the other three persons...... If the District Magistrate decides to institute proceedings he should inform the C. I D. who investigated the matter:"

Held, that the order was not in the terms of section 476, Criminal Procedure Code: but that it amounted to a complaint, and that it was in the discretion of the Magistrate to take such proceedings as he was advised. [p. 516, col. 1.]

ing a criminal conspiracy in connect on with the preparation and execution of the Will propounded, took proceedings under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code against Raja Ram, alone, in the first instance, He came to the conclusion that four persons, three of whom are now before me, should be charged with various offences. His order concludes, " A copy of this order will be sent to the District Magistrate. Saharanpur, with a request that he will eause proceedings to be instituted against the other three persons (i. e., other than Mr. Simeon). If the District Magistrate decides to institute proceedings he should inform the C. I. D. who investigated the ease." These words show that the order is not in the terms of section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In the case of Mr. Simeon, the Sub Registrar, the Judge took further proceedings under section 476, Criminal Precedure Code, and ordered his trial under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code. It has been held by the Full Bench of this Court that I can only interfere with such an order under section 115 of the Civil Prcedure Code. No grounds under that section are alleged. But it is said I can and should interfere under the Government of India Ast, on the ground that the trial must be infructuous. It has been said by a learned Judge of this Court that proceedings under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not in the nature of a dress rehearsal of the trial, and it is quite impossible for me to say at this stage what evidence will be fortheoming against Mr. Simeon. Then, an experienced Judge of the standing of the District Judge of Saharanpur, fully realising his responsibility, orders a trial for perjury committed before himself, I should be very loth to say, assuming that I have the power, that the trial shall not take place. With regard to Daulat Rai and Raja Ram, I think the order of the Judge amounts to a complaint. It is in the discretion of the Magistrate to take such proceedings as he may be advised. The result is that I reject the application.

Criminal revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Attock, at Campbell pore, dated the 29th December 1920.

Mr. Hukam Chand, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Amar Nath Ohona, for Government

Advocate, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- This is an application for revision of an order of the District Magistrate of Attock, sancelling the prior order of his predecessor under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. On the 26th November 1920, the District Magistrate recorded his opinion that from the reports sent to him oseasionally by Police Officers it appeared that there was a great apprehension of a breach of the peace on account of a dispute in regard to the temple of Panja Sahib and the houses attached thereto. He, thereordered that notices should be fore. issued to Ram Singh and others, the respondents, directing them to attend Court and file their written statements regarding possession of the property in dispute. This order was passad by Chaudhri Sultan Ahmed on the 26th November 1920. On the 29th December 1920, his suscessor, Mr. Miles Irving, said-

"From information received by me I am satisfied that the party alleged to be aggressors in this case are firmly in possession of the disputed property."

He went on to say-

"If I found the facts to be as alleged in the complaint the discertion vested in me by the first proviso to section 245 (4) would enable me to declare either the complainants or those complained against as in possession at the time of the preliminary order."

He considered, however, that neither order would assist in the preservation of the peace and resorded his opinion that there was no probability of any breach of the peace unless the complainants' party themselves interfered with the respondents. Hukam Chand on behalf of the petitioners urges that when once the prosesdings are begun the District Magistrate is bound to go on and take evidence as laid down in section 145, Oriminal Procedure Code. He says that Mr. Miles Irving had no jurisdiction to eansel his predecessor's orders in the way he did. I asked him if he had any authority to cite in support of his contentior. but he admitted that he had none. Counsel for the respondents, on the other hand, sites the ease of Maninira Chanira Nandi v. Barada Kanta Chowdhry (1), wherein it was held that a Magistrate has jurisdiction to eancel an order passed under sub-section (1) of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and to stay proceedings if he becomes satisfied, whatever the source of information may be, that the state of things does not exist, which alone would give jurisdiction to proceed with the enquiry. It was also held that the High Court could not interfere in such cases as the Magistrate had not acted without jurisdiction.

The authority cited is on all fours with the present ease. Mr. Miles Irving, upon the information received by him, was quite satisfied that there was no danger of any breach of the peace so long as the com. plainants' party kept quiet and did not interfere with respondents' possession of the property in suit. As the District Magistrate was responsible for the peace of the district, he was the best person to judge the state of affairs, and I hold, in accordance with the above authority, that he clearly had jurisdiction to eancel his predecessor's order and, this being so, this Court has no power to interfere with his order.

The petition for revision is, therefore, rejested.

I-"Extradition offence"-Absconding from jail, whether such offence-Warrant for arrest of such absconder to District Magistrate, validity of-High Court, jurisdiction of, to interfere in case of invalid warrant-Treaty prohibiting extradition in certain cases, effect of.

Absconding from jail is not an "extradition offence" as described in the First Schedule to the Extradition Act, and, as section 7 of the Extradition Act applies only to extradition offences, a warrant issued under that section by an authority in a Foreign State for the arrest of a person so absconding in British India is wholly illegal and without jurisdiction, and the arrest of that person in British India is without any authority. [p. 518, col. 2.]

The procedure for requisitioning the surrender of any person accused of having committed any offence, not necessarily an extradition crime, is laid down in section 9 of the Act but the requisition in such a case has to be made "to the Government of India or to any Local Government," Where such requisition is not made and the warrant is addressed to the District Magistrate. the latter has no jurisdiction to make an arrest

Although section 15 of the Extradition Act empowers the Government of India and the Local Government to stay any proceeding taken under Chapter III of the Act, and to direct any warrant to be cancelled and the person arrested to be discharged, yet in a case where action is taken under the Act under a warrant which is not valid, the jurisdiction of the High Court to interfere is not necessarily ousted. JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J. (November 23, 1921) - The ease raises a very important question relating to the power of the High Court with respect to fugitive offenders. The petitioner was arrested in Nepal on a charge of abstment of marder and was put in Birgunj Jail within the jurisdiction of Nepal Government. He, however, managed to escape from the jail and came to the neighbouring British territory in Bheriharwa, within the jurisdiction of the Bhaura Police Station. The Sub-Inspector of Bhaurs, on 12th April 1921, reported the above fact to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Bettiah requesting him to communicate with the Hakim of Birgunj and to pass an order for the arrest of the petitioner. On 14th April the Hakim of Birganj wrote to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Bettiah requesting him to have the petitioner arrested and promising to send the evidence of nationality and criminality to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Bettiah. Thereupon, under the orders of the Sab-Divisional Officer the petitioner was arrested on the 16th April 1921 and was remanded to Jail Hajat till the 1st May 1921. He remained in jail till the 31st May 1921 when he was released on bail under the orders of the Sessions Judge of Muzaffarpur. On the 11th June 1921 the Hakim of Birgunj forwarded to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Bettiah the evidence of nationality and eriminality referred to in his letter of the 14th April 1921. The British Envoy at the Court of Nepal cent the extradition warrant under section 7 of Act XV of 1903 (Indian Extradition Act) dated the 1st August 1921 to the District Magistrate of Champaran for the arrest and delivery of the petitioner to the Nepalese Officer of the Birgunj Amini Court. The petitioner was then arrested on the 2nd September 1921 and was remanded to Hajat pending arrangements for eccort from Nepal Authorities.

His petition for bail having been rejected on the 3rd September 1921, the Sub-Divisional Officer cancelled his order of the 2nd September and eent his report and finding to the District Magistrate to be forwarded to the higher authorities under section 3 (3), clauses 6 of the Extradition Act. The District Magistrate forwarded the papers of the case to the Commissioner of the Tirbut Division by his letter No. 8176 dated the 30th September 1921 pointing out that the order of the Magistrate sending the case to the District Magistrate for reference to the higher authorities under section 3 (3), elause o was wrong, as well as his omission to report the detention of the assused for more than two months. The District Magistrate thought that the case was governed by section 7 of the Extradition Act, that the assueed was arrested under eestion 10 of the Act, that the Magistrate was bound to execute the warrant and to forward the petitioner to the Nepal Authorities as directed therein, and that the petitioner's only sourse was to move the Local Government under section 15 of the Act The Commissioner agreed with the District Magistrate and returned the papers to him with the result that the matter has not been referred to the Loca! Government and the petitioner is now in Bettiah Jail to be forwarded to the Nepal Authorities. In the meantime, the petitioner same up to this Court with a pstition challenging the jurisdiction of the Bettiah Magistrate to arrest him and detain him in the jail as stated above. A rule was accordingly issued by this Court upon the District Magistrate to show cause and the ease has now come before us.

The warrant in execution of which the petitioner has been arrested is expressed to have been issued under section 7, Ast XV of 1903 (The Indian Extradition Ast), and is to the District Magistrate of addressed Champaran, Motibari. It runs as follows "whereas Jaipal Bhagat, being a Nepalese subject, assured of absconding from jail, has fled from Nepal to British territory, and is at present in your jurisdistion, this warrant is to authorise you to arrest and deliver the above named person to the Nepalese Officer of the Birganj Amini Court at Birganj in Nepal". Section 7 applies only to an "extradition offence." "Extradition offence" has been defined by section 2 of the Act to mean any such offence as is described in the First Sebedule". Absending from jail is not one of the offences mentioned in that Schedule. Therefore, section 7 has no application at all and the warrant in question issued by the British Envoy at the Court of Nepal for the arrest of the petitioner is without jurisdiction. The report of the District Magistrate to the Commissioner referred to above shows that the petitioner was arrested under the provisions of section 10 of the JAIPAL RHAGAT U. EMPESOR.

Code; but that section scald only apply if the warrant under section 7 was legal; but, as shown above, the warrant was wholly illegal and without jurisdiction. Therefore, the arrest of the petitioner also was without any authority.

No doubt, section of 15 the Ast empowers the Government of India and the Local Government to stay any proceedings taken under Chapter III of the Ast and to direct any warrant to be cancelled and the person arrested to be discharged. But that does not necessarily out the jurisdiction of this Court to interfere in a case where the action under the Act has not been taken under a valid warrant.

In Rudolph Stallmann, In re (1) it was pointed out that the section does not take away the power of the Court to issue habeas corpus or directions in the nature of that writ, inasmcob 8.0 neither that sestion nor any other provision of the Ast has expressly taken away the power of the Court with respect to habers corpus. Similar was the view expressed in the case of Emperor v. Huseinally Nizeally (2). Russell, J., observed as follows: "As was pointed out by Mr. Branson in his argument, there was some difficulty in assertaining what the assessed really were praying for ; but Mr. Davar in his reply put it thus: - Tais Court can order the District Magistrate to hold his hand until the warrant is shown to be legal.' The objection to this, however, is that by section 15 of the Extradition Act it is 'the Government of India or the Local Government' (not the High Court) who may, by order, stay any proceedings taken under this Chapter, and may direct any warrant issued under this Chapter to be cancelled ... This escion ousts the jurisdiction of this Court to inquire into the propriety of the warrant, but leaves open the question of this Court's power to interfere with a Magistrate's action, if it was proved that such action was consequent upon a warrant issued by a Political Agent which was plainly illegal".

The above remark exactly applies to the present case. The procedure for requisitioning the surrender of any person accused early an extradition erime, is laid down in testion 9 of the Act but the requisition in such a case has to be made "to the Government of India or to any Local Government." In the present case no such requisition was made; therefore, the warrant in question, which was addressed to the District Magistrate of Champaran, cannot possibly be supported under section 9 either vide also Gulli Sahu v. Emperor (3).

The contention of the learned Counsel on behalf of the patitioner as to the illegality of the warrant and the want of jurisdiction of the Magistrate of Champaran to arrest the patitioner and detain him in jail under the authority of that warrant appears to us to be substantial. We, however, do not think that there is any substance in the other contentions of the learned Counsel. If proper action was taken under section 9 of the Ast, perhaps, the objection of the learned Counsel as to the legality of the arrest and detention of the prisoner would not have been valid, nor his contention that a fagitive offender of the Nepal territory could not be arrested in British India for offences other than those enumerated in the Treaty between the Nepal Government and the British Government. Treaty with the State of Nepal, dated the 10th Fabruary 1835, A. D. together with memorandum dated 24th June 1881 supplemented thereto.

Reliance is placed upon section 18 of the Extradition Ast to abow that sestion 9 should be deemed to have been controlled by the Treaty, inasmush as nothing in the Act has been designed to derogate from the provisions of the Treaty for the extradition of offenders. That contention does not appear to be sound. If the Treaty probibits extradition for offenses not spesified therein such prohibition overrides the provisions of the Schedule by virtue of scotion 15, but there is no such prohibition in the Treaty and, therefore, sostion 9 does not in any way derogate from the provisions of the Treaty. The Ast practically enhances the power of the Nepal dovernment to requisition the authorities in the British territories to arrest and deliver fugitive offenders of their territory.

There appears to be some misapprehen.

sion of the offence said to have been committed by the prisoner in Nepal. The report of the District Magistrate says that the petitioner escaped from the Nepal territory where he was kept awaiting trial for murder. The evidence forwarded by the Nepal Government to prove the eriminality of the prisoner disclose "would only at the best" a charge of abetment of murder. Abetment of murder is not one of the offences mentioned in the Treaty. tion 13 of the Act, however, makes the provisions of Chapter III apply to abetment of offences also. The evidence, however, forwarded by the Nepal authority does not disclose anything against the petitioner beyond a vague hearsay evidence of his having offered to certain people some money to cause murder of certain persons.

The matter raised in this application is of great importance and we do not think that we would be justified in passing final orders in this case until we hear the learned Government Advocate. We, therefore, request the learned Government Advocate to go through the papers of the case and to appear in the case at an early date.

Ross, J.—I agree.

JWALA PRASAD AND Ross, JJ.—We have heard the learned Government Advocate who eave that he has considered the law and authorities in the case and that he cannot take any exception to the view expressed in our decision of the 23rd November 1921.

We, therefore, hold that the petitioner was arrested under an illegal warrant and we, therefore, direct that he be released at once.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 138 of 1921.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 113 of 1921.

November 15, 1921.

Officiating Chief Justice.

In re KOMARAN AND ANOTHER—

Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 42 (2), 47 (1) (b), 109—Reservation of compartment for a class, legality of—Reservation of compartment, method of—Person entering compartment not reserved for him—Offence.

A Railway Company has the right to regulate its own traffic in its own way, and is competent to reserve accommodation for a passenger or class of passengers, and such reservation is not forbidden by section 42 '2) of the Railways Act as being an undue or unreasonable preference in favour of a particular description of traffic; section 109 of the Act contemplates such reservation for possible and actual passengers, [p. 523, col. 1.]

The Traffic Working Orders of a Railway Company required that the reservation of a compart. ment of a Bailway carriage for a class should be effected by affixing to both sides of the compart. ment, a printed card, signed or initialled by the Station Master, in a space provided for the purpose : notwithstanding these orders, the reservation of a compartment of a Third Class Railway Carriage was effected by affixing to the compartment, under the orders of the Station Master, two slips of paper bearing the words "Reserved for Europeans and Anglo-Indians", and initialled by the Ticket Examiner, and the question was whether the reservation was in contravention of the rules of the Railway, so as to render immune from prosecution any person not of the class for whom the compartment was reserved who entered the compartment:

Held, that the reservation was not in contravention of the rules of the Railway, and any person entering such compartment who was not of the class for which it had been reserved, and refusing to leave it when requested to do so, rendered himself liable to prosecution under section 109 of the

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub Divisional First Class Magistrate, Coimbators, in Criminal Appeals Nos. 44 and 45 of 1920, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Talua Second Class Magistrate, Avanashi, in Calendar Case No. 155 of 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. S. Sreenivasa Aiyangar and A. C. Sampath Iyengar, for the Petitioners.—Recervation of compartments for a class is not anthorised by any of the provisions of the Railways Act. Reservation for exclusive use of Anglo Indians is illegal. The reservation cannot be deemed to be "for another passenger" within the meaning of the expression in section 42 (2).

The compartment was not properly notified as having been reserved. Under section 172 (a) of the Traffic Working Orders which was in force on the day of the alleged offence, the reservation must be effected by affixing a printed eard containing the initials or signature of the ROMARAN, In re.

Station Master. That provision has been disregarded and the putting up of a writing signed by the Ticket Examiner is no proper substitute for the rule. No doubt the Station Master verbally intimated that the reservation was under his orders. But the rule does not recognise verbal orders.

The reservation of accommodation for a class is an unreasonable preference in favour of a particular description of traffic which is forbidden by section 42 (2). If the compartments reserved are, as generally found, empty and there is overcrowding in the unrestricted compartments, it is an unreasonable preference of the favoured class.

Mr. V. L. Ethiroj, for the Public Proseentor, for the Crown.—The Railway Company has the right to regulate its traffis and to so arrange assummodation as to sesure the general comfort and convenience of the travelling public.

Reservation for a class is reservation for the use of "another passenger" in section 109 (1) of the Railways Act. The expression "another passenger" should not be unduly narrowed in its significance.

The Traffic Working Orders are only a guide for Railway servants and are not exhaustive. They neither forbid the exercise of discretion by Railway Officers in sertain contingencies. The accused are not entitled to rely on technical infringements of those orders to justify their entry into a reserved compartment. As a fact, the Station Master verbally intimated to them the fact of reservation and asked them to go out. But the accused persisted in staying in the compartment and wanted only a test case and an authoritative desireion thereip.

Section 41 prohibits the accused from taking proceedings for anything done in contravention of the provisions.

The expression 'traffie' in sestion 42 (2)

is restricted to goods and animals.

This case coming on for hearing on the 20th and 21st of September 1921, upon perusing the petition and the judgments of the lower Courts and the material papers in the case and upon hearing the arguments of the Counsel and the case having stood over for consideration till the 7th October 1921, the Court (Oldfield, J., and Krishnan, J.,) made the following ORDER.

OLDFIELD, J.—We are asked to interfere in revision with the conviction of accreed of an offence punishable under section 109 (1) of Act IX of 1890 and their sentences, each to pay a fine of Rs. 5-C-O or in default to suffer one week's simple imporisonment.

There was some dispute as to the facts in the lower Courts; but I take them as found to be that, on 2nd May 1920, accused pagsengers at Mettuypalayam Station by the Madras Mail train, entered and persisted in remaining in a Third Class Compartment, to which a card had been attached, purporting over the initials only of the Senior Ticket Examiner to reserve it for Europeans and Angle-Indians. The questions argued before us are whether (1) the attaching of such a eard sould effect a reservation at all (2) whether a reservation for Europeans and Anglo-Indians ie, in the words of section 109 (1), a reservation for the use of another passenger, (3) whether a reservation for those classes is, with reference to section 42 (2), within the powers of the Railway and can be resognised by a Oriminal Court.

The second of these questions raises the general point of construction, whether the reference in the section to reservation for another passenger ocvers reservation for a slass. It cannot, in my opinion, be answered by direct reference to any portion of the Act. since there is no definition of the term passenger' and it is not possible to define it, as we are asked to do, with reference to section 68, as "a person who actually enters a Railway carriage for the purpose of travelling," in view of its wider use in other sections, of which section 51 (e) with its mention of "means of transport which may be required for the convenience of passengers ... carried or to be earried" is the elearest. Nor, with all respect, is it sufficient to rely on section 23, General Clauses Act (X of 1897), and the principle that the singular includes the plural or on the analogy of reservation for a Regiment or Theatrical Company referred to by

KOMARAN, In Te.

Waleh, J., in Bri bisi Lal v. Emperor (1). For in such cases the reservation would, it is to be supposed, have been made in sonsequence of an application, on which the number and identity of the passengers would have been, at least approximately, ascertained. But that will not be the case as regards the class of European or Anglo-Indian passengers, until they take their tickets or at least intimate their intention to travel; and it is significant that, as the Traffic Working Orders of the Railway produced by the Pablic Prosecutor show, reservation for the class now in question has to be made at the starting station of all long distance main line trains, whether or no passengers of that class are there, to provide for the contingency of their travelling from later stations. In the present care there is in fact the evidence of prosecution witness No. 1, the Station Master, that seven or eight Anglo-Indians were in the compartment, when accoused tried to enter; and, as there were in the present case actual passengers to benefit by the reservation, it may on that ground be held to be of the kind contemplated by section 109. We have, however, been asked to deal with the case on general considerations; and we have then to decide whether the reservation referred to in that section is one for an actual passenger or passengers or includes reservation for possible passengers also.

No relevent authority relating either to Railways or to general sanons of interpretation has been cited; and here, as in connection with the next branch of the defence argument, the decision must be based on the policy of the Statute as a whole as well as the terms of the particular provision under construction. The Railways Act, as its preamble states, is intended to consolidate, amend and add to the law relating to Railways. But there are, and, in view of the complexity of modern Railway working, must be many things usually and properly done by a Railway, for which no explicit legal provision is made. There is, for instance, no such provision for the maintenance of waiting rooms or refreshment rooms or, what is material for the present purpose, for any reservation of accommodation on trains, except in cases in which it is compulsory, for females under section 64 or infected persons under sestion 71 (3). It is true that, under section 47 (1) (b), the Railway Company is to make general rules consistent with the Act for providing for the accommodation and convenience of passengers, which under elance (3) of the section shall take effect, if the sanction for them of the Governor-General in Council is obtained. But the object and result of making with such sanction is only to make their breach an offence punishable by the Courts. It is not obligatory to obtain that eanetion, if the Railway sees its way to enforce the rule without it or a penalty is provided incidental. ly in some other portion of the Act; and the existence of such unsanctioned rules is recognised explicity in section 101 (b), see also Emperor v. Weir (2). The considerations arising in connection with section 42 (2) will be dealt with later; but, apart from them, the Company has, in the words of Lord Halsbury in Ferth General Station Committee v. Ross (3), "an absolute right to regulate its own traffic in its own way, its own interest being the best sesurity that its strict legal right to do so will not be abused." Generally, then, it is legitimate for it to exercise the power, its possession of which is recognised in section 109, to reserve accomodation in assordance with its own view, whether of the prospect of direct and immediate profit or of the wider considerations originating in its desire to secure the general comfort of the public; and in making a reservation for a elass it must be supposed to bave acted, as it is entitled to de, on one or other of these motives.

Reservation for a class, such as is in question in the present case, being legitimate, the only question is whether it can be enforced by the special procedure provided in section 109, or whether resort must be had to the more cumbrous methods afforded by the general law, a prosecution for criminal trespass or a suit for an injunction. And here the conclusion in favour of the legitimacy of reservations for a class is material. For, as they are legitimate, there is no reason why the special remedy afforded by restion 103 should not be regarded as available to enforce them equally with others, the mischief, the infringement of the Company's right to control its passenger traffic in its own way, being in all eases of reservation the same. In these circumstances, the conclusion must be that reservations for possible and actual passengers are equally contemplated by section 109 and that the compartment entered by accused in this case was reserved for another passenger within the meaning of that section.

The right of a Railway Company to regulate its own traffic in its own way is again material in connection with the question whether that compartment had in fact been reserved at all. For the argument on accused's behalf is, that it had not, inasmuch as under the Company's Traffic Working Orders Nos. 52 (a) and 172 (a) reservation can be made only by affixore of a card signed by the Station Master, as though a Station Master had no powers control traffic in his station independently of the existence of a rule and only a reservation made in strict compliance with those orders need be recognised by the public. But, as the Station Master deposed, the orders are not available to the public, and they are not general rules, published under section 47, to which clause (6) of that section applies. They, therefore, in no way resemble a power-of attorney, from which the Station Master's authority to deal with the public in this or any other matter is derived, but are merely the domestie code, which every organization, as large as the South Indian Railway, must formulate for the guidance of its employees. The Company may and doubtless does insist on adherence to them and in the matter now in question such adherence would secure a reasonable and convenient notice to the public of the fact of reservation. But they do not provide the only or an obligatory way of giving such rotice; and, when, as in the present ease, it ean be shown to have in fact been given and the reservation to have been effected by another nethod, there is no reason why the result of the adoption of that method should be disregarded. For the facts found are that, when assured had entered the compartment in defiance of the card initialled by the Senior Treket Inspector purporting to reserve it, the Station Master told them that it was reserved and asked them to go eleewhere. So far as the right to reasonable notice of the reservation is concerned, the assused cannot find fault with this procedure, since they had clear notice from an authority, whose competence in the matter is beyond dispute; and, so far as the validity of the reservation thus effected is conserned, it is useless to consider whether the facts are within the principle of ratification as laid down in Keighley, Maxted & Co. v. Durant (4) where the clear ground of decision is available, that the Station Master by what he said simultaneously reserved the compartment and informed the accused of the reservation. The objection that the reservation thus made and the notice of it to accused and other members of the public were oral instead of by a written card is unsustianable on the view which I take of the scope of the Traffie Working Orders, the only foundation on which accused's claim to notice of the latter description has been supported.

Two general objections have been taken by the learned Public Prosecutor to our dealing with the merits of accused's remaining contention, that based on section 42, He has arged first that they are debarred from it, because the taking of proceedings, except as provided by the Act, for anything done or any emission made by the Railway in contravention of that or any other provision in Chapter V is probibited by section 41. It is a sufficient answer that accused, in alleging such contravention in defense in the lower Courts or prosecuting these revision proceedings on the basis of its occurence, cannot be said to have taken proceedings. Next, it is urged that the expression "traffic" in section 41 (2) can be and is used only in connection with the conveyance of animals and goods and the fixing of charges therefor. But this is opposed to the definition of "traffie" in section 3 (11), as including "rolling-stock as well as passengers, animals and goods," I, therefore, turn at once to the contention on which assueed rely, that the reservation of assommodation for Angle Indians or any other class of passengers is an undue or unreasonable preference in favour of a particular description of traffis, which section 42 (2) forbids.

This contention was supported by no authority; and in fact the reason for treating these reservations as infringements of the section was put in two ways only, that compartments reserved for Anglo-Indians are frequently empty or almost empty, when other passengers suffer inconvenience owing to over. erowding in other compartments, and that it is an unreasonable preference to allow Anglo. Indians access, not only to the compartments reserved for them, but also to the rest of the train, to which ordinary passengers are restricted. These sonsiderations must, in the absense of any other suggested test, be dealt with in the light of common experience: and they do not seem to me to correspond with any intention on the part of the Railway to give a preference. They cannot, it is observed, be connected with the distinct question whether the accommodation provided for ordinary passengers was in the acoused's train or is usually sufficient or as generous as such passengers would desire. Then, firstly, the alleged inconvenience to other passengers is not necessarily the consequence of one compartment being reserved; nor. if it were not reserved, would it necessarily be available to provide them with increased accommodation. And, secondly, there is no reason for supposing that Anglo Indians, contrary to their own convenience, use the unreserved portion of a train in preference to that reserved for them to an extent which affords a grievance of any substauce. Spesial treatment of a elass need not involve a preference in its favour or more than, in the words of Piggott, J., in Bir, basi Lal v. Emperor (1) already referred to, " provision by the Railway for the accommodation and convenience of its passengers generally, taking a broad view of its practical effect; "and it has not been shown how any other consideration is in question here. It is, in fact, as Walsh, J., said in his fuller judgment, "merely a case of providing for the general convenience of the travelling public, which has been left by the Legislature in India, as it has always been left by the Legislature in England ... to of experienced the disretion Administrators;" and we must accept the exercise of that discretion as legitimate in the present case, in which the contrary has not been shown. In my opinion, therefore, the argument based on section 42 (2) must be rejected.

No ground having been shown for interference in revision, I would dismiss the petition.

KEISHNAN, J.-With all respect for my learned brother, I regret I am unable to concur with him in this case; for I have come to the conclusion that the accused are entitled to be acquitted on the short ground that the Third Class Compartment in question proved to have been properly reserved for Europeans and Anglo. prosecution alleged. It Indians as the is conceded by the Station Master of Mettupalayam, prosecution witness No. 1, that the label that was on the carriage door was not the usual printed label issued by the Railway Company similar to Exhibit I. but was only a piece of paper on which was written "reserved for Europeans and Anglo-Indians;" it did not bear his signature or initials. The initials on it "A. V. D. " were, he says, those of his Ticket Examiner. He also admitted in eross-examination, and other witness corroborated it, that there was no rule authorising him to delegate the power of signing the label to the Ticket Examiner,

At the time this incident happened, the rule was that the Station Master should sign or initial the reserve label as shown by the form of the eard in rule 172 (a) of the Traffic Working Orders then in force and by Exhibit I that is produced. The rule was changed in January this year so as to enable the Senior Ticket Examiner to sign the label at stations where there are Ticket Examiners (See rule 260 of the new rules) : and Mettupalayam Station is one of those stations. But this change of rule does not affect the present case as the incident in question took place in May 1920. It is thus clear that the compartment in question did not bear a proper label reserving it for Enropeans and Anglo Indians.

The question then is, are the accused liable to be punished under section 109, Indian Railways Act, for entering such a compartment and refusing to leave it when asked. I will assume in deciding it that the section applies to a case of reservation for a class of persons like Anglo-Indians and is not confined to cases of reservation for specific individuals. It seems to me that before a person can be punished under the section it must be shown that the compartment was properly reserved according to the Railway rules. The Traffic Working Orders may not be issued to the public but the travelling public knows what is done every day when compartments are reserved, and I think a passenger who knew the rule in force was entitled to disregard a reserved label put upon a compartment unless it was properly authenticated by the initials or signature of the Station Master. The Station Master himself has to observe the formalities required by the rules before he ean properly reserve a compartment as his own authority to do so is given to him by the Railway Administration subject to the rules. It is said that because the Station Master himself in the present case told the accused that the compartment had been reserved they should have assepted his word for it. I am not satisfied that the assused were bound to accept his oral statement and act on it. In fact, as mentioned in the judgment of Appellate Magistrate last paragraph, the accused objected that the elip attached to the compartment was not an "authorised document" and requested the railway officials to put up an "authorised" one, but that was not done. I am not prepared to say, in these circumstances, that the accused were committing an offence under section 109 in continuing to remain in the compartment. Whether they have transgressed any other rule or sestion we need not onsider.

It is true the lower Courts have found that the compartment was reserved but I am unable to treat their finding as one of fact and accept it, as they have not considered the question from the point of view I have adopted. I would reverse the conviction and direct the fines if paid to be refunded.

In the view I take, it is not necessary to discuss the other questions dealt with by my learned brother and I express no opinion about them.

BY THE COURT,—As we differ, the case must be laid before the Chief Justice for orders as to its further disposal.

This case came on for hearing under section 439 (1), Criminal Procedure Code on the 9th November 1921, and stood over for consideration till this day, the Court made the following

ORDER

AYLING, OFFJ. C. J.—The facts of this case and questions arising for decision have been fully set out in the judgment of my brother Oldfield, and it is unnecessary for me to recapitulate them. The case comes before me in consequence of a difference of opinion between the learned Judges as to whether in this particular case, assuming the Railway Company to be legally entitled to reserve a third class compartment for the use of Europeans and Anglo-Indians, the reservation had been properly effected so as to render the action of the petitioners punishable under section 109 of the Railways Act.

The questions involved in the Railway Company's general power of reservation have been exhaustively discussed by Oldfield, J., whose conclusion is identical with that arrived at by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court [Birjbasi Lal v. Emperor (1)] though in one respect, the scope of section 42 of the Railways Act, he has taken a different view. Krishnan, J., bas expressed no opinion on this part of the case : and I am not altogether elear, whether, with reference to the terms of section 429, Criminal Procedure Code, I am called upon to deal with it. I have, how. ever, heard the matter fully argued by Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar and by Mr. Ethiraj who appeared for the Public Prosecutor; and, as a result. I entirely agree with the conclusions arrived at by Oldfield, J., and feel it unnecessary to add anything to his reasoning.

Coming to the point of difference, it is really a very small one. There is no doubt that the usual method of reserving a compartment is by the affirment on both sides thereof of a printed eard signed or initialled by the Station Master in a space provided for the purpose. In the present case two words "reserved for Europeans and Auglo-Indian" and initialled by the Ticket Examiner. It is explained that this was due to the stock of eards having run out. The argument put forward for the petitioners is that this irregularity invalidates the reservation of the compariment, so that their action in ignoring it amounts to no offence.

I have not been referred to any rule from which I could say that a compartment can only be legally reserved by a label or notice signed or initialled by the Station Master. The only Code of rules referred to is the Company's Traffic Working Orders, which are clearly intended for the guidance of the Company's servants, rather than the information of the public. But even in this I find nothing to the effect indicated. Rule 174 which authorises the reservation of a third class accommodation for Europeans and Anglo-Indians says nothing as to the official by whose orders the accommodation is to be effected. It runs:-One third elass compartment only may be reserved by the long distance main line trains and by the principal connection trains on the branches and labelled as follows:- "For Europeans and Anglo-Indians'. Guards and Station-Masters should see that even when there are no Europeans or Anglo Indians travelling. others are not allowed to occupy the compartment." So far as this is concerned, the affixment of the paper labels spoken to in evidence would meet the requirements of the rule. The only other rule quoted is rule 172 (a) which runs thus:- "When accommodation in any train is reserved, the Station Master who has to arrange for the assommodation will label the carriage or compartment on both sides and enter the number of the carriage or compartment and the class of accommodation provided in the Vehicle Way-bill with the stations from and to which they are so reserved, and the Guard will be responsible for seeing that the accommodation is reserved ascordingly."

Now, it may perhaps be deduced from this that the reservation has been effected by orders of the Station-Master only—but I can find nothing more. The direction that he should label the carriage or compartment, of course, does not imply that he must do so with his own hands or sign the label. The form given in the example to the rule refers not to the label, but to the entry in the Vehicle Way bill, and in this connection, my learned brother, Krishnar, J., if I may say so with respect, appears to have been under a slight misapprehension. It is in evidence and apparently not disputed, that the labels were affixed to this carriage under the orders of the Station Master; and that on being referred to he informed the petitioners that this was so. The most that can be said is that the reservation was not effected by the affixment of the usual printed cardnot that it was in contravention of the Company's rules.

I may add, though it is hardly material, that it is clear from first patitioner's own statement that this was not the essence of their objection: he says he objected to the unauthorised form of the label and requested the Railway Oficials "to put an authorised document (i.e., label) so that we could then test the right of reservation, if necessary." In other words, the petitioners were prepared to remain in the compartment even if a printed label signed by the Station Master had been affixed so as to test the Company's general right of reservation. This was, in fact, their object, as they frankly admit. They knew the reservation was under the Station Master's orders and they were anxious to have the irregularity. such as it was, remedied so that there could be no chance of the Court, before which the resultant ease would some, failing to determine the larger question.

In my opinion, it cannot be said that the procedure adopted in this case was such as to invalidate the reservation.

There are no grounds for interference and the revision petition must be dismissed.

Where the notice issued by a Magistrate purporting to act under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, shows that he was satisfied that there was a serious dispute between the parties, the pro. ceeding is one contemplated by section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, even though there is no finding in it about any likelihood of a breach of the peace.

Under section 435, clause (x, of the Criminal Procedure Code a High Court is precluded from interfering in revision in a matter under section 145 of the Code.

Oriminal revision from an order of Sub Divisional Magistrate, Jaunpur, dated 17th Desember 1921.

Mr. S. N. Mukerii, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT .- Under section 435, clause (3), I am precluded from interfering in revision in a matter under section 145, Oriminal Procedure Code. It is, however, contended that this is not a proceeding contemplated by that section, because it is said that there is no Suding that there was any likelihood of a breach of the peace. It is true that there is no finding directed to this fact, but the notice shows that the Magistrate was satisfied there was a serious dispute between the parties and, in consequence, he issued the notice, and in the judgment it appears that there is a quarrel between the parties with reference to the possession of several plots of land. I cannot say that this is not a proceeding contemplated by section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. I, therefore, eannot interfere. The application is rejected.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 82, offence under -Fraudulent or dishonest intention, whether essential -Sanction to prosecute, whether necessary-Identifying witness, statement by, nature of-Penalty, when incurred.

A fraudulent or dishonest intention is not essential for an offence under section 82 of the Registration Act, nor is sanction necessary to prosecute for such an offence. [p. 528, col. 1.]

A witness who purports to identify the executant of a document before a Registering Officer must be in a position to depose without the possibility of error to the identity of the person he is identifying. Merely identifying a person as soand-so, on the strength of having been told that he was so-and-so by some other person and with no actual knowledge of the facts would make the witness liable to the penalties of section 82 of the Registration Act. [p. 528, col. 2.]

Criminal revision of an order of the Criminal Appeal No. 124 of 1921, decided on the 24th September 1921.

Messrs. M. Gupta, M. R. Bobde, and D. T.

Mangalmurti, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. R. Randit, for the Non-Applicant, JUUGMENT:-The applicant, Nilkanth Krishna Sadaphal, is a practicing Pleader at Chanda. He has been convicted under section 82 (a) of the Registration Act and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100 and the conviction has been upheld in appeal. The facts found are these. Aba. Dada, Vithoha and Ramehendra are four They live at Kolari in the Warora Tabeil. They executed a general power of attorney, Exhibit P-1, wished to have it registered at Chanda instead of at Warora where the document registerable. Dada, Vithoba and Ramehandra came to Chanda, Aba could not some as he was suffering from small-One Daji accompanied the three brothers to personate Aba. Dada went to Sadaphal and told him to arrange to get the power-of attorney registered at Chanda. Sadaphal took a power of attorney, Exhibit D.1, from the three brothers and Daji, who signed it as Aba, and presented it with an application to the District ReMILKANTH RAO SADAFUL C. EMPEROR.

gistrar. Permission was obtained to register Exhibit P-1 at Chanda and it was so registered, the applicant identifying Daji as Aba in those registration proceedings.

The defence was, that Dada and Vithoba were personally known to the Pleader and that Dada told him that the power had been executed by all four brothers and that all had some there to get it registered. The Pleader had no reason to distrust the statement and, relying on the previous knowledge of Dada and Vithoba, honestly believed that Daji was Aba and identified him as such.

Section 82 (a) of the Registration Act runs:— Whoever intentionally makes any false statement, whether on cath or not, and whether it has been recorded or not, before any officer acting in execution of this Act, in any proceeding or erquiry under this Act; or shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both."

(d) abets any thing made punishable by this Act;

It may be stated that fraudulent or dishonest intentions are not essential for offences under section 82 of the Registra. tion Act. No sanction is necessary for an offence under section 82 of the Registration Act. See Firamu Nadathi, In re (1) and see Gopinoth v. Kuldip Singh (2). of part I of Registration Rule 22 Manual states as follows-" Registering Officers shall personally, and not through their moharirs, enquire into the identity of persons not previously known to them, who appear before them in connection with doenments presented for registration or the authentication of powers-of-attorney under section 33. They shall require identification in such cases by the evidence of witnesses. The best witnesses to select for this purpose, when any such are present at the office, are persons in a publie or quasi-public position, such as Patels Patwaris, Officers of the Court, Pleaders and the like,"

It is essential for the Registering Officer to ascertain not only that each witness knows the name and address of the person be identifies but also how his knowledge was acquired. An acquaintance formed in the Registering Office, while registration proceedings are going on, is not a sufficient qualification for an identifying witness. Each witness should be examined separately.

It is here argued that the Pleader took reasonable care and his identification was not intentionally false and, therefore, no. offience under the Act has been committed. I am not pressed with this argument. In my opinion, the applicant acted with great want of sare before he was qualified by actual knowledge to testify to the identification of Abs. The identifying witness must be in a position to depose without the possibility of error to the identity of the person he is identifying. Merely stating that he knows that a person is so andso, because he has been told he is so and. so by some other person and with no actual knowledge of the facts would, in my opinion, make the identifying witness liable to the penalties of section 82 of the Registration Act. Once it is allowed that any person sculd identify A because B had told him that A was A without any real knowledge the door would be open to great irregularities and to fraudulent personations before the Sub-Registrar. In these cases the identifying witness must not think that the person he is identifying is that person because he has been told so, but must only identify him because he knows he is the person he represents himself to be. The offence has been committed. It is due doubtless to negligence and to the idea of helping his elients rather than to any dishonest or It is due to gross fraudulent motive. earelessness and does not, in my opinion, evince any moral turpitude. With these remarks, I dismiss this application for revision.

A transferee from an occupancy tenant, although in law a trespassor, has a possessory right good against all the world except the true owner, i. e., the body of zemindars, and a person who is not a member of such body cannot forcibly oust him from possession without being liable for damages, (p. 580, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 30th April 1920.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant. Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- This is an appeal arising out of a suit for resovery of damages for misappropriation of crops, Bam Ghulam was an ossupancy tenant. He died a long time ago leaving a son, Mangru. He died. leaving a widow, Musammat Tapesara, who remained in possession of the ossupancy holding. The defendant Rameshwar was a sub-tenant of Musammat Tapesara, In 1915 the defendant Rameshwar acquired a frastion of the Zemindari share also. Tape. sara sued to ejest Rameshwar as her subtenant and he pleaded proprietary title. The Revenue Court referred the defendant, Rameshwar, to the Civil Court for a declaration of his title. On the 15th of January 1917 the Civil Court held that Rameshwar was only a sub-tenant. On the 21st of March 1917 the Revenue Court accordingly ordered his ejectment. On the 22nd of May 1917, when Rameshwar's crops were standing on the fields, formal possession was delivered to the lady. She on the 5th of September 1917 executed a permanent lease of the plot to the plaintiff. So far the facts are not disputed. The village. The defendant cannot now claim plaintiff alleges that after the cane crop had been sut, (according to the finding of the plaintiff who slaims through Musammat February or March 1918) the defendant left the fields and then the plaintiff sowed kodo, paddy and other food grain in 1325 Fasli, but the defendant interfered with the plaintiff's possession. There were proseedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and, on the 27th of October 1918, the Criminal Court gave its decision against the plaintiff and the defendant then misappropriated the crops sown by the plaintiff. The present suit was brought on the 17th of January 1919 recovery of damages. The defence raised was that Tapesara being an occupancy tenant the lease of the 5th of September 1917 executed by her in favour of the plaintiff was invalid and the plaintiff had no right of suit. Another plea was that section 79 of the Tenancy Act applied and that the suit was barred by limitation because the defendant as a Zemindar had taken wrongful possession two years ago. The First Court came to the conclusion that the defendant was not only formally dispossessed but that after reaping the sugar-cane crop he did not actually retain possession and that the plaintiff got possession in Baisakh 1325, Fasli, 'It' decreed the claim for Rs. 70. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court same to the conclusion that the crops in dispute were sown by the plaintiff. He did not deside the question of the invalidity or otherwise of the lease, but confirmed the decree on the ground that Rameshwar was bound to pay the price of the crops which had been misappropriated either to Taps. sars or to the plaintiff who had sown the crops. The defendent, Rameshwar, comes in second appeal and his learned Vakil contends that the lease in favour of the plaintiff being void ab initio the plaintiff-respondent had no right to main. tain the suit. He further contends that section 79 applies and the suit is barred by time. As to the last two contentions I need only say that it has been found as between the defendant and Musammat Tapesara that the appellant has not asquired the status of the Zemindar simply because of his purchase of a fractional share in the the privileges of a Zemindar as against the Court below the cane was ready in Tapesara. As to the first plea raised, I find it to be a different one. Under the Tenaney Act, Tapesara could not have transferred her occupancy holding. The result was that under the law the plaintiff was a trespasser, but then comes the next question, and it is, who could evict him from such possession as a trespasser. He had a possessory right good against all the world except the true owner, that is, the body of Zamindars, and the appellant who is not a member of such body could not forcibly oust him from possession without being liable for damages.

I had commenced to distate this judgment yesterday when Mr. Haribans Sabai asked me to allow him an opportunity for further argument. He is not here to-day. On the findings at which I have arrived, the plaintiff respondent was entitled to a decree and the Courts below have rightly decreed the claim for damages. The defence appears to be an absolutely dishonest one. The defendantappellant has got his mortgage money with interest at Rs. 0-14 0 per cent. per mensem from the date fixed for redemption in the decree. He now wants to take the profits also which he was in no way entitled to get. The lower Court seems to have rightly decreed the plaintiff's elaim. I confirm the decree of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Administration-suit - Property partly outside jurisdiction - Court, jurisdiction of.

Where in an administration suit it is found that some of the properties are situated outside the jurisdiction of the Courts of British India, and are in the possession of a person claiming a share in the estate, the Court has no jurisdiction to order that person to deliver possession of the property to the administrator to enable him to sell it and realize its proper price for the benefit of the estate; but the Court can direct that person to account for the value of such property before obtaining his share of the estate in the hands of the administrator. Case-law considered.

First appeal against an order passed by Butledge, J., on the Original Side.

Mr. Daties, for the Appellant.
Mr. Giles, for Respondent No. 3.
Mr. N. M. Cowasjee, for the other Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Maung Kin, J.—This appeal arises out of an administration suit in which the appellant is 2nd defendant. The bulk of the subject-matter is mainly in Rangoon. The appellant was not living in Rangoon at the time of the institution of the suit, nor has she ever lived there or at any other place in Burma since. She has lived in the Baroda State. She has, however, filed her written statement through her Attorney, contesting the suit.

A preliminary administration decree was passed in due course and a Commissioner was appointed to take accounts. There was no list of property constituting the subject matter attached to the plaint. Among other things, the Commissioner found in his report that the deceased left at Variav in the Baroda State two houses, a piece of agricultural land and a garden and that it was admitted that these items of property were in the possession of the appellant. The administrator, who is a defendant in the suit, had before the Commissioner filed his assounts wherein he had valued the property at Variav item by item. The Commissioner same to the following enclusions: - "They are properties outside the jurisdiction of the Courts in British India, but the 2nd defendant, who has taken possession of them, must assount for the value before she can claim a share in the properties of the deseased in the hands of the administrator of the estate." And he proceeded to say that he had no alternative but to value the Variav properties according to the valuation made by the administrator, besause no other basis is supplied by the 2nd defendant. He then directed the 2nd defendant to assount for the Variav property at the said valuation, or hand over possession of them forthwith to the administrator, so that he could sell them and realiza their proper market prices for the banefit of the estate. The 2nd defend. ant objected to the Commissioner's report as follows:-" That the learned Commissioner erred in law in including in the assounts income of the estate in the territory of the Gaskwar of Baroda of which no administration has been taken." The learned Judge on the Original Side of this Court overruled the objection, and in the course of his order he observed as follows: -"The Commissioner in dealing with this objection says the properties are outside the jurisdiction of the Courts of British India. The 2nd defendant who has taken possession of them must assept assount for the value before she can claim her share of the property of the deceased in the administration suit. In order to ascertain what is the share of each heir, I think an enquiry must be made into the whole estate of the deceased so far as is known. It is admitted that the bulk of the prop. erty of the deceased's estate was in British India and within the jurisdiction of the Court. I think the Commissioner was not exeluded from taking into assount the property belonging to the estate outside British India, when it was admitted that this property was in the hands of one of the elaimants asking for a share in the assets of the estate in British India. It might be a very great hardship to the other heirs if the widow is allowed to take up the position that she could ratain and rafuse to assount for the property balonging to the estate in her hands outside the jurisdiction of the Court and at the same time take her share in the assets within the Court's jurisdiction. In that case, she would have an unfair advantage over the other heirs."

The question involved is important. It seems to me clear that this Court cannot pass a full administration decree against the property in the Baroda State, for such a desree would involve a direct dealing with the property such as the partition or the sale of it under the orders of the Court. Section 16 of the Civil Procedure Code provides that suits for the recovery of immoveable property with or without rent or profits; for the partition of immove. able property * * shall be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate." Section 17 provides for a case where the immoveable property is situated within the jurisdiction of different Courts, and in such a case, it says that the suit may be instituted in any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any portion of the property is situate. Section 16 is subjest to a proviso which allows a suit to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property held by or on behalf of the defendant to be instituted either in the Court within the losal limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate, or in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the defendant actually and voluntarily resides. or earries on business, or personally works for gain, provided that the relief sought ean be entirely obtained through his personal obedience. The Explanation, however, says that the word "property" in the section means property situate in British India. The proviso is based upon the maxim of English Equity Courts, vis., equity acts in personam. But it appears that the whole principle of English Law has not been resognised by the Indian Legislature in enacting the proviso to section 16. In England equity acts in personam with reference to land in Scotland and Ireland, in the Colonies and in foreign countries where the defendant himself is within the jurisdiction of the Court upon a ground of a contract or some equity subsisting between the parties respecting immoveable property outside the jurisdiction,

AYESHA BRE C. GHULAM HUSEIN SULEMAN ABOO.

In Penn v. Lord Baltimore (1) specific performance was ordered of an agreement relating to land in America, the defendant being in England. The Courts of Equity in England generally act in this way in order to compel the performance of contracts and trusts, but the Courts in India are not given jurisdiction over property outside British India.

The proviso would appear to enable one Court in British India to act in personam against immoveable property in another jurisdiction in British India where the relief sought can be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant who actually and voluntarily resides, or earries on business, or personally works for gain, within the jarisdiction of Court in which the action is tried, interpretation of section 16, including the provise, by Mulla appears to me to ba absolutely correct. (See Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, 6th Edition, page The subject matter of the suit must not be situate beyond British India. The proviso applies only to suits to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property. The relief sought must be such as can be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant. So that suits for the recovery of immoveable property and for partition of immoveable property do not come within the proviso.

As I said before, one of the incidents of an administration decree is the partition of the estate and, where necessary, the sale thereof, under the orders of the Court. Such suits cannot be filed in places other than the place where the property is situate except where the property is situate within the jurisdiction of different Courts in British India, in which case the plaintiff is at liberty to choose his forum. I will endeavour to make my meaning elearer by giving some examples. Suppose there is a piece of land within the jurisdiction of a Court in British India and the suit is for the resovery of that property or for the partition of it, the suit must be filed in the Court within whose jurisdiction the property is situate. It cannot be filed in the Court within whose jurisdiction the defendant actually and voluntarily resides, or sarries on business or personally works for gain. The proviso to section 16 does not apply to such a case, because the relief sought cannot be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant. Suppose the property is situate within the jurisdiction of different Courts, the plaintiff may choose any of those Courts. But if the defendant resides or sarries on business, or works for gain outside the jurisdiction of all those Courts, the suit cannot be filed in the Court within whose jurisdiction the defendant resides, or earries on business, or works for gain, the reason being the relief sought cannot be entirely obtained through his personal obedience. Where the property is situate outside British India, such suits cannot be filed in any Court in British India at the place where the defendant resides, carries on business, or works for gain. The following are suits which can be filed in any Court in British India within whose jurisdiction the defendant resides, etc., although the immoveable property involved is situate elsewhere in British India:-

(1) A suit to declare that a person resident in Calcutta holds certain lands in the mofuscil subject to certain trusts is not a suit for land and may be tried in Calcutta [Fagram v. Moses (2)].

(2) A suit to enforce the right of parties to act as co shebaits to an idol endowed with lands in the mofussil where the possession of any land is not claimed [Juggodumba Dosses v. Puddomoney Dossee (3)].

(6) A suit for trespass to land in the plaintiff's possession outside the limits of the Court's jurisdiction, and for injunction [Grisp v. Watson (10)].

The above suits are all suits for reliefs respecting land where the relief sought in each case can be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant who is within and subject to the jurisdiction of the Court.

In view of the Explanation to section 16 such suits will not lie in British India if the property respecting which relief is sought is situate outside British India.

But it is contended in this case that the Court is not asked to set directly on the property in the Baroda State, all that it is asked to say being that so long as the second defendant does not account for the value of that property, or allow the administration of the estate to go on upon the basis that it is part of the estate, whatever share she may be entitled to in the property within British India will be withheld from her.

In Momein Bee Bee v. Ariff Ebrahim Malim (11) it was held, on the authority of the English cases cited therein, that if one of the heirs owes a debt to an estate even though it be time barred under the Limitation Act the Court is entitled to retain funds in respect of the debt when calculating the account due to the heir. On the analogy of that same I do not see any objection to the Court directing the second defendant to assount for the value of the property in the Baroda State before she ean obtain her share from this Court.

I must here point out that the learned Judge on the Original Side has not by his order endorsed the second portion of the following passage in the Commissioner's report:- "The second defendant must account for these properties at the above values, or hand over possession of them forthwith to the sixth defendant administrator, so that he could sell them and realize their proper market-prises for the benefit of the estate," all that the learned Judge endorsed being the following passage only:-"They are properties outside the jurisdie. tion of the Court, but the second defendant who has taken possession of them must account for the value before she can elaim a share in the property of the deceased in the hands of the administrator of the estate." That only means that, unless the second defendant allows the value of the property in the Baroda State to be taken into account in the administration of the estate, her share in the estate will be The Court would be acting withheld. without jurisdiction, if it ordered the second defendant to hand over possession of the property to the administrator to enable him to sell it and realize its proper price for the benefit of the estate.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

HIGINBOTHAM, J.—This is an appeal from the order of the Judge of the Original Side of this Court passed in Civil Ravision No. 74 of 1916 confirming the order of the Commissioner appointed to take assounts. suit in which the order was passed was an administration-suit filed by the respondent agaist the administrator of the estate of Mahomed Ebrahim Aboo, deseased, late of Rangoon, and against the heirs and legal representatives of the said deseased praying for an account of the moveable and immoveable properties of said estate and for their administration by and under the direction of the Court. second respondent who resides within the jurisdiction of this Court had previously obtained Letters of Administration of the estate in Civil Missellaneous No. 39 of this Court and he was sued in his personal and representative character.

The appellant, who was the second defendant, resides at Variav but was represented by her Attorney and filed a separate written statement objecting to the suit on various grounds and stating that she was always ready to have the properties amicably divided.

On 31st July 1916 a preliminary desree was passed ordering assounts to be taken and amongst such assounts, an assount of what property, if any, has come into the hands of the plaintiff or the defendants or any of them, or to the hands of any other person by the order or for the use of the plaintiff or the defendants or any of them. The Commissioner took the assounts as ordered and in those proceed. ings the second defendant appellant on the 22nd November 1916 filed her accounts. In his report of the 19th April 1919 the Commissioner has found that the deceased left two houses and a plot of agricultural land and a garden at Variav, and held as follows:-"They are properties outside the jurisdiction of the Courts in British India but the second defendant, who has taken possession of them, must account for their value before she can claim a share in the properties of the deceased in the hands of the administrator of the estate. On the evidence before me I am compelled to value the properties at the prices stated against them in the list of properties in the second defendant Asha Bee's hands, filed by the administrator with his account, Exhibit 1, namely, Rs. 10,000, 5,000, 1,500 and 1,000, respectively. The second defendant must account for these properties at the above values or hand over possession of them forthwith to the sixth defendant administrator so that he can sell them and realize their proper market prices for the benefit of the estate."

On the 9th July 1919 the second defendant filed the following objection to the Commissioner's report:—"That the learned Commissioner erred in law in including in the ascounts income of the estate in the territory of Gaekwar of Baroda of which no administration has been taken." The Judge of the Original Side overruled this objection in his order dated 21st July 1919 and confirmed the Commissioner's report.

The second defendant-appellant has filed this appeal against this order and has raised a similar objection in her grounds of appeal Nos. 1 and 2. But she has also raised other objections which were not raised before the Original Court. In ground of appeal No. 3 the objection is taken that the lower Court erred in holding that "it is admitted that the Variav property was in the hands of the widow." But the Commissioner in his report stated that the second defendant had taken possession of these properties and no objection was taken to this finding before the lower Court and cannot now be further considered. Of the other two grounds of appeal, No. 4 has been abandoned and No. 5 has reference to It is attempted in this Court to that this last ground of appeal has reference to the costs awarded by the Commissioner but in addition to the form of the objection not being apt for this purpose, there is the fact that no objection to the Commissioner's report on the ground of costs was taken in the lower Court, which has had no opportunity of considering the question and has not dealt with the matter.

The only substantial matter before this Court is that which is contained in the first two grounds of appeal. The second defendant contends that that portion of the order of the Commissioner which is set out above was made without jurisdie. tion as the property referred to is outside the jurisdiction of any Court in British India. It is urged that under section 5 of the Indian Succession Act the law of succession is governed by the rule lex loci res situ and that the Letters of Adminis tration do not include such properties. That an administration-suit cannot include properties outside the jurisdiction. That no order of any kind with reference to such properties can be passed in an administration-suit and that the Court cannot order them to be sold or touch them in any way or order the second defendant to account for them. It is also stated that if any such orders are passed the second defendant may be seriously embarrassed by other orders passed by the Courts in Baroda in connection with the land, and it is urged that, in any event, it is wrong to place the burden on the shoulders of the second defendant-appellant of collecting these properties and bringing them into account. These objections seem to show that the order passed by the Commissioner has been misunderstood. It is not an order against the property itself but an order affesting the right of the second defend. ant to share in the distribution of the estate in the hands of the administrator who is now subject to the orders of the Court under the decree in the administration suit. That is to say, it is a personal order against the second defendant-appellant. This being the case, it is unnecessary to consider what might be the position if the Court had passed an order against the property itself. The fact that the property is not included in the Letters of Administration does not appear to affest the question of the legality of the Commissioner's order for the reason just mentioned.

With reference to the right of the Court to pass an order having reference to property outside its jurisdiction in an administration suit it has been suggested that a spit for the administration of an estate which includes immoveable property is a suit for the recovery of immoveable property and, therefore, the Court has no jurisdiction to pass any such order. But there is ample authority that an administration suit is not a suit for land but is a suit for the administration of the real and personal estate of the deseased as completely as the circumstances will permit. In the case of Nistarini Dassi v. Nundo Lall Bose (12) it was objected that the Court could not set aside certain leases of property belonging to the estate which was situate outside the jurisdiction of the Court. But it was held that the suit was merely one to have the property administered by the Court and to make the trustees or executors personally liable for any maladministration of the estate. That this did not turn the suit into one for the resovery of immoveable property and that the Court assumes jurisdiction in regard to immoveable property situate outside the jurisdiction in cases where it ean act in personam. This case went on appeal to the Privy Council and the right elaimed by the High Court to set aside leases of lands situate outside the jurisdiction of the Court for the due administration of the estate was expressly approved their Lordships. Benode Behari Bose v. Nistarini Dassi (13).

This principle seems to be applicable to the present case as the existence of immoveable property belonging to the estate outside the jurisdiction of the Court is only an incident to the winding up of the estate. So long, therefore, as the Court can act in personam with reference to this property and has the means of enforcing its order the Court can assume jurisdiction for the purpose of winding up the estate. In this case the deceased was domiciled within the jurisdiction of the Jours and the administrator resides within the jurisdiction and the cause of action arose wholly or in part within such jurisdiction. This would seem to be amply sufficient to give the Court jurisdiction under section 20 Civil Prosedure Code, to entertain the suit for the administration of this estate. The second defendant-appellant, moreover, is merely one of the beneficiaries entitled to notice of such suit with the right to come in and support or object. The second defendant-appellant in fact did come and object for various reasons to a decree being passed for administration of the estate and stated that she was ready to have the estate divided up. But she took no objection as she should have done under section 21. Civil Procedure Code. to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit.

The Court has assertained that 2nd defendant appellant has some of the estate in her hands and, although she is residing outside the jurisdiction the Court, has the means of compelling her to account for such property as a condition her share obtaining ia the in the possession of the administrator, because the Court has power over such share and can enforce its order by withhold. ing and by even depriving her of it unless its order is obeyed. But this is taking action against the property itself, but is the exercise of pressure on the 2nd defendant to compel her to act in accordance with the Court's decree that the estate should be wound-up. I would hold, therefore, that the Court has jurisdiction to pass the order in question.

was right in passing such an order, as otherwise the estate could not be fully administered. The principle upon which the Court has proceeded is well established and it was clearly expressed in the case of Akerman, In re, Akerman v. Akerman (14) as follows:— A person who owes an estate money, that is to say, who is bound to increase the general mass of the estate by a contribution of his own, cannot claim an aliquot share given to him out of that mass without first making the contribution which completes it." The principle underlying this order was enforced in the case of Momein Bee Bee v. Ariff Ebrahim Malim (11) and I think should be followed in this .988e

The 2nd defendant appellant is asking the Court for her share of the estate in the bands of the Administrator and the Court has rightly placed the condition on her obtaining such share that she account for that portion of the estate in her bands. She can do this either by agreeing to a joint valuation being taken of such property or by agreeing with the other heirs and legal representatives to the property being sold and the saleproceeds being handed over to the administrator or in any other way approved by the Court. This need not sause any hardship for her or throw any onerous burden on her as has been suggested in this Court.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 3, 54, 55-"Obligation," meaning of-Injunction to restrain cutting of sacred tree-Prevention of breach of merely moral or religious obligation.

The first defendant having obtained a decree against the second defendant for the removal of a nim tree which had penetrated its roots into the adjoining wall of the house of the former, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit for permanent injunction to restrain the execution of the decree on the allegation that the tree was a sacred one, and that its removal would be an invasion of their religion and would offend their religious sentiments:

Held, that the injunction could not be granted as the refusal to grant the perpetual injunction would not lead to the breach of an obligation, that is, of a duty enforceable by law which the plaintiffs could compel the defendants to perform, within the meaning of section 54 of

The word 'obligation,' in section 54 of the Specific Relief Act may be taken to be a tie or bond which constrains a person to do or suffer something, it implies a right in another person to which it is correlated, and it restricts the freedom of the obligee with reference to definite acts and forbearances, but in order that it may be enforced by a Court it must be a legal obligation, and not merely moral, social or religious. JUDGMENT .- This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for permanent injunction to restrain the execution of a decree obtained by the first defendant against the second defendant for the removal of a nim tree. The tree stands on the boundary wall of the land of the second defendant, and its roots have penetrated into the adjoining wall of the house of the first defendant. The conrequence has been that the wall has been eracked and the house has been injured. In eirenmetances, the first defendant instituted a suit against the second defendant for a mandatory injunction for the removal of the tree and for damages. On the 30th May 1917 that suit was decreed, and the first defendant became entitled to remove the tree unless the second defendant removed it within fifteen days. That decree was affirmed on appeal on the 22nd January 1919. Thereupon, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit on the allegation that the tree was a sacred tree, that it had been duly conscerated, that it was worshipped by the orthodox Hinda people of the locality, and that its removal would be an invasion of their religion and would offend their religious sentiments. The Court of first instance decreed the suit, granted a permanent injunction and authorised the first defendant to take out within a month. BHODER MUREPIER U. KALACHAND WALLIE.

bricks from the wall on which the tree stands, thereby causing an open space between the tree and his wall, and place there an iron-plate between the tree and the walls to prevent penetration of roots into his wall in the future. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge has reversed this decision and dismissed the suit. In support of the present appeal, the plaintiffs have contended that a permanent injunction should be granted to prevent removal of the sacred tree in execution of the decree.

There is no room for controversy that the deeree was made by a Court of competent jurisdiction and was based on well established legal principles. The decision in Lakshmi Narain v. Tara Prosanna (1) affirms the proposition that as every owner of land is under an obligation not to allow the branches of his tree to grow so as to overhang, or the roots of his tree to extend so as to penetrate, his neighbour's land to the detriment of the latter, in ease of breach of such an obligation it is open to the Court to grant a mandatory injunction for the removal of the nuisance, under section 55 of the Specific Relief Act. In support of this view, reference was made to the desision of the House of Lords in Lemmon v. Webb (2) which affirmed that of the Court of Appeal in Lemmon v. Webb (3). The view taken there had propounded been three centuries earlier in Norris v. Baker (4). (See also Viner's Abridgment, Volume XX, page 417). The same view has been affirmed directly or by implication in subsequent eases; amongst these may be mentioned Smith v. Giddy (5), Cheater v. Oater (6), Mills v. Brooker (7). This is by no means a singular rule of law and in this connection reference may be made to the Code Napoleon tr. Barrett : Article 672 provided as follows : "He whose property the branches of a neighbour's trees overbang, may force the latter to ent such branches. If the roots extend into his heritage, he has the right of entting them himself." Article 673 was in these terms: "Trees growing in a party hedge are party like the hedge; and each of the two owners has the right of requiring that they be out down." Article 673 of the French Civil Code (tr. Wright) contains the following provision: "A person over whose property the branches of a neighbour's trees grow can compel such neighbour to out them, Fruit that falls naturally from such branches belong to the owner of the soil over which they grow. A person has the right to out the roots of trees belonging to an adjoining owner which grow into his land. The right to out the roots or have the branches out cannot be lost by prescription (non-user)." See also Pothier, Traite de contract de societe, second Appendice, Article 243. (Ocuvres Ed. Bugnet, 1861, Volume 4, page 332); Huq. Commentaire du Code Civil, Volume 4, page 457; Wang, German Civil Code, Article 910; Schuster, German Civil law, page 388.

On what principle, then, can the plaintiffs demand that a perpetual injunction should be granted to prevent the execution of the decree? Under section 54 of the Specific Relief Act a perpetual injunction may be granted to prevent the breach of an obligation existing in favour of the applicant, whether expressly or by implication. The plaintiffs must, consequently, specify the obligation which exists in their favour and would be infringed by the execution of the deeree held by the first defendant against the second defendant. The plaintiffs can succeed only if they can establish, first, that the first defendant is under an obligation to keep on her land a tree considered sacred by the plaintiffs, even though the tree does damage to the property of the adjoining owner; and, secondly, that the second defendant is under an obligation to asquieses in the continued existence of such a tree on the land of the adjoining proprietor even though such tree does damage to his own property. There must be obligations recognised by law. Section 3 of the Specific Relief Act states that the term obligation includes every duty enforceable by law. We need not attempt an exposition of the full significance of the term obligation. But obligation may be taken. to be a tie or bond which constrains a person to do or suffer something; it implies a right in another person to which it is correlated, and it restricts the freedom of the obliges with reference to definite acts and forbearances; but in order that it may be enforced by a Court, it must be a legal obligation, and not merely moral, social or religious. Neither authority nor principle has been invoked in support of the alleged legal obligation which the plaintiffs seek to impose upon the defendants on the ground that the tree has been consecrated and is held sacred by the plaintiffs as pious Hindus. We are not unmindful that certain trees are regarded with great venera. tion; Dino Nath Chuckerbutty v. Pratap Ohandra (8), Baiju Lal Parbatia v. Eulak Lal (9). Thus the Asyatha tree, the Talsi plant and the Bilva tree are objects of worship. The first is sacred to Aditya, the second to Vishou and the third to Shiva. The Kadamba tree in the Minakshi temple at Madura and the Jamba tree in the temple of Jambakeswara near Trichinopoly are regarded with great sanctity. It may also be sonceded that ascording to the Hindu Sastras, special religious merit accrues from the planting of trees on the road side, on the banks of tanks and in gardens or groves; and the Sastras also insultate the fear of various punishments (by visitation of various sins) on those who fell trees; indeed, special ritual is prescribed for the planting of trees for the benefit of the public (see Prannath Saraswati, Hindu Law of Endowments, Tagore Law Lectures, 1892, Chapter IX, pages 250 246; see page 254, where the rules ordained by Manu and Vishna for the infliction of panishment upon persons who destroy trees are quoted from Manu 1.48, VIII.285, Xt.143, 145, Vishnu V 55.59). But the view cannot be maintained that the rules so prescribed in the ancient texts are authorities in favour of the recognition of a legal obligation of the requisite character. We hold, accordingly, that the refusal to grant a perpetual injune. tion will not lead to the breach of an obligation, that is, of a duty enforceable by law which the plaintiffs can compel the defendants to perform. No foundation has thus been laid by the plaintiffs for the grant of a perpetual injunction.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

MAUNG TUN SHEIN-RESPONDENT.

Buddhist Burmese-Partition-Jointly Law. acquired property of father and mother-Auratha son, right of, to claim share on father's re-marriage.

Under the Burmese Buddhist Law an auratha son has no right to claim a share of the property jointly acquired by his parents merely by reason of his mother's death; his right to claim a onefourth share of that property, however, arises on the re-marriage of his father [p 545, col. 2.]

Case-law and texts considered.

Second appeal against the judgment passed by the Divisional Judge, Tharrawaddy, confirming the decree passed by the Sub Divisional Judge, Zigon.

Mr. Sore, for the Appellants. Mr. W. Dhar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT .- Plaintiff, Tun Shein, is the eldest surviving shild of the let defendant Shwe Ywet and his deceased wife, Ma Nge, and since the eldest born child, a daughter, admittedly died at the age of nine and the next born shild, a son, died at the age of six, Tun Shein is undoubtedly the "auratha" son of Shwe Ywet and Ma Nge. Ma Nge, assording to Tan Shein, died about seven years ago when Tun Shein was 19 years of age, but according to Shwe Ywet she died in February 1911 when Tun Shein was only 1d years of age. The suit was instituted in July 1919 and it is not suggested that any question of limitation arises in respect of the date of Ma Nge's death. It is admitted that, within a few months after Ma Nge's death, Shwe Ywet married a second wife, and Tun Shein elaims that, by reason of Shwe Ywet's second marriage, he, as auratha son, became entitled to elaim a one fourth share of the property jointly acquired by Shwe Ywet and Ma Nge while they were husband and wife.

The lower Courts found that he was so entitled, and this appeal has been brought on the question of Burmese Buddhist Law, whether an auratha son can, on his father's re-marriage after his mother's death, elaim a one fourth share of the property jointly acquired by his parents.

MADEG BEWE TWET U. MAUGETUN BHEIN.

It is now settled law that an auratha son sannot make that claim against his father merely by reason of his mother's death, and the question to be decided is, whether the re-marriage of the father gives him a right to claim the one-fourth share which he would not have if his father did not re marry.

It will be convenient to consider, first, the dhammathats and then the case law on the Bubjest.

I will take the Dhammathats in the order in which I dealt with them in my judgment in the Full Bench case of Maung Sin v. Ma Thein.

No extract from Vilosa is eited in sections 44 and 45 of the Digest which deal with the subject of the rights of children on the re marriage of the surviving parent, but in section 46 a passage is cited which says that on the death of the father the mother should divide the substance of the inheritance with her sons and daughters, even though she should not marry again.

The Wagaru deals only with the partition between the children and the step-parent after the death of both parents.

No extract from the Dhammathathyaw, Raingea or Manusin on this subject are eited in the Digest but there is an important extract from the Mahayezathat which was compiled by the same writer as Kaingea, and which rune as follows: "Although accordirg to the Dhammathats the law is, that if there be an auratha son or daughter, although the surviving parent takes a lesser wife, the property other than personal belongings (of the surviving parent) shall be divided into four shares and the auratha shall have one share, and that the younger sons and daughters shall inherit only when both parents are dead, nevertheless, because the surviving parent has not remained only looking after the children in ascordance with what is right but has again taken a lesser sponse, let one balf of the property be given to the shildren as the share of the deseased parent and let the surviving parent take over the rest to the step-parent for their subsistence and though it be all spent by them let it be spent, but after both the parents are dead if any property remains unspent, it shall be divided into four shares of which the shildren of the earlier family shall get three and the step parent one, the stepparent getting a share because although it was property left by the shildren's own parents when they were young, it is due to the kindness and care of the step parent that it has been preserved."

The Manugue gives the following rules-

(1). If after the death of the mother the father lives with a lesser wife the father is to take his own personal belongings but is to make provisions for the eldest son according to his means. eldest son is to have the mother's personal belongings. The father is to have three. fourths of the property which remains over and the house. If the said son be not old enough to separate and stays on with his father and step-mother the property is to be separated in the presence of witnesses and left in the enstody of the father and step mother, and if the step mother has no children, then on the father's death the son is to get the property origin. ally assigned to him and the house to. gether with three-fourths of the property of the parents, and the step mother is to get one fourth of the property of the parents and the one-fourth of the value of the house.

The passage about the father's making provision for the son "eccording to his Doctor Biehardson means" is obseure. translated the passage: "Let him give to the eldest son what has been laid down above according to his means," The translator of the Digest translated it: "If there is no eldest son, partition of the rest of the property shall be made according to the rule already laid down," and interpolated the words "if there is one" (that is an eldest son) at the beginning of the following passage which relates to the partition of the mother's personal belongings. The actual words of the Burmese are as follows-"After mother dead, if father live (with) little wife, as for the father, leaving riding elephant, riding horse (then follows a list of a man's personal belongings) with father, according to the words that have been said above, big son if there be none, according to there being none a share shall be given. The mother's clothes (etc., personal belongings) let big son have. As for the property left over, share into four shares, three shares let father take, house let father have."

MAUNG SHWBYWET U. MAUNG TON SHEIN.

The reference to what has been said above is to the rule for partition between the auratha son and the father on the death of the mother and that rule says that if there is sufficient property the auratha son is to get a slave, some cattle and a plot of land, or such of those things as there may be. In view of that provision, the meaning of the disputed passage would seem to be as I have rendered it above, the sense of the words "according to the words that have been said above, big son if there be none according to there being none a chare shall be given" being that a share shall be given to the auratha as directed in the rule given above according as here is or is not the property mentioned in that rule as that which should fall to his share. This rendering is strongly supported by the Amwebon, the compiler of which ordinarily reproduced the exact wording of Manugue. The text as reproduced in Amuebon adds the word "to" to the words "big son" and alters the word "if" in the phrase "if there is none," so that the passage reads "according as there is or is not (property) a share shall be given to the big son."

There is, however, a further difficulty about this passage in Manage which is that it seems to imply that the auratha son gets one-fourth of the estate as well as the specified property, since it assigns three-fourths of whatever is left to the father. It does not say in so many words that the auratha son is to get one-fourth, and he certainly would not be entitled to one-fourth if the father did not re marry, but it clearly suggests that the auratha is entitled to get one-fourth of the estate from his father on the father's remarriage.

father lives with a lesser wife, let all the property mentioned above (that is, the property of the parents) be divided into four shares and let the daughter have one and the father three. Let the daughter get the mother's personal belongings and the slave woman, and let the father have the house. Let the daughter's share be made in the presence of witnesses and if the father die while the daughter, being not old enough to separate from her father and step mother, is living in the same house with them, then if the step mother has no children let the partition so made remain effective, and let the father's share be divided into four shares of which the daugter is to get three and the step mother one. The daughter is to get the house but must pay the step mother one quarter of its value, and the step mother is to get half the father's clothes. The debts are to be apportioned similarly.

(3) If the father dies and the wife lives with a lesser husband, the father's personal belongings are to be divided into four shares of which the eldest daughter is to get one and the mother and the younger daughters three. The mother is to get the house. The property, animate and inanimate, allotted to the eldest daughter shall be noted in the presence of witnesses and kept separate. When the mother dies, the eldest daughter is to have the property so allotted to her and the mother's share is to be divided into four shares of which the step father is to get one and the eldest daughter and her relations (that is, presumably, her brothers and sisters) three. The eldest daughter is to get the house but must pay the step-father onefourth of its value.

(4) If the father dies and the mother lives with a lesser husband, let the eldest son's share of the property, animate and inanimate, be made in the presence of witnesses and kept separate. If he is not old enough to separate and lives together with the mother and the step father, then when the mother dies, the eldest con shall get the whole of the share originally allotted to him, and thereafter the mother's three quarter chare shall be divided into four shares and the step father shall enjoy one and the eldest son of the former family three. The bonse is to be valued and the step father to have one fourth of its value. The step-father shall pay onefourth of the mother's debte.

It will be noticed that in the cases mentioned in the second and fourth of these rules the auratha child would be entitled to one fourth of the property under the ordinary rule, whether the surviving parent married again or not, so that one would expect these two rules to be practically a repetition of the rules for partition on the death of the parent. That in substance is what they are, but with the addition of a direction that if the eldest child is not old enough to separate from the surviving parent and step parent his or her share is to be segregated. It seems possible that these rules have been compiled from different sources, some of which used the words thagyi (big son) and thamigyi (big daughter) in the sense of the auratha son or daughter while the others used the same words as meaning the children of the elder family. This suggestion receives support from the use of the words "atet thagyi," that is, the big son of the earlier family, in the fourth of the rules given above, and from the reference to the "relations," or brothers and sisters in the third rule, but it is not necessary to consider it for the purposes of the present case, since it concerns only partition after the death of the surviving parent.

I have been unable to find in the Manusara Shwemyin any reference to a right of partition which arises on the re-marriage of the surviving parent. The ordinary rules regarding the right of the auratha son or daughter to get one fourth of the estate on the death of the father or mother respectively are mentioned, but section 25 says definitely that children do not ordinarily inherit until both parents are dead.

The Vannana, like the Manugue, gives special rules for the partition of property taken by the survivor of the parents to a · second marriage, between the shildren and the step-parent on the death of the parent, and lends some support to the view that the rules eited above from Manugue are mainly rules for partition on the death of the surviving parent rather than rules for partition on re-marriage. There is, however, a passage from Vannana eited in the Digest (section 46) which says that on the father's death the mother should not refuse partition if it is claimed by the shildren, though she has not married again and I find another passage also which says that if the mother, having equally divided the inheritance with her children, marries again, the children shall have no interest in the property of the second marriage. These passages certainly suggest that such partition was not unueual, though they do not prove that the children could enforce it against the wish of the surviving parent.

No passage from the Vinicohaya or

Vicchelani is cited in the Digest in support of a rule prescribing partition on the remarriage of the surviving parent.

The Dhammathat known as Amwebon is eited in the Digest but, as usual, it is a reproduction of Manugye. But in this instance it is useful, as I have already noted, because it throws light on the correspond. ing passage of Manugye which the official translator of the Digest has mistranslated. It gives a slightly different wording of the text and shows either that the text of Manugue was so obscure that the compiler of Amwebon was compelled to alter it to make sense, or, much more probably, that our present text of Manugue is corrupt, some seribe having read the word accord. ("according") as " ["if") and baying possibly also shanged the word "of" (" to ") which the writer of Amwebon writes instead of ||an ("not") after the words || 20 | 3 (big son). However that may be, the Amuebon makes sense as it stands while the parallel passage in Manugue does not.

From this examination of the major Dhammathats it seems clear that there is no authority which says, in so many words, that an auratha shild asquires by reason of the re-marriage of the surviving parent a right to a one-fourth share in the estate which he or she would not have had if the surviving parent had not re-married. The Dhammathats do clearly lay down that the auratha son or daughter shall receive on the re marriage of the surviving mother or father, as the case may be, the share to which he or she had already become entitled by reason of the death of the father or mother respectively, and that if the auratha continues to live with the surviving parent and the step-parent he or she (probably in either sase along with the other children of the first marriage) will on the death of the surviving parent be entitled to three-fourths of so much as chapses to remain out of the property which the surviving parent took to the second marrigge. Some of the Dhammathats say definitely that the children have no rights whatever in the property taken by the surviving parent to the second marriage so long as that parent is alive and that MAUNG SHWE TWET U. MAUNG TON SHEIN.

they have no right to complain if it is all consumed. But, nevertheless, there are clear indications that the author of these Dhamma. thats did contemplate the accrual of new rights on the re-marriage of the surviving parent. It is difficult on any other assumption to explain the insertion of the provision for the segregation of the auratha child's share in the presense of witnesses if the child is not old enough to separate from the surviving parent and the stepparent. The recognised right of the auratha shild to take the quarter share on the death of the parent is limited to cases in which that shild is sufficiently grown up to take the place of the deceased parent, and, therefore, it would appear that if the shild was not grown up the right to take the fourth share on the death of the parent could not arise. The right of the child. who is not sufficiently grown up to separate from the surviving parent, to have the one fourth share segregated would seem. therefore, to be a different right from tha ordinary right of the grown up auratha to take the fourth share on the death of the parent. It is true that there is no actual reference to age in the Dhammathats which prescribe segregation. The phrase used in each case is "If the child is not sufficient' to separate," but I do not think that that phrase can bear any other meaning than "is not sufficiently old to separate," and the Burmese word "to be suffi. eient" is constantly used in the meaning of "to be old enough." One is, therefore, driven to the conclusion that although the writers of these Dhammathats, and partienlarly of Manugue, did not astually say in so many words that the right of the auratha to take the one forth share of the estate on the re-marriage of the surviving parent was a different right from that of the aurutha to take a one-fourth share on the death of the parent, probably besause there was in the older law books which they were reproducing no recognition of the right to take a share on re marriage, nevertheless, the right which they had in their minds, vaguely it may be, was not identical with the recognised right of the auratha to take one fourth on the death of the parent, and was probably a right, by that time well established by oustom, allowing the eldest shild, whether grown up or not, to elaim one fourth of the estate on the re-marriage of the surviving parent, although he or she was not in a position to claim that right by reason of the parent's It is clear that, as early as the date of the Vilasa, that is as early as the 12th century, there was a tendency towards a general partition of the state between the surviving parent and the children on the death of one parent and that that tendency was much more pronounced by the middle of the seventeenth when the author of Yazathat, sentury although he gave the ancient rule, nevertheless said that equal partition between the surviving parent and the children ought to be made when the surviving parent remarried. The same tendency re-appears in Vancana, a late eighteenth century Dham. mathat, and, in my opinion, it is particularly important in view of the conservation of the written law and isstrong evidence of the existence of a well-established custom in favour of a general partition on the remarriage of the surviving parent.

So far I have dealt only with the major Dhammathats, but some of the minor law-books also seem to me to give evidence of a similar custom.

The Dhamma which is said to be of about the same date as Manugye gives practically the same rule as the first of those extracted from Manugge above, except that it makes no reference to the special property which the auratha son would get from the father on the death of the mother. It also, like Manugye, says that the father is to take three fourths of the estate, and merely leaves it to be inferred that the auratha son gets the other fourth. It gives the auratha daughter on the death of the mother and the re-marriage of the father the same one fourth share of the estate which she would be entitled to receive if the father did not marry again,

The Rajabala, as cited in section 44 of the Digest, seems to say that on the remarriage of the mother the daughter is entitled to claim one fourth of the property remaining over after she has received the auratha share and the learned compiler of the Digest possibly read it in that sense, but if the passage be read in conjunction with the corresponding passage in section 45 it appears that the property of which she is entitled to claim one fourth is not the whole belongings, and I am inclined to think that that was probably the sense of the original authority which the writer of Manugue mutilated in the corrupt passage with which

The Kungyalinga which, as its name implies, is in verse so that words sometimes have to yield to the exigencies of metre is represented in the Digest as laying down that when either parent dies the property is always to be divided into four shares of which the surviving parent gets three and the shildren one, but it seems possible that the translator has overlooked the word auratha" before the word children (" brothers and sisters") in this passage and that it may refer merely to the ordinary auratha share which other Dhammathats also undoubtedly allow the auratha shild to take on the re-marriage of the surviving parent,

The Dhammusara also, according to the English version of the Digest, gives a similar rule, but a reference to the original shows that the translator has given merely a short paraphrase of the text, which is in verse, and has not attempted a verbal translation and it seems possible that this authority also refers only to the ordinary rights of the auratha child.

The Cittara, which again is in verse, says that when the chief husband dies and the wife lives with a lesser husband the property, excepting her personal property and property set apart for religious uses, is to be divided into four shares of which the mother takes three and the children (brothers and sisters) one.

The Kyetyo, which seems to reproduce the rules of the Kaingsa, as to the aurutha son's share, almost word for word (vide Kaingsa eited in section 30 of the Digest), merely gives the auratha son on the re-marriage of his mother the right to the one-fourth share which he would already have by reason of the father's death apart from the remarriage of the mother, but adds that, according to some authorities, even that share should be left in the castody of the mother.

It is true that most of these authorities may be interpreted as referring only to the share to which the the auratha child would elearly be entitled by reason of the parent's death, but the constant reference to the elaim as arising on the re-marriage of the surviving parent seems to me to suggest that the authors themselves were under the impression that the re marriage of the surviving parent conferred a new right to partition, and it can bardly be denied that the passages cited are evidence of a well-established custom in favour of some kind of partition on re-marriage.

We now come to the Attasankhepa which was compiled by the Kinwan Mingyi, shortly before the British annexation of Upper Burma. The learned author, who it will be remembered was also the compiler of the

"if after the death of the father the mother or after the death of the mother the father wishes to marry again, the auratha son or daughter must receive his or her share if it has not already been taken. If there is no auratha shild, then the whole of the property is to be divided equally between the surviving parent and the younger shildren. Ther, unless the shildren continue to live with the surviving parent and the step-parent, they have no interest in the property of the second marriage. If, however, they continue to live with the surviving parent and the step-parent in the new household and it is possible to keep their share of the property separate. then on the death of the surviving parent they are entitled to receive their share in full and shall also receive three-fourths of the property which the surviving parent took to the second marriage. If, however, their share has not been kept separate it is to be regarded as property taken by the surviving parent to the second marriage."

It will be noticed that this authority, like the rest, does not say in so many words that the auratha acquires any new right to a one-fourth share on the remarriage of the surviving parent. It says merely that if the auratha has not already reserved the one fourth share he or she is to get it. This might mean that if the auratha son or daughter, who has already become entitled to the auratha's one-fourth share by reason of the death of the father or mother, respectively, has not already elaimed and taken that share, he or she shall be entitled, and will of course be well-advised, to take it on the re-marriage of the surviving parent. But it might also mean that, although the auratha son or daughter has not already become entitled to the one-fourth share because it not the father or mother, as the case may be, who died, nevertheless, he or she shall be entitled to claim that share from the surviving father or mother by reason of the re-marriage. Such a rule would, I think, be eminently reasonable, and might be regarded as being supported by the ancient rule given in Yazathat. It would do away with the difficulty arising from the omission of any provision in Attasankhepa for the ease of an auartha shild was not already entitled to the quarter share. That difficulty elearly arises if the rule in Attasankhepa be regarded as referring only to an auratha shild whose share has already vested. might of course be explained away by supposing that the learned author regarded the auratha whose right to the one fourth share had not already vested as only potentially auratha and, therefore, classed him or her with the younger children, or it might merely be due to inadvertence, but neither of these explanations seems to me very probable. I have already pointed out that there is a tendency even in the older Dhammathats towards partition on re-marriage. The Yazathat recommends it: the Vannana recognises and approves of it; the Panim says in so many words that the inheritance may be claimed on the re-marriage of the surviving parent; a passage from Kungyalinga 45 of the eastion Digest, sited in seems to recognise the shildren's right to elaim half the property from the surviving parent at any rate in certain case; and when the Vttasankhepa itself says that if there is no auratha, the rest of the shildren are entitled to half the estate, I do not think that we shall be doing any violence to its meaning if we suppose that when it says that the auratha has not already received the one fourth share, he or she shall receive it on the remarriage of the surviving parent, it means that the auratha as such, whether already entitled or not to receive the one fourth share, shall reseive that share on the re-marriage of the surviving parent. One exception to the rule that children inherit only on the death of both parents is clearly established by the reaugnition of the rights of the auratha son or daughter on the death of the father or mother. There are clear indications of the resognition of two other exceptions, namely, the right of the auratha, whether is not entitled to the benefit of the ordinary auratha share, to take a one fourth share on the re-marriage of the surviving parent, and the right of the children generally to partition on the re-marriage of the surviving parent. So far as this case goes, we are not concerned with the latter of these exceptions except in so far as indications of its recognition add to the probability of the recognition or the second, and the case-law up to present is against its recognition.

The question to be decided in the present case is, whether or not the auratha's right to partition on the re-marriage of the surviving parent can be regarded as having been established. So far as the Dhammathats are concerned, I am of opinion that it can, and it remains to be seen whether that opinion is borne out by the case-law on the subject.

In Ma On v. Ko Shwe O (1) the passage cited above from Vannana was considered and it was said that, although without the consent of the surviving parent the younger children cannot obtain their shares, yet the surviving parent may, if so minded, partition the inheritance retaining his or her share, and as to the part so retained it is at his or her absolute disposal. In that case the father had died and the mother had not remarried.

In Maung Hlaing v. Tha Ka Do (2) the passage from Vannana and Attasanthepa referred to above were considered and it was taken as settled law that if the widow re-marries she is to take her half share of the joint property and the children by the former marriage are to divide the other half, the share of the auratha child being one fourth of the whole.

In Maung Seik Kaung v. Po Nyein (3) the eldestborn shild, a son, claimed one fourth of the estate from his father, the mother having died and the father married again, and the learned Judges said: 'We do not think it open to reasonable doubt that when the father doss marry again, the eldest son, especially if he be the eldest shild, can claim a one-fourth share of the general joint estate of the parents.'
They went on to say that this is in accordance.

with paragraph 2 of sestion 2, Book X of Manugue, which, as I have said above, I consider open to doubt, but, however that may be, the case is on all fours with the present case, and, if it is good law, is sufficient for the decision of this case.

The Fall Bench case of Ma Thin v. Ma Wa You (4) was the converse case where an only daughter sued her mother on her re-marriage after the father's death for a one fourth share of the parents' joint estate, and it was held that she was entitled to get it, one of the learned Judges, after considering the authorities, saying: "As a matter of fact partition of property is generally effected on a second marriage and the principle appears to be that a single shild gets one-fourth of the joint estate, the mother getting three-fourths; while if there are a number of shildren the mother takes half and the other children half between them." I may note that it is not elear what the learned Judge meant by "other" shildren, and that I know of no authority in the Dhammathats for the proposition that if there is only one shild its share is only one fourth.

In Mi Haing v. Mi Thi (5) it was said that the texts giving the auratha daughter the right to elaim one-fourth do not authorise her to elaim one fourth from her mother, at least when her mother has not married again. That is, of course, correct.

In M: The O v. M: Sue (6) it was held in Upper Burma that after the death of the father the eldest daughter sannot elaim one quarter of the estate from her mother even though the latter marries again. The question which arose in that ease was the converse of that which arises in the present case and, therefore, it is not necesseary for me to consider it. I may say, however, that I doubt whether the decision is good law, and that it is contrary to the decision of the Fill Bench of this Court in Ma Thin v. Ma Wa You (4).

In Maung Shoe Po v. Maung Bein (7) the mother died, and the father married again. The only son elaimed that he was entitled on his father's re marriage to half the estate. It was taken as settled law both in Upper and Lower-Borma that the father was entitled (4) 2 L. B. R. 255.

to at least one-half of the property, and that the son was entitled to one-fourth on the father's second marriage.

The effect of the case-law would, therefore, seem to be that it is settled that on the death of the mother and the re-marriage of the father, the auratha son is entitled to get from the father one fourth of the estate. This view may originally have been based on what is a doubtful text in Manugue, but it is reasonable and is in accordance with the tendency in the Dhammathats towards exceptions to the rule that children do not inherit until the death of both parents.

I hold, therefore, that the lower Courts were right in finding that Tan Shein is entitled as against his father to one-fourth of the property jointly acquired by his father Shwe Ywet and his mother M. Ngs during their marriage.

No other point was argued in the appeal and on the facts the two lower Courts have some to concurrent findings.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Execution first appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bareilly, dated the 16th November 1920.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants. Mr. B. E. O'Conor, for the Respondent. JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—This appeal raises two points. It was an application in the Court below against a person who had become a transferee of a deeree which was subsequently set aside in the Privy Council in favour of the present appellants. The transferee was not a party to the proceeding in the Privy Council, but under the decree which the Privy Council set aside and of which he had become the transferee, he obtained possession of certain property and was, therefore, in the enjoyment of mesne profits in respect of it. The application to the Court below which was in substance a proceeding under section 144, but which adopted all the forms applicable to execution proceedings, asked that the respondent should account for mesne profits during the time which he had been unlawfully in possession under a desree which had been set aside. The application was dismissed by the Court below on the ground that it was time barred by Article 181 of the Limitation Act, and, secondly, on the ground that the respondent was not a party to the decree which gave rise to the application, A further point was raised under Order II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure which obviously has no substance. The case has been extremely well argued on both sides before us and a great number of authorities have been eited on this vexed question. It is not desirable to add more than one is obliged to the tangle which appears to exist with regard to the method of reconciling proceedings under section 141 with other provisions of the law. It so happens that in the case before us the point whittles itself down to a comparatively compass. We agree with the narrow decision of this Court in the ease of Jiwa Ram v. Nand Ram (1) that proceedings under section 144 of the Code are not execution proceedings, although they are, of course, in the nature of proceedings in execution to enforce either directly or indirectly the final deeree. We do not agree with the lower

Appellate Court that it is necessary that a party to an application under section 144 should have been a party to the decree. Section 144 is very wide in its terms. It includes matters which an Execution Court or an Appellate Court could not ordinarily deal with, and the word "party" is not used in that section in the sense "party to the suit", which the expression ordinarily found in other parts of the Code dealing with execution matters but must mean, "party to the application." It so happens that in this particular case the matters arising out of the final decree of the Privy Council have been already on more than two occasions before this Court, although not always as between the identical parties now before us, We have decided to follow the view taken by this Court in the same or cognate matters arising out of this Privy Council decree. That is to say, firstly, this Court has already held that Damodar Das, although not a party to the Privy Council decree, was bound to give up possession and that an application under section 144 was properly made against him. We agree. That disposes of the second point decided in his favour by the lower Court. Mr. Justice Steart in a previous matter which came before him by way of first appeal in May of last year [the ease is Madhusudan Das v. Biri Lal (2)] held that the application was one justified by the provisions of section 144, and inasmuch as its only authority was derived from the final deeree of the Privy Council, it same within the expression used in Article 183 of the Limita. tion Act, as being an application to enforce an order of His Majesty in Council. The words which we have just quoted are clearly capable of being read so as to cover an application of this kind which is in substance to enforce a decree of the Privy Council which restored the parties to the position they were in before the High Court interfered. We think the only logical course to take, whatever academic view one might take as a matter of construction in the interpretation of these somewhat difficult provisions, is to follow the view taken by Mr. Justice Stuart in the case of Madhusudan Das v. Birj Lal (2). The appeal must be allowed and the ease restored to the lower Court to deal with on the merits. The appellants will have the costs of this appeal. Costs in the Court below will abide the result.

Raves, J.-I agree generally. The facts out of which this case arises are as follows. Some persons sued the appellants for possession of land. They succeeded partially in the Trial Court but on appeal in this Court, sasseded entirely. Thereupon they executed their decree and got possession of the land and then they transferred a part of the desree to the respondent and put him in possession of a corresponding portion of the land. Thereafter, the appellants appealed to His Majesty in Council. The respondent was not made a party to that appeal. On the 9th of February 1914 the Privy Council passed a decree reversing the decree of this Court and dismissed the suits. It went on to direct that the parties should bear their own costs. On the 8th of March 1914 the appellants applied to the Subordinate Judge to obtain restitution of possession of the land of which they had been deprived. They based their application on a printed copy of the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council which had been supplied to them by their Solicitor in England. It was objected by the other side that the application to the Subordinate Judge was premature and that in any ease it could not be based on the report of the Privy Council. it was pointed out that, under Order XLV, rule 15, it was necessary to apply, first of all, to the High Court to transmit the decree of the Privy Council before its execution could be taken out. The Subordinate Judge overruled this objection. On appeal this Court upheld is. The judgment is reported, Damodar Das v. Biri Lal (3), and I will refer to it later. There were two further applications made to the Subordinate Judge, one for resovery of possession and the other for costs. Both of these were made within three years of the decree of the Privy Council, that is, the 9th of February 1914. The present application was filed on the 4th of September 1918 for mesne profits for the period during which the appellants had been kept out of possession of the property. The lower Court rejected application on three grounds. Firstly that it was barred by Article 181 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, on the ground that an application for restitution was not an application in execution of a decree, and, therefore, Article 182 did not apply. It also held that Article 183 was not applicable, because it was not an application to enforce in terms the decree of the Privy Council. It, therefore, held that the only other Article posssible was Article 181 and that under that Article the application was barred by time. It also held that, inasmuch as the respondents were no party to the appeal in the Privy Conneil, they were not bound by that decree Thirdly, it applied Order II, rule 2 as barring the application. On this ground also it dismissed the application. On appeal before us all three points have been attacked. The third point has not been pressed. On the second point, I think, it is sufficient to say that in previous proceedings for restitution and costs in this very litigation arising out of this decree and in connection with the same property, it has been finally held by this Court that the respond. ents though no party to the appeal are bound by the desree. They, therefore, in my opinion cannot raise that objection again. On the first point 1 feel consider. able difficulty. It has now been held by this Court in the case of Jiwa Ram v. Nand Ram (1) that an application under section 144 of the Code is not a proceeding in execution under the Code of Civil Procedure. It is unnecessary, I think, to refer to any other rulings of other Courts. The question, however, remains as to whether, assuming that it is not an application for execution, what is the Article of Limitation which would apply. It has been held in the eases of Ram Singh v. Sham Parshad (4), Krupasindhu Roy v. Mahanta Balbhadra Das (5) and Asha Bibi v. Nuruddin (6) from Burma that applications under section 144 some within the purview of Article 181 of the Limitation Act. On the other hand, the Bombay High Court, in the case of Hamidalli v. Ahmedalli (7), and the Madras High Court, in the case of Unnamalai Ammal v. Mathan (8), have held that applications under section 144 fall within Article 182 of the Limitation Ast. I may point out that all these cases refer to applications under section 144 from decrees of the High Court and that, therefore, Article 1:3 was not and could not have been considered. It has been argued that in the case already mentioned Damodar Das v. Biri Lal (3)] this Court has really decided the matter and held that an application of this kind is really a proceeding in execution. In my opinion, however, in order to appreciate that decision it is necessary to examine what were the actual facts before the Court. There an attempt had been made to execute the decree of the Privy Council in the Court of the Subordinate Judge on the basis of a copy of their printed judgment only, and without having adopted the procedure laid down in Order XLV, rule 15. This Court held that Order XLV, rule 15 provides that whoseever desires to obtain execution of any order of his Majesty in Council must first apply under that particular order before they can proceed further and it goes on to say that the word "execution" in that Order is intended to cover execution of any kind because, as they point out, that, but for the presence of Order XLV, rule 15, there would be nothing to show what steps should be taken to execute a decree or to give effect to a decree of His Majesty in Council.

In my opinion that case takes us no farther. The only case to which we have been referred in which a Privy Council deeree has been the subject of decision, is Execution First Appeal No. 93 of 1920, decided by a Single Judge of this Court on the 7th of May 1921, which has been reported as Madhusudan Das v. Bir, Lal (2). There, although it appears from the report that Damodar Das was a party, he is not the same individual as is the respondent here. That sase is not in any way res judicata, but it is a decision among other parties to the same litigation and gives effect to the same decree of the Privy Council. It was an application to recover sertain costs, and although the order of the Privy Council as to costs was that there should be no order as to costs, this had the effect of reversing the order of the High Court which had given the respondent in that ease costs which he had resovered. Mr. Justice Stuart held that the only authority for the recovery of costs which Birj Lal paid to Musammat Indar Kuar was the order of His Majesty in Council. He held, therefore, that although that application was under section 141 of the Code, pevertheless the period of limitation applicable was that provided by Article 183 The language of Article 183 is different to that of Article 182. Article 182 provides for "the execution" of a decree or order of any Civil Court. Article 183 is "to enforce" a judgment, desree or order of His Majesty in Counsil. It seems to me that the words 'to enforce" there are wider in meaning than the words "to execute" in Artisle 182 and should be interpreted as equivalent to "to give full effect to" which is synonymous with "to enforce." In my opinion, therefore, the order of Mr. Justice Stuart was right and we should follow it. I would, therefore, allow the appeal.

By THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal must be allowed and the ease restored to the lower Court to deal with on the merits. The appellants will have the costs of this appeal. Costs in the Court below will abide the result.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLV, r.

7 (1), as amended by Act XXVI of 1920 - Appeal to Pricy Council—Security—Time for applying to change nature of security.

Although, under the proviso to sub-rule (1) of rule 7 of Order XLV of the Civil Procedure Code, added by Act XXVI of 1920 an applicant for leave to appeal to His Mejesty in Council may move the High Court to permit security to be furnished in some other form than in cash or in Government Promissory-Notes, it is essential that the court should be so moved before or at the time of the hearing of the application for leave to appeal, and if no such order is obtained at the date of the grant of the certificate, security must be furnished in cash or in Government securities within the period allowed by rule 7 of Order XoV. [p. 550, col. 1.]

MRS, KIRKWOOD C. MAUNG BIN,

Mr. Riginbotham, for the Appellants.

Mr. Hay (with him Mr. Thein Maung), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The decree of the Appillate Court in this case was granted on the 18th of April 1921. On the 13th of July, 1941, an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was filed and came on for hearing on the 3th of August 1921, when an order was passed that the certificate must be granted.

Owing to a recent raling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in respect of the contents of such certificates in certain case, it was ordered that the draft certificate should be submitted for approval before being submitted for signature. This was done, and the draft certificate was approved on the 18th of August, 1921.

The usual notice to the appellants to furnish security within the time allowed by Order XLV, rale 7, of the Civil Procedure Code, was issued on the 18th of August 1921 and at the same time a copy of the cartificate bearing date the 18th of August 1921, was furnished to Counsel for the appellants.

On the 21st of Septembar 1921, an application was filed by the appellants setting out that by an order, dated the 8th of August 1921, this Court was pleased to order the issue of the certificate for leave to appeal. Petitioners prayed that one Ma Aye was willing to stand surety on the security of her paddy lands, the value of which is set out. A draft mortgage bond was filed, and it was prayed that her security might be accepted. It further prayed that, in ease the time for farnishing security fell short of the period allowed, an extension of time may be granted, and that Ma Aye's Attorney may be allowed to execute the mortgage bond.

On the 28th of October 1921 a further application was filed, in which it was set out that petitioners' attention had been drawn to the amendment of Order XLV, rule 7, introdused by Act XXVI of 1920, and they prayed to be allowed to file an affidavit in support of their previous application. The affidavit was intended to show that an order should be made as prayed on the ground of special bardship.

A preliminary objection has been taken that the applications are barred by time, that the time for furnishing scourity has already elapsed, the leave to appeal can, therefore, not be granted, and that the certificate must be cancelled.

We have heard Counsel as to this preliminary objection and have reserved consideration of the merits of the applications until the objection has been decided.

It may be conceded that the procedure adopted by the petitioners was in accordance with the rules of this Court prior to the passing of Act XXVI of 1920. By that Act several important changes were made in rule 7 of Order XLV. The priod within which the applicant was to furnish security was altered from six months to three months from the date of the decree, the Court being granted a discretion to extend the period of three months up to a further period of sixty days. No change was made in the provision that security might be furnished within six weeks from the date of the grant of the certificate.

A further amendment was made in subclause (a) by inserting the words "in each or in Government securities" word 'security." The result of this amend. ment is, that applicants are bound to furnish security in each or in Government securities, but a proviso is further inserted allowing the Court to permit, on the ground of special hardship, some other form of security to be furnished. The result of these changes is, that one of the two alternative periods within which seenrity must be furnished is altered, and further that the security must be furnished in each or in Government sesurities, unlesse a special order is obtained from the Court to the contrary, in accord. anse with the provisions of the proviso that has been inserted.

Security has not been furnished within three months from the date of the decree. No application for any extension of that period was made and the applicant has, therefore, to show that he has furnished security within six weeks from the date of the grant of the certificate. It is equally elear that he has not done so, but it is urged that he proceeded strictly in accordance with the rules of this Court and that, therefore, his application should be granted.

We have been referred to recent rules which have been published by this Court only a short time ago. They were drawn up before the amending Ast was passed and may have to be amended, but they do not govern the applications before us which were made before they came into force. The previously existing rules were abrogated by the amendment of the Act with reference to which they were passed.

The proviso to sub-rule (1) of rule 7. lays down that, "The Court at the time of granting the certificate may, after hearing any opposite party who appears, order, on the ground of special hardship, that some other form of security may be furnished: Provided further, that no adjourn. ment shall be granted to an opposite party to contest the nature of such security."

The whole of the amendments made by this Act were clearly intended to combat delays in the matter of appeals to His Majesty in Council, and special provision is made that, as an ordinary rule, the security to be furnished shall be furnished in each or in Government securities, and while the proviso allows some other form of security, it provides against any delay by reason of such permission being given by requiring that the order for such other form of security must be passed at the time the certificate is granted. By this means the period of six weeks from the date of the grant of the certificate within which security must be furnished is not extended. therefore, it was open to the applicant to move the Court to permit security in any other form to be granted, it is essential the Court should be so moved before or at the time of the hearing of the application for leave to appeal when a certificate would be granted. If no such order is obtained at the date of the grant of the certificate, security must be furnished in each or in Government securities within the allowed by rule 7 as amended.

Security has not been furnished and we must, therefore, allow the objection, with the result that leave to appeal will not be granted and the certificate must be treated as eancelled.

The applications are, therefore, dismissed with sosts. Advocates' fees five gold mohurs.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s 107-Question of proprietary title-Appeal to District Judge - Partition-Temple , property-Managers, whether can claim partition.

Where in a suit for partition in a Revenue Court objectors admit the proprietary title of the applicant but deny his right to demand a partition, a question of proprietary title is raised and against the decision in such a case an appeal lies to the District Judge.

In the case of property dedicated to an idol the managers of the temple having to manage the landed property in the interests of the temple, have an inherent right to claim a partition under the law, being the managers of the recorded ccsharer.

Second appeal against a decision of the District Judge, Meerut, dated the 28th July 1920.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellants. Mr. S. N. Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- The facts are as follows:-A certain lady dedicated a share in a village to the god described as Sri Thakur Lachmi Narain whose temple was in the village, and by the deed of dedication appointed certain managers of the temple. These managers, sning in the name of the god, applied for partition in the Revenue Court under section 107 of the Land Revenue Act. The god is a recorded so sharer. Other so sharers took the objection that the managers in question were not authorised under the deed of endewDULHIN LACHHAMBATI KUMBI t. BODHNATH TIWARI.

ment to apply for partition. They did not contest the fact that the god was a recorded so sharer, nor did they contest the fact that the plaintiffs were the managers of the temple. The Assistant Collector allowed this objection and dismissed the application. An appeal was taken to the District Judge on the ground that the question was one of proprietary title. He decided that the question was one of proprietary title, and further decided that as the god was a recorded eo. sharer, the managers of the temple had an inherent right to put the law in motion on behalf of the recorded so sharer whom they represented, apart from any resital in the deed of trust. He accordingly allowed the appeal. In second appeal it is contended that no appeal lay to the District Judge and that his order cannot be supported on the merits. It is true that in this case the objectors did not assert that the god had no right to apply for a partition. They asserted only that his managers could not represent him in the matter. It was desided in the eass of Abu Muhammad Rhan v. Kaniz Fizza (1), that where the objectors admit the proprietary title of the applicant but deny the right to demand a partition, a question of proprietary title was raised. I do not con. sider that it is straining the meaning of the words to hold that the objectors here raised a question of proprietary right. An appeal, therefore, lay to the District Judgs. On the merits, his view was elearly correct. The managers of the temple having to manage the landed property in the interests of the temple, have an inherent right to claim a partition under the law, being the managers of the recorded co-sharer. I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Merger-Mukarrari lease-Patni lease-Both to different members of same family-Intention.

Merger is not a thing which occurs ipso jure upon the acquisition of what, for the sake of a just generalisation, may be called the superior with the inferior right. There may be many reasons conveyancing reasons, reasons arising out of the object of the acquisition of the one right being merely for a temporary purpose, family reasons and others -in the course of which the expediency of avoiding the coalescence of interest and preserving the separation of title may be apparent. In short, the question to be settled in the application of the doctrine of merger is, was such a coalescence of right meant to be accomplished as to extinguish that separation of title which the records contain? [p 553, col 1.]

Where a mukarrari lease is granted in favour of certain members of a joint Hindu family, and later on a patni lease is granted of the same lands in favour of certain other members of the same family and upon the documents and accounts it is plain that the two are kept alive there is no merger.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW .- This is an appeal against a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, dated June 27, 1916, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur dated August 20, 1912.

The purpose of the suit was for a deelaration of the plaintiffs' title to a paini taluk called Israin Kalan, in the District of Bhagalpur, and for khas possession of certain lands which are in the bands of the defendants. The defendants this claim on the ground that they are the holders of a mukarrari, lease of a son. DULBIN LACHBARBATI EDMRI C. BODBRATH TIWARI.

sderable portion of the petni called Jadua potti.

There were many issues in the case, each party attacking the title of the other. Interalia, a strongly contested issue was whether the mukarrari lease set up by the defendants was genuine. After a very full trial there is a consurrent finding by both Courts that it was.

The case was ably argued before the Board, and the point of contention may be said to have been that which was contained in the eighth issue tried before the Subordinate Judge. That issue was in these terms: "Was the said mukarrari interest merged in the point interest of the defendants' first party and thereby extinguished?" If this merger took place, the defence fails. If it did not take place, the defence succeeds.

Reduced to the simplest elements, and confined to those which bear upon the issues so determined, the facts may be stated thus: One Mathura Nath Ghosh was proprietor of the Manza holding under Lakhiraj title prior to 1846. On June 14 of that year, he granted a mukarrari lease respecting Jadua patti in favour of Dhir Nath Tiwari and Loke Nath Tiwari, the predecessors of the Tiwari defendante, at a rental of Re. 66-11-3. There can be no dcubt that this was an agricultural lease binding the lessees "to cultivate the said land to your satisfaction." Under this agricultural lease the leasees would, according to practice, either farm the lands them. selver, or let them to other cultivatore, drawing rents therefor. During their possession the value of the lands thus let in mukarrari appears to have greatly risen.

Ten years later—namely, on August 31, 1856, the owner of the Marza, Mathura Nath Ghoth, already mentioned, granted a paini lease of the whole Marza in favour of two persons, Tej Narayan Tiwari and Kalit Nath Tiwari, More than two years afterwards, Tej Narayan Tiwari sold his half share of the paini to Kalit. The exact date of this transaction was December 19,

The question whether these transactions were fundamentally joint family transactions and should be so treated for the parpose of the application of the doctrine of merger, is a question which will be afterwards referred to; but, in the meantime, it may be noted that is facie of there two trareactions, the potni lease and the muharreri lease, they are pranted by the same granter to grantees who are different persons. But for the introduction of this question of the joint family, the point of merger could not, in fact, srice, as there is no identity of person between the mukar. raridars and the patnidars. This applies elearly to August 1856 when the point lease was granted, but it also further applies to December 1858 when Tej Tiwari sold his half-share to Kalit Tiwari, besause Kelit, although thereafter bolding the patni en bloc, was not himself a mukar. raridar of Jadua patni.

Accepting for the moment, bowever, as relevant, the fact that Kalit Tiwari, the potnidar, was of the same joint family as Dhir Tiwari and Loke Tiwari, the mukarridars under the 1846 deed, and accepting also as relevant, for the moment, that when a joint family interest can be postulated, the dostrine of merger should be applied to it, their Lordships note that much authority was eited to the Board as it had been to the Courts below, on the proposition broadly maintained that, prior to the Transfer of Property Ast, there was no law of merger in the mofusil. The various points of this argument, including the question whether the case law applicable to the situation of mortgagor and mortgagee, ecold be applied by securate analogy to the case of mukarraridar and patnidarthere various points need not be entered upon at leigth in the present case, in view of the elear opinion which the Board has formed and which will be presently stated as to the true range of the doetrine of merger itself. It may, however, be mentioned incidentally that towards the close of the series of decisions referred to, there occurs the case of Hirendra Nath Dutt v. Hare Mohan Ghose (1) and in the judgment of the Court, consisting of Fletcher and Chatterjee, JJ., of whom the latter delivered the judg. ment, there is a valuable review of the reries of decisions upon this branch of Irdian law.

Before leaving the list of Indian eases referred to, it may, however, also be ob-

DUCHIN LACGHANBITI ZUKBI U. BODGHATH TIWARI,

ease by the later balf of them, which were ruled by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. This case is not so ruled, but depends upon general law.

But, if the desrine of merger is appealed to, that doetrine may be taken as it stands. Merger is not a thing which occurs ipso jure upon the acquisition of what, for the sake of a just generalisation, may be called the superior with the inferior right. There may be many reasons-conveyancing reasons, reasons arising out of the object of the acquisition of the one right being merely for a temporary purpose, family reasons and others-in the source of which the expediency of avoiding the coalescence of interest and precerving the separation of title may be apparent. In short, the question to be settled in the application of the dostrine is, was such a coalescence of right meant to be accomplished as to extinguish that separation of title which the records contain? This is in accord with settled law, of which two recent instances may be given -namely, Capital and Counties Bank v. Rhodes (2), and especially the judgment of Farwell, J, in Ingle v. Jenkins (3).

The dostrine of merger being thus applied to the present case, it is found, on an examination of the circumstances, that they show with great elearness that, instead of the mukarrari lease baving been extinguished by merger, it was, on the contrary, kept up, as upon the one hand the source of right to the cultivators proceeding from the mukarridars, and upon the other, the separate grant of subsisting right to the mukarridars by their lease in respect of which the payment into the paint exchequer of the specific Rs. 66, specified in the mularrari lease, continued to be made. The argument of Mr. Kenworthy Brown upon the documents made this clear. It is not, however, necessary to enter upon the details thereof, for both the Courts in India, after full investigation, are satisfied in that particular point. Had there been a true merger in fact, and in intention, the whole of such transactions would, in all probability, have taken a different shape, and in particular no more would have been heard of the mukarrari rent.

This raises the last question in the case, and it is one of importance. It was strongly argued by the appellants' Connsel that it was sufficient for his purpose to show that mukarraridars and potnidars were of the same joint family, and that the difference of name of the one set of persons from the other person was of no assount.

Their Lordships are not of this opinion. The difference of name, it is not going too far to say, may be at least an element, and an important element, in the question whether merger was ever truly intended. There may, under the law of England, be complete fundamental identity of right between the holder under one title, and the holder under another, but a convenient method of indicating intention on the subject is to create, for the purpose of keeping up the separation of title, a trust by which merger in the legal sente is clearly avoided. In short, although the same person is traly and comprehensively the owner of all the rights which might have coalesced, the substance of separation is preserved by the form of title not having been allowed to merge into the one name.

To apply this doctrine to the Indian joint family, when a joint family interest might be said to cover rights acquired to property by several individuals belonging to the family, but when the rights which might otherwise be merged are conferred by titles taken in the names of different members of the family, and thereby the means of articulate differentiation is continued as effectually as by the artifice employed in England of the setting up of a trust ad hoc, then it appears to their Lordships that these circumstances are elements for consideration.

All the length that this judgment goes is, that the fast that the two sets of title do not meet in identity of name, but are separately attached to separate members of the family, is a matter to be considered on the question whether merger was ever intended. As already stated, however, in the present case, in addition to the title standing in the names of different members of the family, the transaction under which the mukarrori lease and the rights consequent thereupon were kept.

JUDGMENT.—This purports to be an application to set aside an order of abatement. It appears that one of the respondents died in March 1921 and an application was put in by the learned Vakil for the appellant after ninety days had expired. The learned Vakil in the application stated that the appeal as against the deceased respondent had abated and he applied for an order under Order XXII, rule 9 (2). The matter came before a learned Judge of this Court who was of opinion that the application was premature, inasmuch as there was no order of the Court declaring the appeal to have abated As, bowever, a learned Judge of this Court in

Lichmi Narain v. Muhammad Yusuf (1) was of opinion that on the expiry of ninety days after the death of a respondent, if no applieation was made within ninety days to bring his representatives on to the record, the appeal automatically abated and it was not necessary that a formal order should have been passed to that effect before an application under Order XXII, rule 9 (2), sould be made. As the learned Judge before whom this application first came doubted the correct. ness of the raling, the matter was referred to two Judges and comes before us. It seems to us that the point is concluded by Secretary of State for India v. Jushir Lal (2) and we think that that decision was correct In Order XXII, rule 9 (2) it is stated that the plaintiff may apply for an order to set aside the abatement or dismissal. It is quite obvious that a suit cannot be dismissed automatically. It seems to us, therefore, that a formal order declaring that a suit or an appeal has abated, is necessary before an application under this rule can be entertained. We, therefore, dismiss this application and order the appeal to be put up in the ordinary course. In order to save time, we direct that the appeal be put up tomorrow before us for orders.

This second appeal and Second Appeal No. 1393 of 1919 coming on for hearing on the 17th, 22od and 23rd, respectively, of September 1920, the Court (Oldfield and Hughes, JJ.,) delivered the following

JUDGMENT .- These appeals have to some extent been argued on identical grounds, The appellants-11th and 16th defendants -are purchasers of certain items of property covered by what may be described scenrity-bond, Exhibit C. The District Munsif dismissed the suit brought by the holder of Exhibit C to enforce its terms against the executants and against the property bound by it. The lower Appellate Court gave the deeree asked for, which is now under appeal.

The first contention with which we have to deal is, that Exhibit O has not been properly proved. The lower Courts dealt with the question on the assumption that Exhibit C is a mortgage with reference to section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act and sections 68 and 71 of the Evidence Act.

Here we might not be able to follow the lower Appellate Court in its application of section 71. But it is unnecessary for us to go further into this portion of the ease. because we accept the respondents' contention that the document is not a mortgage, but a charge, to which section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act is applicable. It is urged that the provisions of section 58 (599) of the Transfer of Property Act and of the Evidence Act apply also to charges; but we cannot fied any warrant for that even in the wording of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, still less in Order XXXIV. Civil Procedure Code, by which the procedure portion of the Transfer of Property Act has been superseded, and from which material portion of section 100 has been omitted. Rule 15 of Order XXXIV, which relates directly to charges, is in different terms from section 100 and those terms go no way towards supporting the appellants' argument. A reference to Exhibit C shows that it does not transfer any interest in the property, but simply makes it liable for the satisfaction of the plaintiffs' claim. We have no hesitation in holding that it constitutes a sharge and not a nortgage, and that the special provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, relating to the attestation of mortgages, and of the Evidence Act, relating to the method of proof of mortgager, are not applicable. It has been suggested that we should remand the ease in order that the lower Appellate Court might find whether Exhibit C been proved bae evidence in accordance on the the general law. It is sufficient that the lower Appellate Court has already recorded a finding that the document has been proved with reference to section 71 of the Evidence Act. We, therefore, hold that Exhibit C has been properly proved.

The next question is, whether the plaintiffs have shown that any thing has happened which entitles them to recover under Exhibit C. The appellants argue that, in respect of two items at least, on a part of which the plaintiffs' elaim had been allowed, nothing has been established.

First, it is arged, in respect of Exhibit J, that, although Exhibit J is a decree given in a suit brought subsequently to Exhibit O, the liabliity represented by that decree had arisen before Exhibit C, and that it is BAMABAMI IYEYGAR U. ECFPUSAMI IYER.

incoresivable that the parties to the dcen. ment could have contemplated the application of the security towards their liability. when they sould have made explicit reference to it and did not do so. This argument has been further complicated by the fact that the plaintiffs, who were parties to the proceedings in which Exhibit J was obtained, did not join in the appeal which other persons liable under Exhibit J preferred to the High Court and which ended in their exoneration. We may say at once that it has not been suggested that it was owing to any fraud or collusion or gross negligence that the plaintiffs did not earry the care to the High Court and participate in the berefit of its decision. In the absence of some such considerations, we cannot see how they were not justified in making a pay. ment in satisfaction of the decree, which might have been exceuted against the property in their bande.

Returning to the general considerations arising in respect of Exhibit J, we observe that the liability on which it was based, was no doubt inexistence before Exhibit C was executed. The terms, however, of Exhibit C are very The material general. portion follows :- "Whether we defaulted in discharging the said prior encumbrances or whether through the said prior ensumbrances or other means, disputes arose in respect of the sale lands, and in consequer ce, any part of the sale property fails to belong to you, or whether you suffered loss in any other manner, we have in consideration therefor furnished to you as security the properties mentioned below." We cannot accept the appellants' suggestion that as some ensumbrances have been specified, the mere debt, which might or might not be ultimately recovered from the property, must, at the date of the execution of Exhibit (), be held to have been cutside the contemplation of the parties. There is reference to the disputes arising tot only in respect of the said prior ensumbrances or other means "but also to the loss suffered "in any other manner." We think that this language is quite ecoprehensive enough to cover the contingerey in which the plaintiffs were constrained to make a payment towards Exhibit J. A somewhat similar argument has been bored on Exhibit D and can be similarly answered,

The appeals are next argued with reference to limitation. The appllants contended that the suit was out of time. because either Article No. 83 or Article No. 116 is applicable to it. Article No. 83 provides for suits upon contracts to indemnify, and no doubt Exhibit O is a contract to indemnify, and no doubt also, with reference to Article No. 116, is a contract in writing registered. But those facts will not deprive it of the further character which it possesses by viture of the provision which it contains for a charge on immoveable property. The wording of Exhibit C that these lands specified in it are given as seeprity and that the excentants under it and their heirs should be bound to pay the money on the liability of the said scourity is, in our opinion, sufficient to constitute a charge. We, therefore, bold that the suit is a suit to enforce payment of the money charged on the immoveable property and that it is within time with reference to Article 132, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act. We might add that there is no question of personal liability raised in these appeals.

The remaining matter common to the two appeals is the claim of the appellants -11th and 16th defendants-to subrogation in respect of mortgages which the 11th defendant's vendor and the 16th defendant bad discharged. No doubt, a elaim was made in respect of these mortgages at the beginning of the trial. The issue framed, however, was very general, and the District Munsif made no reference to the mortgages relied on by these two appellante, although he dealt with the other elaims under that issue. dismissed the suit, it was unnesessary for him to refer to any such claims or to any decision on them in his decree. In the lower Appellate Court, the plaintiffs obtained a decree, a different view being taken regarding Exhibit O and other matters. But it does not appear that any contention was put forward regarding subrogation or that the 11th and 16th defendants insisted on their claims to it. We do not think that they can revive their elaims in search appeal.

The appellant in Second Appeal No. 1393 has also claimed compensation for improvements, apparently under section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act, in case he is evicted from the property. That claim was mentioned in the written statement but was not put in issue, and, so far as appears, was never referred to again in either of the lower Courts. In respect of this, again, we decline to interfere at this stage in second appeal, claim which is dealt with in paragraph 41 of the District Munsif's judgment. The District Munsif apparently would have allowed it, if he had given plaintiffs a decree at all. The lower Appellate Court in giving plaintiffs a decree lost eight of this contention of the 16th defendant and did not consider it or make any reference to it. We think that the lower Appellate Court must consider it now.

The result is that the Second Appeal No. 1393 by the 11th defendant is dismissed with costs of the plaintiffs,

In Second Appeal No. 1372 the lower Appellate Court will submit a finding on the evidence on record on the issue whether any portion, and if so, how much, of the 16th detendant's items is liable for sale?

JUDGMENT. - This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for redemption of a mertgage, executed about 45 years ago by Dec Saran and Mantol in favour of Ram Rup and Madho, now represented by the defend ants, of a grove No. 97 for about Rs. 5. The plaintiff sued as representative of the mort. gagors. The defence was a denial of the mortgage and the plaintiff's right to redeem. The defendants further plead that they were in possession as Zeminders for a large number of years and that no grove existed on the land. The Munsif held that there was no grove nor was there a mortgage and dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has differed from the Munsif on these two points and has allowed redemption. The defendants some here in second appeal and the point urged by them before me is, that the lower Appellate Court has erred in holding that the mortgage has been proved because the only witness in support of the mortgage is one Bindeshri, an illiterate person, and no other witness has been produced, and such an illiterate person could not be deemed to be one who has seen the mortgage within clause (5) of section 63 of the Evidence Act. argument of the learned Vakil for the appellants finds full support from the case of Ghure v. Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, r.

1-Review, application for, grant of—"Other sufficient reasons"—Appeal, maintainability of.

No appeal lies from an order granting a review for "other sufficient reasons" within the meaning of Order XLVII, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code.

First appeal from the order of the District Judge, Badaun, dated 14th May 1921.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Appellants. Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUCGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order passed by the District Judge of Budaun, allowing an application for review of an appellate judgment in a case heard by him on the 18th of February 1920. The circumstances are somewhat peculiar. The suit was one for declaration and the plaintiff had lost in the Trial Court. On the day on which the appeal was down for hearing the plaintiff was in hospital, and on the day following he was operated upon, so that all his family were naturally in attendance upon him at the hospital. A week later he died, apparently without having left the hospital.

The applicant for review is the son of the original plaintiff-appellant. He came before the District Judge with a number of certified copies, apparently of public documents, which he said it had been intended to lay before the Appellate Court with a view to their admission in evidence under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 27 of the Code of Oivil Procedure. He ascribed the failure to do this to his father's serious and fatal illness and the circumstances attendant thereon which have already been stated. The learned District Judge has passed an order granting review of judgment.

One thing seems clear and should be understood by the parties concerned. The order so far passed is merely an order for the re-hearing of the appeal, as it was heard on the 18th of February 1920, with liberty to the plaintiff appellant to make any appliestion, as, for instance, an application under Order XLI, rule 27. Civil Procedure Code, which could have been made on that date and might have been so made but for the serious illness of the then appellant. It is still left to the Court below to consider carefully whether a case is made out for the admission of fresh evidence under Order XLI, rule 27 of the Civil Procedure Code, as well as the effect of the evidence thus tendered may have upon the decision, if it be accepted.

The appeal before us is subject to the provisions of Order XLVII, rule 7 of the Civil Procedure Code. There is no question of limitation involved and there has been no contravention of Order XLVII, rule 2. The contention before us is that there has been a contravention of Order XLVII, rule 4, because the Court below has granted an application for review on the ground of discovery of new matter or evidence, without the strict proof of the necessary allegations which is required under the provisions of the said rule. It seems doubtful whether this review has really been granted on the ground of the discovery of new and important matter or evidence. Ordinarily, that expression would refer only to a discovery made since the order sought to be reviewed was passed. Under the somewhat peculiar eircumstances of the present case, the applicant, while alleging the discovery of new and important evidence, does not say that he has discovered it since the passing of the order sought to be reviewed; on the contrary, it is his grievance that he was prevented by circumstances beyond his control from tendering this evidence to the Court at the time when the judgment sought to be reviewed was delivered against him. If the application be treated as falling within the purview of the words "discovery of new and important evidence which after the exercise of due diligence could not be produced at the time when the deeree was passed," it seems difficult to hold, in view of the discretion allowed to Courts in this matter, that the District Judge arrived at the conclusion that this new evidence could not be tendered at the previous hearing of the appeal without such proof as the law considers sufficient. If, on the other hand, the ease does not really fall within the purview of these words at all, then the learned District Judge has granted this review "for other sufficient ressons", within the meaning of Order XLVII, rule 1, and the appeal against it is not maintainable.

For these reasons we are content to dismiss this appeal, and we do so with costs.

Jurisdiction-Civil and Revenue Courts-Proceeding of Revenue Court-Fraud-Civil Court, whether can be moved.

Per Walsh, J.—A Civil Court cannot set aside the proceedings of a Revenue Court, but it might declare that the conduct of the parties to the suit, in obtaining orders in their favour, no matter what they are, has been in fact fraudulent and that the plaintiff's interest, if he had any, in the property in suit is not affected by any order so fraudulently obtained. It can declare, for instance, that the plaintiff is entitled to possession of the property as owner and can award damages for deceit or fraud.

JUDGMENT.

WALSE, J .- In my opinion this appeal fails. The members of the Court are not entirely agreed about their way of looking at it, although this disagreement is not one of enbstance so much as of form. About one point we entirely agree, namely, that we both of us object, indeed resent very strongly, being salled upon to deside this point of law without any finding at all. It would have been much better if the Munsif, and indeed all Munsifs and all Trial Courts, were to do what the Munsif ought to have done in this case, devote himself to the trial of the facts and deeide all the issues, instead of proceeding to write essays on points of law. Assumed statements of fact have not been agreed to by the parties. Of course, if the parties agree to a statement of fast so that such fact is binding upon them in the suit as if it were established by evidence, then the question of law becomes ripe for decision. Most questions in legal proceedings, and in the difficult business of settling disputes of parties who are at variance with one another about the facts, are mixed questions of fast and law, and it is only when the facts are irrevocably established, that one can apply the law. On the other hand, and it is here where I differ from my brother, it seems to me that certain decisions are forced upon us, that is to say, we cannot deal with this appeal without taking a definite view of certain principles of law, and as I feel elear about them, I have no besita. tion in expressing my opinion, and if the result is to prevent the appellant before us to-day from raising them hereafter in this suit or elsewhere, all I can say is that that is the penalty he has to pay for what seems to me an idle attempt by this appeal to burke an irquiry into facts. I entirely agree with the main part of the learned Judge's judgment, and I am content to adopt as part of my judgment, the final passage beginning with the words:-"It is true, that a tenant, who has held the same land continuously for a period of twelve years, shall have the right of ossupancy created in his favour in such land, but presumably it means a tenant to whom the landlord rightfully leases the land possessed by him.

"In this case, the plaintiff alleges, that the land holder obtained possession of the land fraudulently by colluding with the pairolars of the guardian of the plaintiff. The possession was, therefore, not legal. The tenant baving obtained from the land holder possession, which in its nature was a fraudulent one, did not acquire any rights of companey or otherwise by holding the land continuously for twelve years

"This is, however, denied by the other side, who allege, that once the Tenancy Ast creates occupancy rights in a tenant, no Court can pass an order depriving the tenant of those rights.

"It is a settled law, that a minor plaintiff is as much bound by a decree in a case and by all the proceedings following it, as a person of full age; and cannot, nor can his representatives, open the proceedings unless on the ground of gross laches, or of the fraud and collusion, which, when established, will undoubtedly annul the proceedings of the Courts of Justice as much as any other transaction. Therefore, a decree, whether it is of a Civil or Rant Court, can, in my opinion, be impeached, where there is a gross negligence by the guardian in the conduct of the minor's suit.

"The question that I have to decide is, whether the plaintiff, who was then a minor and against whom a deeree was passed under section 59 of the Tenancy Act, is to suffer by any negligeree or want of knowledge on the part of his guardian. I am of opinion that he cannot be called upon to suffer. The proposition that a minor of tender years may bave his whole fortune wreeked by the neglest of his guardian is so monstrous, that I for one can pay no attention to it. A minor is entitled to have a guardian, who must be diligent, and who must protect his interests. It is, therefore, clear, that gross negligence on the part of his guardian would entitle a minor to obtain the avoidance of proceedings undertaken on his behalf. A minor, there fore, when he comes of age, can sue in his own name for anything, that his guardian. either through ignorance, or negligence, has omitted to prosecute, and no law would prevent him from so suing : because if it were otherwise, no minor could be safe; and I do not see how Mahadeo Prasad plaintiff, after be attained his majority, is barred from elaiming the property, of which, owing to the pegligence of his guardian, he had been deprived. Once the minor establishes the fasts alleged in his plaint, viz., that the Zamindar colluded with the pairokars, or his grardian, and made them absent themselves from appearing before the Rent Court on the 18th of December 1906, and took steps that the certified copy of the application made to the Judge, might not be filed, and thus obtained the ejectment order, the proceedings ejecting the plaintiff, must be deemed to have been vitiated, and the plaintiff entitled to restitution of the property by avoidance of the proceedings of the 18th of December 1906, and those that followed it subsequently.

'It was, therefore, of the utmost importance, that the learned Munsif should have gone into the merits." I merely observe that I have reason to know that a portion of that ex. tract in the middle with reference to wreeking the fortune of a minor, is a verbatim extract from a judgment to be found in Hoghton, In re, Highton v. Fiddey (1). It is none the worse for that, but it is not merely the opinion of the learned Judge. Mr. Peary Lal Banerji who has ably argued his case, as usual, in all its bearings, has strongly pressed upon us that the suit, especially as against him, offends against the provisions of the Tenancy Act, and that a Civil Court has no jurisdietion to declare proceedings in a Revenue Court invalid even on the ground of fraud. I think it is too late to raise this question in this Coart. It seems to me to be well settled. Certainly a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to set aside the proceedings in a Revenue Court, but I have no doubt that it has jurisdiction to declare that a course of conduct which eventuates in some decree or order in the Revenue Court or on the revenue side. was fraudulently devised or was the result of some wisked conspiracy to injure the plaintiff and deprive him of his rights behind his back and without his knowledge. This seems to me to be clear from the judgment of the Obief Justice in the case of Rai Krishen Ohand v. Mahadeo Singh (2), commented upon and followed by Mr. Justice Banerji in the case of Uman Shankar v. Bhagwan Din (3), and given effect to in the judgment of the Court of which I was a member in the case of Raghunandan Ahir v. Sheonandan Ahir (4). (1) (1874) 18 Eq. 573; 43 L. J. Ch. 758; 22 W. R.

JAMMO C. MAHADES PRASAD.

The question seems to me to be clearly one of fundamental principle which really admits of The whole of the very little diseussion. argument on behalf of the appellant before us to-day is based upon a fallacy. If fraud is established, there was no tenancy in existence at all to which the provisions of the Tenancy Act would apply, and the argument that the Civil Court, in entertaining such a suit, is asurping the functions of the Revenue Court in a matter which has been exclusively entrusted to the Revenue Court by the Legislature, seems to me to be based upon this fallacy. It may be that the two jurisdictions are mutually exclusive. I take it that a Ravenue Court could hear an application to review its own proceedings on the basis of new matter analogous to the new provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. I express no opinion as to whether these provisions are. applicable to the proceedings in a Rovenue Court. That is their business. Presumably, if a Revenue Court finds that it has been deceived by a fraudulent knave who has brought dishonest proseelings in order to obtain orders against an ignorant and halpless minor, it might, on the new facts. being brought to its notice, re-open its own proceedings in the exercise of its inherent powers to do justice in the matters entrusted to it. As to this I am anable to express any opinion. It is a matter for the Revenue Court. But that Court certainly has no jurisdiction to grant damages in an action for deceit, and I can imagine no possible ground either in law or equity or sommon sense, upon which, in such a case as occurred in Raghunandan Ahir v. Sheo Nandan Ahir (4), or in this case, if a person has really been deseived, he sannot sue in a Civil Court to establish the fasts in his own favour and to obtain a deelaration of the assertion of his true rights to which he has succeeded or which be has inherited. He claims to be re placed. in the position which he would have ossupied if it had not been for such proceedings, and asks for damages which, in the case of land, would necessarily take the form of mesne profits as against those who have decrived. him, and who have enjoyed the land and the profits thereof, and also asks to be restored to the possession of the land of which he has been deprived. Il leannot imagine that in ensh a ease, an action would be, to use the old word, demarrable, even although it happens to include matters in respect of which the Ravenue Court itself might also grant relief in another proceeding. As we are seized of the matter, I merely mention for the possible assistance of the parties and of the Courts who have to try this case, that it seems to me that the relief claimed in this suit by the plaint is not properly framed and is capable of very considerable improvement. A Civil Court cannot set aside the proceedings of a Revenue Court, although it is possible that the learned gentleman who settled this plaint had a sort of hops, if not a belief, that it could. If it could, the Civil Courts, judging from some of the matters which come up here for decision, would be engaged in little else but hearing suits brought for the purpose of setting aside proceedings on the revenue side. But it might declars that the conduct of the parties to the suit in obtaining orders in their favour, no matter what they are, has been in fact fraudulent and that the plaintiff's interest, if he had any, in the property in suit is not affected by any order so fraudulently obtained. It can, no doubt, declare that the plaintiff is entitled to possession of the property as owner, and can award damages for deseit or fraud. These are matters which the Trial Court will do well to consider in disposing of this suit if a proper application for amendment is made by any party. In my judgment, this order was right in substance and in form and the suit ought to go bask to be determined by the First Court.

The appeal is dismissed with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Brvs., J.—Without giving a decided opinion on any of the abstract questions of law raised in the arguments. I am not prepared to say that the order of remand is so wrong that I should feel constrained to set it aside. It seems to me that the suit must be tried out and the facts found. The Court will then be in a position to come to a proper decision. I agree in the order passed.

By THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that this appeal is dismissed with. costs in-sluding fees on the higher scale.

Special second civil appeal from a decree of the Divisional Judge, Hanthawaddy, reversing a decree of the District Judge, Hanthawaddy,

Mr. Burjorji, for the Appellant. Mr. Chari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- It is necessary to set out the facts of this case in order thoroughly to appreciate the point to be decided. The plaintiff appellant obtained a mortgage, dated the 30th June 1903, from the mortgagor. The mortgage deed has not been filed in the present suit but it is said to have been a mortgage in English form. strenuously opposed and Mr. This WAS Burjorji for the appellant stated that he did not press any rights on that basis. The mortgage must, therefore, be treated as a simple mortgage. In consequence, it gave him no right to the present possession of the land mortgaged and that right remained in the mortgagor. On the 24th of April 1911, the mortgagor sold the lands now in suit by registered-deed to respondents Nos. 1 and 2. On the 20th December 1912 the plaintiff-appellant brought a suit on his mortgage against the mortgagor. He did not implead respondents Nor. 1 and 2. He obtained a decree on the 22nd April 1915 and in execution thereof, be brought the lands to sale, including the land in suit and purchased them himself. On the 16th November 1917, respondents Nos. 1 and 2 transferred the land in suit by a registered deed of sale. to their shildren, respondents Nos. 3, 4 and 5. When the appellant sought to obtain presession by virtue of his sale certificate, he was resisted by the respond. ents and then, on the 6th January 1919, he brought the present suit which was for posreseion by ejectment and a declaration that the deeds of sale referred to above were inoperative and of no effect as against him. He further asked for mesce profits for a smell sum of revenue alleged to bave been paid by bim and for costs. It appears from the examination of the parties at the commencement of the suit that, on the purchase of this land by respondents Nos. 1 and 2, they obtained immediate possession and that fact has not been contested.

The learned Judge held that plaintiff would be entitled to postession provided that the respondents were given an opportunity of redeeming on payment of the full amount due on the mortgage after accounts had been taken in his presence and that on failure to pay the amount so found due within the time fixed by the decree, the appellant should be given possession. He declined to follow the ruling of this Court in San Bin v. Nagamutu (1) in which Sir Charles Fox considered a recent decision of the Madras High Court in Mulla Vettel Seeths v. Achuthan Nair (2) and which he held undoubtedly to state the law scrreetly, on the ground that these judgments dealt with the converse case. The learned Divisional Judge beld that this fact made no difference and that he was bound by the decision of this Court, and accepted the appeal.

The question then for decision before us is, whether, under the circumstances set forth above, the appellant is entitled to possession and to out the respondents, even though the decree be in the form suggested which would preserve respondent's right of redemption and provide for the mortgage accounts being again gone into in his presence.

A very large number of cases have been referred to but a great majority of them have been discussed and analysed in the desision of the Madras High Court referred to above. We have very earefully considered these desisions with a view to ascertaining on what grounds and arguments they were based, and in order to learn what, if any, legal principles were applied. We think no useful purpose will be served by our again dealing with them in detail. In some, the Courts were inflaenced by the idea that the omission to implead a puisne mortgages or the purchaser from the mortgagor was sharp practice: in others they apparently regard the fact that a fresh suit by the mortgages to enforce his mortgage rights would be barred as justifying the grant of relief in another form : in others the claim was made in the alternative for possession or to be allowed to redeem or to compel the puisne mortgages or purchaser to redeem; in some the fact that the puisne mortgagee had only a right to redeem the prior mortgagee was held to justify a decree if he be given an opportunity to do so. In several the puisns mortgages assepted the position offered and in others the decree was based on the pleadings: in many of the cases subsequent to the Madras Full Bench decision, that decision was not referred to. Speaking very generally, the result of the decisions is that the Allahabad and Patna High Courts and also this Court have agreed with the Madras view. The Bombay High Court had not decided the exact question arising in this case, but the Calentta High Court has taken a different view while not always unanimously. In Ohhattur Dhari Ohowdhury v. Gaya Prosad Singh (3) in which the desision of the Madras High Court was strongly relied on, Mr. Justice Coxe referring to two desisions of his own High Court taking a different view said, "It is not impossible that these rulings may have to be considered further, but the present is certainly not a case for dissenting from them when the defendant's purchase was made just at the time that the plaintiff was suing on his mortgage."

We will, therefore, proceed to give our reasons for holding that this appeal should be dismissed.

(3) 23 Ind, Cas. 791.

There is no doubt that the purchaser's possession and rights were not in any way affected by the decree in the appellant's mortgage suit to which he was not a party and it is, therefore, necessary to see what exactly his position and rights were after his purchase. The mortgage being treated as a simple mortgage gave no right of possession to the mortgages, the right of possession remained with the mortgagor and it continued until he transferred that right by sale to the respondents. It would have continued, had there been no cale, until the mortgagee by suit caused it to be taken away. While the mortgagor still had that right, he sold the land to the respondents and they at once received possession as of right and were in possession as of right when the present suit was filed. Their purshase was admittedly subject to the mortgage. This is a most important point for consideration and its importance is pointed out in Balli Sing's v. Bindeswari Tewari (4). In that ease it was vigorously contended that the mortgages was entitled to the desree for khas possession. The Court was referred to a large number of eases and in the judgment it is said in all the cases referred to it will be found that the person oscupying the position of the plaintiff in that suit was entitled to the possession of the mortgaged property on the day of suit, and later on it is said: "The reason why he gets a decree for possession of property is that at the date of the suit he was entitled to possession of the property against all the world." The judgment then goes on to point out that the purshase at the execution sale of the rights of the mortgagor did not give the plaintiff a right to possession of the property against the prior purchasers.

The respondents admit that their purchase was subject to the mortgage but the right that that mortgage gave to the appellant was a right to bring the property to sale; it conferred no right to present possession. The appellant's rights were to enforce his mortgage and this he could do against the purchaser even though he did not make him a party to the prior suit. Had he proceeded to enforce those rights the respondents would have had the opportunity to question the accounts, whereas if a suit for simple possession is to be permitted they may be deprived of that right. It is true that the learned District Judge would have re opened the accounts but this shows the result of not compelling the plaintiffappellant to adopt his proper remedy. The deerce he purported to give was practieally one of forcelosure and that in a suit that was not based on the mortgage at all. A remedy by forcelosure is not one of the rights that the mortgagee was entitled to. If the judgment be beld in fact to allow an amendment of the plaint, without that being actually carried out, it overlooks the fact that the character of the suit is entirely altered. It would direct a mortgage decree in a suit in which it was not asked for, and in which the deed of mortgage was rot proved and not even produced.

A puisne mertgagee and also a purchaser may have the right to redeem a prior mertgage, but that is a right which may or may not be exercised at his option. A decree of the nature proposed or each as is given in many of the rulings considered, turns what is merely a right to be exercised or not at his sole option, into a liability to redeem.

The mortgagee in this case can still enforce his rights as mortgagee, it is said, and, if so, there is still less resson to allow him to bring a suit which he is not entitled to bring and thereby improperly impose on the other party conditions which he should not be compelled to fulfil.

The question is, as to which party is entitled to possession? The respondents are so entitled by reason of their having purchased this right from the mortgagor at a time that he possessed that right and had the power to transfer it. The appellant had no right whatever to possession arising out of his mortgage. When he enforced his mortgage when he enforced his mortgage decree and brought the property to sale he purchased whatever rights the mortgagor then had. Amongst these rights, the right to possession was not included.

A mortgagee in enforcing his mortgagee rights may or may not be entitled to possession and in this case he was not to entitled. The possession of the respondents is the result of his not doing that which he should have done in his first suit, and if either party is to eaffer it should be the mortgagee rather than the purchaser As between two persons entitled to possession, the party who acquired that right first cannot be deprived of it by the other.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the appellant was not entitled to possession and that no effort should have been made to grant that which he sought in the present suit. He should have been relegated to his proper remedy, which was a suit to enforce his mortgage against the respondents.

For the above reasons, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

of this appeal is a simple one. The plaintiff appellant same into Court asking for a declaration that certain transfers made by a lady named Musammat Sarfarezi Kunwari

MABJU PRASAD U. MUHAM MAD SHAKUB.

were not binding upon him as the nearest reversioner.

One of the transfers which was an attacked was a transfer by way of mortgage in favour of one Muhammad Shakur, who was arrayed as defendant Nc. 6.

This document of mortgage was executed on the 22nd of September 1894 in favour of Faiz Baksh, the father of Muhammad Shakur. The executant was Sarfarazi Kunwari and the amount which was expressed to be borrowed under the deed was R. 683. As security for this loan, Sarfarazi Kunwari purported to grant to Faiz Baksh a usufruetuary mortgage for 18 odd bighus of land.

The ease for the plaintiff was that this document had been executed by the lady without any legal necessity. In the written statement filed by Muhammad Shakur he pleaded that the document was a good and binding document; that the debt to which it relates had been incurred for legal necessity, and in the second paragraph of his written statement containing the additional pleas, he distinctly set out the case, that the father of the plaintiff had consented to this mortgage and that, therefore, the Court ought to hold that the mortgage was binding upon the plaintiff.

We may note here that an issue was raised in the first Jourt upon this plea raised by the defendant Muhammad Shakur, that is to say, Issue No. 4.

The Court of first instance decreed the elaim on the finding that there was no proof of legal assessity for the loan evidenced by the document in suit.

On appeal the desision of the first Court has been reversed by the learned District Judge who has dismissed the plaintiff's suit being of opinion that legal necessity was established.

The argament before us is, that the finding of the learned Judge whise purports to be a finding of fast is not breed upon any legal evidence and ought not, therefore, tobsellowed to stand.

It is quite clear from what is resorded in the judgment of the Court below that the learned District Judge fell into a serious error. He has, for the purposes of coming to his conclusions, assumed that this deed of mortgage executed in the year 1894 was written by the plaintiff's father, a man named Sarabankh Lal, and treating that fact as undoubtable evidence of the consent of the plaintiff's father who was at that time the nearest reversioner, he has held that the document being executed with such consent must be deemed to have been executed for some valid and binding purpose.

If we had been able in any way to support this particular finding of the learned District Judge the eass for the plaintiff would have been at an end. Unfortunately, however, it appears from a perusal of the rasord, that there is not a secap of evidence to show that the document of 1891 to which this suit relates was, as a matter of fast, written by Sarabsukh Lal. Two attesting witnesses to prove the execution of this deed were called on behalf of the defendant Muhammad Shakar. Both of them stated that they were not present at the time when the deed was astually written, though they both admitted that they were present when the lady executed it, and they both deposed that they attested the lady's signa. tare. Oas of these two witnesses was asked dirietly the question as to whether the bond was in the handwriting of Strab. sukh Lal. The only answer that he could give was that he did not know. We must take it, therefore, that there is no evidence at all on the record to show that Sarabsukh Lal, the father of the plaintiff, wrote this dosument.

If this finding of the learned District Judge disappears, we are left with practically nothing which would support the plan put forward by the defendant in support of his ease of legal necessity. It is quite trae, as the learned Counsel for the respondent observer, that the dosament now in sait is one of exceiderable antiquity. The mortgagor, Musammat Serfarazi Kan vari, has died and so has the mortgages who was of Mahanmad Shakar, In the father these eireumstances, we have been asked to act upon the principle which was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the care reported as Nandt Lal v. Lordships were dealing with a somewhat ancient transaction, it was held that recitals in the dosuments relating to this transaction could not be ignored and ought to be given some weight as evidence in coming to a decision on the question whether the transactions were entered into for purposes of necessity. Their Lordships, however, did not lay down that the recitals by themselves could be taken as conclusive evidence of the legal necessity. We take the judgment to indicate that the recitals coupled with other evidence, circumstantial or otherwise, may amount to sufficient proof in sireumstances that the transactions were bind. ing upon the family. Apart, however, from the resitals in the deed which are before us, namely, the recital in the dooument of 1894 and in a previous document of the 13th of Jane 1883 to which the 1894 decament refers, there appears to us to be really nothing which could justify us in holding that this particular case falls within the scope of the jadgment of their Lordships in the case above mentioned. There it was held that, in a case like the present, a recital in the document is clear evidence of representation to the lender and it was added that if the circumstances were such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed the truth of the representation then, when proof of actual enquiry had become impossible, the recital, coupled with the circumstances, would be sufficient evidence to support the deed.

All we have here to rely on are the recitals; the other circumstances are wanting, and, this being so, we have come to the conclusion that the defendant Muhammad Shakur has failed to discharge the burden of proof which lay upon him, that is to say, the burden of showing that the loan was advanced to Sarfarazi Kunwari for a purpose which was binding upon the property and, therefore, upon the reversioner.

The result is, that we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore the decree of the Court of first instance. The plaintiff appellant is entitled to costs both here and in the Court below, the costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

the Revenue Divisional Officer, for contempt for disobedience to the order of this Court, dated the 18th February 1921, in Civil Revision Petition No. 86 of 1921, and to order stay of all further proceedings before the said Revenue Divisional Officer, Erode, consequent upon his proceedings, dated the 8th January 1921, pending disposal of this petition.

Mr. J. O. Adam (Public Prosecutor), took the preliminary objection that the High Court could not interfere with the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer, Erode, either under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, or under the Letters Patent. The Divisional Officer was making a departmental enquiry into the conduct of a Village Officer. The action taken under section 7 of Madras Act III of 1895 is not subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court. The Act is self contained and does not provide for the High Court's interference save in certain spesified matters.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Petitioner. -The proceedings before the Divisional Offiser were more in the nature of criminal proceedings. The charges framed against petitioner amount to a criminal offense under section 171 (c), Indian Penal Code, and no enquiry should be held into those charges before sanction was accorded under section 126. Oriminal Procedure Code.

If Madras Act III of 18.5 purported to onet the High Court's powers prior to its enastment the Act itself is ultra vires.

The High Court could interfere both under section 107 of the Government of India Act and section 16 of the Letters Patent. Nilmoni Singh v. Taranath Mukerjee (1), Chaitan Pat;ori Mahapatra v. Kunja Behari Patnaik (2), The Collector of Thana v. Bhaskar Mahadev Sheth (3), Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyer (4) and Parama. swami Ayyangar v. Alamu Nachiar Ammal (5).

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, OFFG C. J .- Petitioner in this case is the Village Munsif of Sivagiri in Erode Taluk and moves us to interfere in revision and quash certain charges framed against him by the Revenue Divisional Officer of Erode, and all proceedings before that Officer connected with the charges.

sharges run as follows :--

" (1). That you being a Government servant, actively associated yourself in the movement of non-so-operation against Government by going with Mr. E. V. Ramaswami Naisker of Erode to the Sivagiri shandy on 26th November 1920 and telling people there not to vote at the elections of the 3Cth idem.

(2) That you dissuaded and prevented people from resording their votes by making false representations both in the shandy on 26th November 1940 and at the polling station on 30th November 1920 and that the result of voting would involve the increase of taxes and the relinquishment of the voters' properties to those in favour of whom the votes were recorded, etc."

Mr. Adam, the Public Prosecutor, who appears on behalf of Government, takes the preliminary objection that the proceedings in question are taken under Ast III of 1895, section 7, and that this Court has no jurisdiction to interfere.

The first point for determination is clearly the nature of the proceedings. Mr. Sesha. chari, who has argued the case most exhaus. tively for the petitioner, contendr, in the first place, that they are crimical; and his main ground for revision is, that the facts sharged amount to a criminal offence under section 171 (c) of the Indian Penal Code and ean only be enquired into on sanction accorded under section 196 of the Oriminal Procedure Code. This view seems to me to be slearly wrong.

The charges have been framed by the officer holding the enquiry as " Revenue Divisional Officer" and in that capacity he is undoubtedly entitled under section 7 of Act III of 1895 after enquiry, to fine, suspend, dismiss or remove the holders of certain village offices (including the office of Village Munsif) for missonduct, neglect of duty, ineapasity, non-residence or other sufficient cause. Under rules framed under section 20 of the same Ast, he is bound to record charges and examine witnesses for and against them. All his procedure in this case appears to have been such as he would have adopted if he were act. ing under section 7 of Act III of 1895 and I have no doubt whatever that this is the provision of law under which he purported to act. Even supposing that the facts alleged against petitioner constituted a criminal offence, which seems to me extremely doubtful, it is difficult to see how this would be incompatible with the Revenue Divisional Officer taking action under section 7 of the Act. It must be the discretion of a Village Officer's superiors to proceed either by way of proseention or by way of departmental action under the section.

The nature of the proceedings being thus determined, has this Court any power to interfere in revision? The petition is filed under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and section 107 of the Government of India Act. The former is obviously inapplicable.

Section 107 says: "Each of the High Courts has superintendence over all Courts for the time being subject to its appellate jurisdiction."

Now, can an Officer acting under section 7 of Act III of 1895 be styled a Court subject to this Court's appellate jurisdiction?

I think not. Appellate jurisdiction no doubt includes the power to interfere in revision. and is not confined to cases in which the law allows a regular appeal. As stated by Subramania Iyer, J., Chappan v. Moidin Kutti (6), the two things required to constitute appellate jurisdiction are the existence of the relation of superior and inferior Court, and the power, on the part of the former, to review decisions of the latter. I accept this definition but I cannot see here either the relation or the power. It cannot be assumed that every officer exercising statutory powers in this Presidency stands to this Court in the relation of an inferior Court to a superior, or that we have the power to review his decisions. Act III of 1895 is a self-contained Act which. as set out in its preamble, purports to provide "for the succession to certain hereditary Village Offices in the Presidency of Madras; for the hearing and disposal of claims to such offices or the emoluments annexed thereto; for the appointment of persons to hold such offices and the control of the holders thereof; and for certain other purposes."

(6) 22 M 69; 8 M, L. J. 231; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 49 (F. B.)

It contains provisions dealing with all these matters; and places the decisions in all eases in the hands of the Revenue Officers under the control of the Board of Revenue. The jurisdiction of Courts to decide claims to office and smoluments is specifically barred, except in one particular ease, by section 21: and as regards orders under cection 7, with which we are concerned, section 23 provides for appeals to the District Collector or Board of Revenue whose decision, it says, "shall be final." I find it impossible to hold on a perusal of the Act that the Legislature intended that these decisions should be subject to review by the High Court. I fail to see how we have any power of interference.

It has been suggested that if this be so, Act III of 1895 purported to take the High away powers which possessed prior to its enactment and to that extent is ultra tires. But I can discover no basis for thie. Prior to its enactment the position of Hereditary Village Officers was governed by Regulation VI of 1831; and this Regulation is, if possible, even more explicit than the Act now in force in placing such Village Officers as the petitioner under the exclusive control of the Revenue Authorities. Section 7 of the Regulation provides that "all other persons who hold or may hereafter hold Hereditary Village or other offices in the Revenue and Police Departments, to which emoluments have been annexed by State, shall be under the immediate authority and control of the Collectors of the Districts in which such offices are established, and shall be liable to suspension or removal from office for incapacity. neglect of duty, or other just cause, by the orders of the Collectors, subject in every instance to the approval of the Board of Revenue, and to the sanction of the Governor-in-Council in all cases in which he may see fit to interfere." It seems to me impossible to contend that the Collector's power of control over Village Officers under this Regulation was subject to the superintendence of the High Court;

I am not aware of any single case, out of the innumerable eases of dismissal, etc., which must have occurred under the Regulation or under the present Act, in which the Court's interference has been invoked.

Clause 16 of the Letters Patent to which Mr. Seshachari has referred us seems to me to advance the case no further than sestion 107 of the Government of India Ast.

The same learned Vakil has sited two eases Nilmoni Singh v. Taranath Muker ee (1) and Ohaitan Pat on Mahapatra Runja Pehari Patnaik (2) arising out the Bengal Rent Recovery Act (X 1859). This Act, on much the same lines as our own Madras Act VIII of 1865, is of a very different nature to the one we are now considering. The Bent Courts constituted under it practically perform the functions of Civil Courts in sertain matters: and it is sufficient for the present purpose to quote the words of Norman, J., in Bhyrub Ohunder v. Shama Soonderee Debea (7): "It is elear that the Collector's Court is a Court over which, at the time of the passing of the Charter Act, the Sudder Court possessed appellate jurisdiction; and, therefore, it is clear that the 15th section of the Charter Act gives us a superintendence over such Courts."

Neither of the other cases relied on [Collector of Thona v. Bhackar Mahadev Sheth (2), Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (4) and Paramaswami Ayyanzar v. Alamu Nachiar Ammal (5)] appear to me to contain anything helpful to petitioner.

I must, therefore, hold that the Revenue Divisional Officer proceeding under section 7 of Act III of 1895 is not a Court subject to the superintendence of this Court and that the revision patition should be missad.

The subject matter of Civil Missellaneous Petition No. 1697 of 1921 is dealt with in the judgment of my learned brother and it seems unnecessary for me to add anything to what he has said.

Opers, J.-This petition 18 ravise the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer, Erode, dated 8th January "charges" 1921, wherein certain framed against the Village Munsif of Sivagiri. It is first contended that this is a criminal matter and falls within the sorrupt practices' sestions added to the Indian Penal Code by Act XXXIX of 1920, and that the Revenue Divisional Officer was ultra vires as no sanction for the proceedings had been obtained section 196, Oriminal Procedure Code. The sestions of the Indian Penal Code relied on are 171 (c) and 171 (f). Secondly, it is contended that, even it it is not a criminal matter, we ought to interfere under, either section 115, Oivil Procedure Code, section 107 of the Govern. ment of India Act, or clause 16 of the Letters Patent. The first consideration, therefore, is, Is this a criminal matter? As the Judge who admitted the petition when this was the only ground presented, I must confess that, at first, I thought it might prove to be so. The charges are set forth in detail and the Revenue Divisional Officer is also a First Class Magistrate. There is ground for saying that the matter was presented in such a form as to have the appearance of a eriminal matter and the learned Vakil who appeared naturally did nothing in argument to detract from this. The contention on the other side ir, that this is a purely departmental enquiry into the conduct of the Village Munsif. The so called "charges" are as follows:

"(1) That you, being a Government servant, actively associated yourself in the movement of non-co-operation against Government by going with Mr. E. V. Ramaswami Naisker of Erode to the Sivagiri shandy on 26th November 1920 telling people there not to vote at the elections of the 30th idem.

"(2) That you dissuaded and prevented people from recording their votes making false representations both in the shandy on 26th November 1920 and at the polling station on 30th November 1920 that the result of voting would involve the increase of taxes and the relinquishment of the voters' properties to those in favour of whom the votes were resorded, etc."

Are these within section 171 171 (f), Indian Penal Code ? The sharge is simply 'telling people not to vote; the second is false representations' as to increase of taxation and confiscation of properly. I gravely doubt if either of these would constitute voluntary interference with free exercise of electoral rights so as to constitute the offence of undue influence at an election for which punishment is prescribed in section 171 (f). Under the English Statute (on which presumably the new sections of the Indian Penal Code are modelled) 46 and Viet, Chapter 51, sestion 2, the following persons are guilty of undue influence:

(1) Every person who directly or indirect. ly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, makes use of or threatens to make use of any force, violence or restraint, or inflists or threatens to inflist, by himself or by any other person, temporal or spiritual injury, damage, barm or loss upon or against any person in order to induce or compel such person to vote or refrain from voting, or account of such person having votes or refrained from voting at any election; and

(2) Every person who by abduction, duress, or any fraudulent device or contrivance succeeds in impeding or preventing the free exersise of the franchise of any elector, or thereby succeeds in compelling, inducing or prevailing apon any elector either to give or refrain from giving his vote at any election.

I think, therefore, upon further consideration, that neither of these so called charges would fall within the misshief of section 171 (c). There is, however, an almost clearer ground for distinction. The petitioner is a Village Monsif, and is as such the Hereditary Village amenable to (Madras Aot III of Offisers' Act 1895). Seption 7 of that Act provides that the Collector may after enquiry fine. suspend, dismiss or remove the holder of any of the offices forming class (1) in section 3 (of which the Village Munsif is one) for missondust, neglect of duty, or incapacity or non-residence or for any other sufficient cause. Section 2) of the Act provides that the Board of Revenue may make rules for (inter alia) the holding of enquiries under section 7 and the hearing of appeals under sestion 23. This last section provides for an appeal from the order of a Collector under section 7 to the District Collector and if the latter passed the order appealed from, to the Board of Revenue. "The decision, on appeal, of the District Collector or the Board of Revenue, as the ease may be, shall be final." The Board of Revenue made rules under section 7 and they are published in the Fort Saint George Gazette of 28th June 1898. The rules perhaps rather nunesessarily incorporate certain legal terms familiar to us in eriminal proceedings including the use of the work "charges".

On the whole, I have some to the son. elusion, having regard to the above and to the fact that the officer purported to act as Revenue Divisional Officer, that this was a departmental enquiry under Madras Ast III of 1895, and was, therefore, not a criminal proceeding. being then a civil matter, have we any jurisdiction to interfere? We clearly have none ander section 115, Civil Procedure Code, and this was not seriously pressed by Mr. V. O. Seshashari for the petitioner. His contention was that we could interfere under section 107 of the Government of India Act and clause 16 of the Letters Patent. The former gives each High Court "superintendence over all Courts for the time being subject to appellate jurisdiction," and the question arises as to whether a Revenue Officer acting under sestion 7 of Ast III of 1895 in subject to our appellate jurisdiction. As laid down by Subramania lyer, J. in Chappin v. Moidin Kutti (6) "'appellate jurisdiction' means 'the power of a superior Court' to review the decision of an inferior Court ". Here the two things which are required to constitute appellate jurisdiction are the existence of the relation of superior and inferior Court and the power on the part of the former to review decisions of the latter. Is there such a relation here? It is clear that a Collector dealing with matters under the Rent Recovery Act is not in such relation in Madras Velli Periya Mira v. Moidin Padsha (5), Appandai v. Srihari Joishi (9) and Venkatanarasimha Naidu v. Suranna (10), In Nilmoni Singh v. Turanath Mukerjee (1) the Privy Council elearly states that the process under consideration was not the trial of any question regarding rent, but that the Act in question (X of 1859) went beyond the trial of such questions and provided for the execu-

Collector's Court is a Court over which at the time of the passing of the Charter Act the Sudder Court possessed appellate jurisdiction and that section 15 of the Charter Act gave the Calcutta High Court superintendence over such Courts. See Norman, J., in Bhyrub Chunder v. Shama Soonderee Debea (7). The Act dealt with by the Privy Council in this case was of a very different nature to the one under consideration here, and, as already stated, it has been held here that the proposition does not apply to the Rent Resovery Act in Madray.

apply to the Rent Resovery Act in Madras. The 'relation' thus being found not to exist, does the 'power' exist? The answer is, as pointed out by my Lord, that the Act in question (III of 1835) is self-contained. There is no appeal beyond the District Collector or the Board of Rovenne as stated above, save in one solitary instance (section 21) and on one solitary ground, vis., on the ground of want of jurisdiction basause no empluments appertain to the Village Officer in respect of which the suit is brought. It was thus obviously the intention of the Legislature that the Civil Courts should, save in the ease under section 21, not interfere. The contention raised on this is that the Ast is ultra vires of the local Legislature and that it had no power to displace the power of superintendence of the High Court, But if the High Court never had such power on the ground that the relation of superior and inferior Court did not in this instance exist, the Act cannot have taken it away. Further, the previous Regulation (VI of 1831) relating to village offices declares in its preamble "whereas-it is necessary to provide that no claim to such offises, or to any of the emoluments annexed shall be cognizable thereto. Ordinary Courts of Judiesture, and to render all such claims adjudicable to exclusively by the officers of Government in the Revenue Department," etc. Section 6 provides that the orders of the Board of Revenue shall be final and conclusive. See also section 7. The provisions of the Regulation will thus be seen to be even more unequivosal than most of the sections in the Act. No case has been brought to our notice where the contention of ultra vires either under the Regulation or the existing Act has raised or desided, and disposal under both must have been and must still be of very frequent occurrence. With regard to clause 16 of the Letters Patent, I do not think the case for the petitioner can be carried further under that—as I have already stated my reasons for holding that the Collector is not subject to the superintendence of the High Court in matters arising out of Act III of 1895.

In Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasu leva Aiyar (4) it was held that, under the provisions of Act XX of 1863, section 10, the Civil Court (in this case the Collector) exercised its powers as a Court of law not merely as a persona designata. Paramaswami Ayyangar v. Alamu Nachiar Ammal (5) held that where a Revenue Court had dealt with a question of succession under the Madras Estates Land Act without taking evidence, the High Court could revise the order under section 115. Civil Procedure Code. as that section had been made applicable to proceedings in Revenue Courts under that particular Act by section 192 of that Act.

Neither of these cases desided on the provisions of Acts widely differing from the one under discussion can help the petitioner's case.

I am, therefore, of opinion that this is a matter in which we have no power to revise the proceeding of the Revenue Divisional Officer and I would dismiss the petition.

There is, further, a motion to commit the Revenue Divisional Officer, Erode, for contempt for refusing to forward the records The revision petition was in this case. admitted by me on 18th February . 921 and on 21st February , 921 the office called for the record under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The Collector to whom the Revenue Divisional Officer forwarded this Court's notice calling for the records, replied on 3rd March 1921 as follows:- "There has been no desision to enable section 115 of the Code of Oivil Procedure to be applied, nor does the notice quote the number of the decree or order to which it purports to refer. I, therefore, return it."

On 11th March 1921 the office again called for the papers and specified the order referred to. This was simply endorsed by the Collegion tor under date 20th March 1921 as follows:— Returned, There has been no decision to make section 115, Civil Pro-

eedure Code applicable." The matter, if any, is a civil contempt and there is authority to show that it makes no difference if the order calling for the records is wrong i. e., that it has eventually been held by us that section 115 Civil Procedure Uode does not apply. That this was hardly selfevident is witnessed by the long and learne ! arguments addressed to us and by our detailed judgments in this ease. The question of contempt was not seriously argued and I do not propose, under the eirenmstances, to go into the question further than to set out the facts as I have done above and to observe that the letter and endorsement of the Collector were neither courteous nor respectful to this Court and that the attention of Government will be drawn to the matter.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is from an order of remard made by the lower Appellate Court under Order XLI, rule 23. It appears that Munpa Rai executed a deed of sale in favour of Basdeo Rai and Sat Narain Bai in respect of certain immoveable property. Jhagroo Rai sued to resover the said property by right of pre-emption, Jhagroo alleged in his plaint that a custom of pre emption obtained in the village in which the property in dispute was situate and that he, being a cosharer, had a preferential right over the vandees who were strangers. The Court of first instance found that the allegation of oustom alleged in the plaint had not been proved. The claim was accordingly dismits. On appeal by the pre-emptor it was eontended on his behalf, though no such ground was taken in the memorandum of appeal, that inasmuch as there was a mention of pre-emption in the samima khewat, the pre-emptor was still entitled to succeed, if not on the ground of eastor, at least on the ground of contract. The lower Appellate Court acceded to the contention and setting aside the decree remanded the case for trial on the merits. The vandees in appeal to this Court challenge the order of remand and ecntend that the lower Appellate Court should not have accepted the contention of the pre-emptor, and if it did, it should have remanded the case to the Court of first instance directing the amendment of the plaint and the framing of an issue with regard to the alleged contract of pre-emption and then the case should have been disposed of. In support of his contention the learned Conneel for the vendees refers us to the case of Ram Gharib Tewari v. Shankar Tewari (1). The case relied upon by the appellants before us does not bear out the contention for them to a certain extent. In that care the first Appellate Court had deerced the elaim of the pre emptor holding that though he had failed to prove the alleged sustom of pre-emption yet the waith ul are could be construed to contain a contract of custom and as the period of the wanb.ul. are bad not expired the contract would be considered to be still in force. The facts of the present ease are slightly different. In the present ease the lower Appellate Court has not deereed the elaim of the pre-emptor on the basis of contract but has only remarded the case to the first Court for trial on the merits. We, however, think that the contention of the appellants is so far correst that the lower Appellate Court should not have recorded a finding to the effect that the contract of pre-emption stood proved as between the parties. If the lower Appellate Court was inclined to think that the paper, upon which the plaintiff pre-emptor relied. evidenced a contract and that that contract was still in force at the time that the disputed sale was made and the present suit instituted. the plaintiff pre-emptor should have been allowed to amend his plaint and the ease should have been remanded for trial on the amended plaint. We, therefore, allow the appeal and medify the order of the Court below to this extent that the case will go back to the first Court for trial with permission to the plaintiff pre-emptor to amend his plaint basing his claim on the ground of contract, The defendant-vendees would, of source, be allowed to urge their defence to the new plea and to give evidence if they think it necessary. With this modification the decree of the first Court is affirmed. As to costs, we think the sosts should abide the event including fees in this Court on the higher seale.

MA RYUN SEIN O, MAUNG CHAN MYA.

Buddhist Law-Adoption-Kittima adopted son entering priesthood-Return to civil life-Adoption,

Under the Buddhist Law, when a kittima adopted son onters the Buddhist Priesthood, he completely severs himself from all rights to inherit, and from all family ties, in the family of his adoptive parents, and on his re-entering civil life he would not ipso facto be entitled to resume the position and rights he might have been possessed of before, although it is open to the adoptive parents to again adopt: him as their kittima son, and if he is received back, in his home on the old status with the obvious intention that he should resume his old position as adopted son and heir, the years spent in the priesthood would not in any way affect his right to inherit the estate of his adoptive parents. Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Rigg, J., on the Original Side.

Mr. Higinbotham, for the Appellant.

Mr. Leach, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DCCEWORTH, J .- This is an appeal from the decision of the learned Judge on the Original Side of this Court.

The second respondent, Ma Ma Gyi, is the widow of one Maung Ba Than. In the suit it was claimed that this Maung Ba Than was a kittima son of U Phoo and Ma Ywet, both deceased, First respondent, Maung Chan Mya, is the assignes of the interest of Manng Ba Than in the estate of Ma Ywet. Ma Nyun Sein, the appellant, is the grand-daughter of Ma Twet by a previous marriage of hers with Ko Po Sin. In the Court of first instance Maung By Than was himself joint plaintiff with Maung Chan Mya, but he died pending the suit, and he is now respresented by Ma Ma Gyi.

The suit is one for the administration of the estate of Ma Ywet, who died on 6th January 1918, and for a declaration that Manng Ba Than is her sole heir as the kittima adopted son of her and her deceased husband, U Phoo.

Ma Nyun Sein denied that Maurg Ba Than was ever adopted by U Phoo and Ma Ywet. and she claimed to be the sole heir entitled to inherit. It was further contended that even if Ba Than had been adopted by U Phoo and Ma Ywet, he lost all his rights as their beir by becoming a Rahan and continuing as such for several years.

Four issues were framed by the learned judge on the Original Side and he decided that Be Than was the adopted kittima son of U Phoo and Ma Ywet; that he did not entire. ly exclude Ma Nyun Sein as grand-daughter of Ma Ywet from inheriting; that the said Ma Nyun Sein was entitled to a one-fourth share of the estate; and that the fact that Ba Than had entered the Buddhist Priesthood for a time did not exclude him from his rights as heir of Ma Ywet. Against this desision Ma Nyun Sein has appealed. She has really raised only two points, firstly, that, as, admittedly, there was no public ceremony of adoption, the learned Judge erred in holding on the evidence that Ba Than was adopted with a view to inherit, and, secondly, that Ba-Than, by becoming a Raban and soutinging in the religious life for several years, severed all ties with the secular world and cancelled the adoption, if any such adoption had taken place, and that there is no evidence of any fresh adoption by either U Phoo or Ma Ywet after he had left the priesthood.

Cross-objections were filed by the respondents Maung Chan Mya and Ma Ma Gyi in respect of the finding that Ma Nyun Sein was entitled to a one-fourth share in the estate. They contend that the learned Judge on the Original Side should have decided that the appellant was only entitled to one-eighth share in the said estate. There are thus really only three points to be decided in this appeal, viz:—

1. As to the adoption of Ba Than,

2. As to whether, if adopted, his position as an heir was destroyed by his entering the monastic life for a time, and

3. As to whether, in the event of his being held still to be an heir, the appellant, Ma Nyun Sein, should get a one-fourth or a one eighth share in the estate.

In regard to the first point, viz, the adop. tion of Maung Ba Than, there is, in my opinion, a great deal of evidence to support it. According to this evidence, there was no public ceremony of adoption, but the evidence of what may be styled habit and repute is, in my opinion, very strong indeed. There can be no doubt that Ba Than was received into the house of U Phco and Ma Ywet when he was some five or six years of age. His mother, a Burmese woman, had died when he was still an infant, and he had been left to be looked after by Ma The U, sister of Ma Hnin U, who used to visit Ma Ywet's house in her eapacity as a bazar seller. Ba Than appears to have gone there too. He was an attractive little boy and, after some time, it is elear that he lived permanently with U Phoo and Ma Ywet at their own house. It is not certain when Ba Than's father, who was a Shan, died, but it is apparent that from the time he entered the house of U Phoo and Ma Ywet, his relations with his own family and guardians were completely severed. He continued to live in U Phoo's house and was brought up by him right up to the time when he entered the priesthood in fulfilment of a vow, and again for several years after he had given up his monastic life. I might here point out that Ma Nyun Sein's case is that Ba Than, though he permanently resided with U Phoo and Ma Ywet, was kept there as a mere menial servant. I think it will be clear that the evidence as to his position in the house renders it impossible to held that such was the case. Maung Kyaw Zan, the twelfth witness for the defence, who, to my mind, appears to be largely responsible for the line taken by the defence in this case, was bound to admit that Ba Than was certainly more than a menial and describes him as being "something like a manager." U Phoo and Ma Ywet paid for the expenses of Ba Than's schooling, and for his shinpyu ceremony, and there is evidence that after U Phoo's death, when Ma Ywet and Ba Than were quarrelling about his right to claim a one-fourth chare of the estate as orassa, she offered to pay the expenses of his marriage.

U Shwe Zin, fifth plaintiff witness, states that U Phoo gave his own name as father of Maung Ba Than when he brought him to his school.

Ko Po Sin, the fourth witness for plaintiff, states that U Phoo and Ma Ywet told him that they had adopted Ba Than, and that it was generally reputed in the quarter that he had been adopted with a view to inherit. This witness, Ko Po Sin, had known the parties for seventeen years.

Ma Thaw, the third plaintiff witness, is Maung Ohan Mya's wife, but she was related to Ma Ywet. She definitely states that both Ma Ywet and U Phoo told her that Ba Than was their adopted son, and had been adopted with a view to inherit. She also states that there was general repute in the quarter to this effect. This witness used to live with Ma Ywet after the latter's marriage with U Phoo and she continued on intimate visit. ing terms with the family. further that Ba Than's position in the house was that of the son and not of a servantthat when he was young, he slept with Ma Ywet and U Phoo, and that when he was sick U Phoo and Ma Ywet used to look after him. There is a great deal of corroboration of her evidence in the statement of Ko Po Sin already referred to. U Pe is a trader and, according to his evidence, U Phoo told him that Ba Than was adopted with a view to inherit. He says that Ba Than was reputed in the quarter to be U Phoo's adopted son, and that Ba Than was regarded as U Phoo's gon, MA NYUN SEIN O. MAUAG CHAN MYA.

The learned Jadge on the Original Side has expressed some doubts as regards this evidence of U Pe, on the ground that it was unlikely that U Phoo would have made such a statement on the ossasion of a mere quarrel between Ba Than and U Pe's son, but after reading the evidence in question, I see no reason to doubt the statement. It was quite natural for U Pe when his own son had had a quarral with another boy to find out the social status and anteredents of his son's antagonist. I think it was a natural action on the part of a parent, and that, in order to re-assure U Pe, U Phoo may very well have told him that the boy was his adopted son and that he had adopted him as his heir.

Maung Po Gaung, Inspector of Police, speaks of the reputation of Ba Thau in the quarter as the adopted con and heir of U Phoo and Ma Ywet. He goes further and says that Ma Ywet told him that Ba Than was her son and adde that before he came to know Ba Than personally, U Phoo had told him that they had an adopted son.

. The evidence of U Tha Nyo (Honorary Magistrate), U Tun Lin, Ma The Bwin, Ma Lon Tin and Minus sorroborates in so far as to show that they looked upon Ba Than as an adopted son, while The Nyo, Ma The Bwin and Ma Lon Tin depose that they were told by U Phoo and Ma Ywet that Ba Than was an adopted son. U Ton Lin states that Ba Than addressed U Phoo as father and that both U Phoo and Ma Ywet addressed him as son. He adds that Maung Ba Than took his meals with Ma Ywet and U Phoo. Farther, from the evidence of U Tun Lin, Ma The Bwin and Minus, it is apparent that from the general way in which Ba Than was treated by U Phoo and Ma Ywet or spoken of by them, they looked upon him as adopted with a view to inherit.

On the side of the defence, the evidence of Ma Nyun Sein, her husband Maung Ba Yin, Ma Pwa and Po Hlaing is interested and, as the learned Judge below said, they are all more or less concerned with the devolution of the property in favour of Ma Nyun Sein.

The evidence of Po Thit, the fifth defence witness, is quite unreliable, for it has been proved that he committed perjury in denying convictions of criminal offences and that he was under Police supervision. Ma Ka Doe and

Ma Ma Gyi have given the most discrepant evidence on all material points. Dawood's evidence is not to be relied upon. He was put in the witness-box to prove. that Ba Than worked under him painting signboards for about a year after he had left the monastery. It is sufficient to say that Ba Than sould not have worked for him at the period stated, as he was then living with U Phoo. Further, he admits that his own work and profits had been greatly diminished by the War, and it is, to say the least, unlikely that he would engage a man to assist him at such a time. He also admitted that Ba Than was the only man whom he had ever taken as an assistant.

The defence witnesses attempt to explain Ba Than's return to U Phoo's house after he left the monastery by saying that there, was a fear that Ba Aye's ghost might haunt U Phoo's house. Not only is this a farcical story but it is contradicted by the evidence of Pleader Kyaw Zan. This witness says that the sole reason why B. Than did not return at once from the monastery to U Phoo's house was on account of some quarrel which was soon settled, Ba Than then returning to his old home.

I consider that the position of Ba Than in the house of U Phoo and Ma Ywet was entirely inconsistent with his having been a servant, and that the only reasonable explanation is, that he was their adopted son, and, inasmuch as they had no son of their own, an adopted son with a view to inherit.

I have not referred at any length to the position of Manng Ba Than after he gave up monastic life, because I shall deal with it in my remarks on the second question arising in this appeal.

In regard to the second question, vis., as to whether Ba Than forfeited his rights as an heir by becoming a Monk and continuing so for several years, the point is not an easy one, because learned Counsel on both sides have been unable to put before me any decisions in the Courts or any Dhammathats which really bear upon the question, and, in spite of a diligent search, I have been unable to find any authority directly bearing on the matter.

It is proved, I think, that when Ba Than was lying sick with plague at about the age of 20 years, he madelfa yow that if he recovered from his malady he would become a Monk and devote his life and energies to religion. In due course he recevered and earried out his vow, in so far that he entered the priesthood. He remained a Monk for a period which is described in the evidence as from three to seven or, at the most. eight years. His adoptive father, U Phoo, was a ward-headman in Rangoon, who would naturally be a well-known personage in the neighbourhood. There is every reason to believe that U Phoo and Ma Ywet paid the expenses of his ordination, and that all the time during which he was a Monk they regarded him as still their son so far as due religious observance permitted. It is very significant that when Maung B: Than took up monastie life, U Phoo and Ma Ywet adopted another son named Ba Aye. It is pretty clear that it was on Ba Aye's decease some years later that Ba Than left the priesthood and, after a very short interval, rejoined U Phoo and Ma Ywet in his old home. The evidence shows beyond all reasonable doubt that he not only took up his life in the family from where he had left it, but that his position was in many ways improved. There are two documents on the record, Exhibits D and E, in the latter of which Ba Than is spoken of as the son of U Phoo. There is no doubt, in sonnestion with these documents, which are dated in the year 1914, that U Phoo who paid the consideration money permitted Maung Ba Than's name to appear publiely as his son. This was subsequent to Ba Than leaving the monasite life. Further, there is evidence that Maung Ba Than managed the theatrical business of U Phoo and Ma Ywet, and after U Phoo's desease in 1917 Ba Than completely Farther, some managed the pue business. ten days after U Phoo's desease, Ba Than was appointed, in succession to him, ward-Inspestor Po headman of the quarter. Gaung himself resommended Ba Than as U Phoc's successor, stating that he was his son and, as such, best entitled to succeed his father. At this time there was not yet any dispute about the succession to U Phoo's estate, and I agree with the learned Judge on the Original Side that this fact must have been well known to Ma Ywet who lived in the same house as Ba Than. Then there was no doubt that about two months before

Ma Ywet's death, she and Ma Nyun Sein had emes bes engisteres smos tucds bellerrepp jewellery of which M. Nyan Sain was in possession, and that after this quarral plaintiff's witnesses, The Nyo and Po Sin, same and interviewed the parties. Tha Nyo is a well-known man and was believed implicitly by the learned Judge below, and, after perusing The Nyo's evidence, I see no reason whatever to doubt him evidently acted on more than one ossasion as an intervener in the disputes of this family. The most important point in connsetion with this quarral is that during the conversation which took place between U The Nyo and Ma Y wet the latter stated that she could not permit her grand-daughter to keep all this property because she had already given her Rs. 10,000 and there was a son whose interests she had still to consider. In answer to further questions, Ma Ywet deelared that Ba Than was this son, and that he had been adopted with the intention of his becoming their beir. This conversation took place approximately three hours after alterestion between Ma Nyun Sein and Ma Ywet. This unfortunate quarrel between Ma Ywet and Ma Nyun Sein appears to have gone on during the latter half of November and up to the 27th of Desember, when Minus sent a letter to Ma Ywet on Ba Than's bahalf, claiming his quarter share of the property belonging to U Phoo's estate, on the ground that he was the orassa son. There can be no doubt that Ma Ywet received this letter. Witness U Tan Lin deposes that she brought some such letter to him and told him to tell Ba Than not to ask for his inheritance then, as she had already given a share to Ma Nyun Sein, and he would get all the property at her death. Pleader Maung Kyaw Zon wrote a reply on the 3rd January, Exhibit 8, which, in 'my opinion, was the foreranger of the defense in the present suit. Farther, Kyaw Zan states that Ba Than came to him the next day (that would be the 4th January), and informed him matters had been settled amieably. Kyaw Zin contends that he is ignorant of the terms of that settlement, but Minus states that they were that Ba Than should have Rs. 1,500 instead of Rs. 3,000 which he was asking for, and that Ma Ywat told Ba Than not to trouble her any more as he would obtain all her property on her MI NYON SELN U, MAUNG CHAN MYA.

decease. On the 6th of January Ma Ywet diel. After her death there ean be no doubt that U Tha Nyo sent for Ba Than at Ma Nyun Sein's request, and that his presence there was a meeting between Ma Pws, Ma Nyon Sein and Ba Than. There can be no question that this interview referred to a division of Ma Ywet's estate. U Tha Nyo deposes that Ma Nyan Sein asked him to divide the property equally between her and B. Than. Ma Nyan Sein contends that the object of this interview was to obtain property from Ma Thaw, but she does not explain why, if that was so, U Tha Nyo should have written the letter, Exhibit 1, to Maung Ba Than.

I agree with the learned Judge below in assepting U The Nyo's version of this story and in thinking that the reason for Ma Nyun Sein's visit to U The Nyo was, that she feared that Ba Than, as the adopted son, would claim the whole estate, and she desired The Nyo to make an equal division.

I have gone into these facts in some detail, because it is my opinion that on entering the priesthood, Maung Ba Than must be held to have severed himself from all rights to inherit and from all family ties. I some to this conclusion after reading the Full Bench case of Maung Shwe Ton v. Maung Tun Lin (1), and page 175 of Mr. May Oung's Burman Buddhist Law. It is shown that, before the outbreak of the great European War, Maung Ba Than had left , the monastery and had re joined his family as an ordinary member of society. The Burmese expression for leaving the monastic life is "Lu Twet," viz., to come out a man. I expressly wish to avoid attempting to decide the question of whether in such a case a new ceremony of adoption is necessary. What I do wish to say is that in this case the evidence, which I have detailed above, shows that Ba Than was received back in his home on the old status and that the obvious intention was that he should resume his old position as adopted son and heir. It appears to me that the real reason for his leaving the monastery was that the old folk desired to have him about the house as a son, sines they had lost Ba Aye, whom they adopted when Ba Than became a monk. I think there can be no doubt from the evidence that he must be held to have resumed his old position of kittima son and that the years spent in the monastery have not in his case in any way affected his right to inherit the estate of Ma Ywet.

In regard to the third question, raised by the respondents in their cross objections, it seems to me that the learned Judge on the Original Side by an oversight misapplied the case of Ma Saw Name v. Ma Thein Yin (2). If Ma Swa Ngwe's mother had survived, her share would, I think, have been one half. It has not been contended that her mother was the orassa. As the law stands at present, Ba Than would undoubtedly be the crassa of the family. Therefore, I consider that Ma Nyun Sein is only entitled to one-fourth of a half share (or one eighth share) in the estate and not to the one-quarter share assigned to her by the learned Judge below.

On these findings, I would dismiss Ma Nyun Sein's appeal with costs throughout on the division of the estate as now awarded and would allow the respondents' cross-objections with costs on Rs 1,000.

Robinson, C. J.—I entirely concur, and would only wish to add a few words as to the effect of Ba Than entering the priesthood. There can be no question that this completely severed all ties that existed before he did so and that, therefore, on his re-entering civil life, he would not ipso facto be entitled to resume the position and rights he might have been possessed of before. It was open to U Phoo and Ma Ywet to take him back and to again adopt him as their kittima son but that they did so must be proved. I do not think that the same degree of proof would be necessary in all eases, and that it would depend on the fasts and circumstances of each case whether a re-adop. tion had taken place or not.

In the present ease not only did Ba Than resume his former position in its entirety but the evidence clearly shows that U Phoo and Ma Ywet meant him to do so and that he agreed. He lived with them as before and he performed all the duties of a son, attending on his adoptive parents and assisting them in their business.

FIRM BAM PAHAI-CHBIDDA LAL C. BALT INDIAN BALIWAY COMPANY.

It is shown he was accepted and recognized in the quarter as their son and they openly acknowledged him as such. It is certain that U Phoo provided the purchase price of the houses bought, and deliberately allowed Ba Than's name to appear benami for his own, attesting the deeds describing Ba Than as his son. In every way, therefore, that was possible they expressed their intention of taking him back and re placing him in the position he had formerly occupied. His appointment as Ward Headman because he was the son of the deceased Ward Headman is strong proof of how he was regarded in the quarter and this was done to Ma Ywet's knowledge and with her with concent.

I also agree as to the share of Ma Nyun Sein. Her mother was not the orassa child and she would be entitled to only one-quarter of what her mother would have got.

The appeal is dismissed with costs throughout on the division of the estate as now awarded, and the cross objections are accepted with costs on Rs. 1,000.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 77-Notice to agent, necessity of-Correspondence with Divisional Traffic Manager-Implied notice to Agent.

A notice under section 77 of the Railways Act, having regard to section 140 of the same Act, should be given, in the case of State Railways managed by a Company, to the Government or to the Agent of the Company or the Manager of the Government and any correspondence with, or notice to, the Divisional Traffic Manager of such Railway cannot amount in law to a notice on the Agent of the Company. [p. 578, col. 2.]

Oivil revision against an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Aligarh, dated the 25th June 1921.

Mr. Fanna Lal, for the Petitioner. Mr. L. P. Zutshi, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT .- The plaintiff-applicant despatched two consignments of brass ware from Delhi to Aligarh on the 20th of April 1920. These consignments did not arrive at their destination and the plaintiff, after ecrrespondence with the Divisional Traffic Manager, Cawnpore, served a notice on the Agent of the East Indian Railway Company on the 6th of December 1920, admittedly more than six months after the delivery of goods. The plaintiff thereupon instituted the present suit for recovery of damages for loss of goods. He was met with an objection by the defendant East Indian Railway to the effect that the suit did not lie as the notice contemplated by section 77 of the Railways Act, IX of 1890, had not been given.

The learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes has come to the conclusion that the notice which had to be given in the present case under section 77 of the Railways the Agent of the Act was a notice to Company and that any correspondence with, or notice to, the Divisional Traffic Manager at Cawnpore would be of no avail. It is true that the notice contemplated by section 77 of the Indian Railways Act and, having regard to section 140 of the same Act, in the case of State Railways, managed by a Company, is served on the Government or on the Agent of the Company maraging the Railway or the Manager of the Government. In the present case whatever interpretation might be put on the correspondence between the Divisional Traffic Manager and the plaintiff, it cannot amount in law to a notice on the Agent of the defendant Company.

This point is covered by the case of Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company v. Chandra Bai (1) where the plaintiff had given notice to the General Manager, and in that case it was held that it was not equal to a notice on the Agent as contemplated by the aforesaid sections, so that on this point the Trial Court was correct. The other point argued before me, was that, having regard to the terms printed on the back of the receipt given by the Railway, no notice was necessary. A reference was made to paragraph No. 5 commencing with the words "all claims, etc.," and it was argued that, having regard to this especial condition, the notice contemplated by section 77 of the Indian Railways Act was not necessary. This point, too, has been the subject of a decision of this Court ; [see Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company v. Ganpat Rai (2), and a Bench of this Court has held that a condition like that does not absolve the person who claims to make the Railway Company liable from the necessity of giving the notice contemplated by section 77 of the Indian Railways Act. This ground of attack also fails. I, therefore, dismiss this application for revision and confirm the decree of the Trial Court with costs.

Held, that a c. i. f. contract being a contract for the sale of goods by tendering the shipping documonts, and not a contract for the sale of documents relating to goods, the principal and substantial breach for which damages were awardable was the failure to ship the rice to Colombo, and B. was entitled to be put in the same position that he would have been in, had the contract been duly performed, and the rice delivered to him on due date, and that the true measure of damages was the difference between the contract rate and the rate at which

Mr. Leach, (with him Mr. Ohari), for the Appellants.

Mr. N. M. Cowasjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT,-The sole question for decision in this case is, what is the true measure of damages for breach of a certain c. i. f. contract. The defendants respondents agreed to sell to the plaintiffs appellants 590 bags of rice at Rs. 18-8.0 per bag, c. i. f. to Oolombo. The terms of the contract were that shipment was to be made per Ss. "War Panther" or any other steamer from Bassein before the 20th Dasember 1918, payment to be made on handing over bills of lading by sellers to buyers at Rangoon. Defendants respondents did not ship any rice at Bassein under this contract before the 20th December 1918, or at any time. It was, therefore, impossible that any documents in pursuance of the contract should ever have come into existence, and none could, therefore, be banded over at Rangoon or anywhere else. The learned Judge on the Original Side of this Court held that the damages to be awarded were the difference between the contract rate and the market rate prevailing at Rangoon on the 20th December 1918. He apparently held that a c. i. f. contract is a contract for the sale of doeuments and not a contract for the sale of goods. He apparently followed the case of Karberg & Co. v. Blythe, Green, Jourdain & Oo. (1).

It is contended before us on appeal that the measure of damages is the difference between the contract rate and the market rate at Colombo at the time that the goods might be expected to have reached there. had the contract been duly carried out.

What a c, i.f. contract is, is fully laid down in Biddell Brothers v. E. Olemens Horst Co. The seller undertakes to sell the specified goods, to ship them to the place agreed upon, to obtain a contract of the affreightment and policies of insurance and to hand over the bill of lading and the policies to the buyer. Such a contract provides for delivery of the goods to be made by handing over the documents, and when this is done, the seller has performed the contract in full and is relieved of further liability. In the present case, the seller did nothing to carry out the contract, and it is contended that the breach of the contract consisted in his not handing over the documents at Rangoon.

In the case relied on in the Court below, the learned Judge appears to have acted on the opinion of Scrutton, J. He had held that a c. i. f. contract is not a sale of goods but a sale of documents relating to goods, and damages were awarded on the ground that regard must be had to the breach committed by him, which was the failure to hard over the documents. But in the Court of Appeal, two of the Lord Justices distinctly held that this was not a correct view of a c. i. f. contract. Banker, L. J., said, "The contract on the part of the sellers is a contract for the sale of goods whereby the sellers slso undertake, inter alia, to enter into a contract of affreightment to the appointed destination, which contract will be evidenced by the Bill of Lading, and, secondly, to take out a rolley or policies of insurance upon the terms current in the trade," and dealing with the statement made by Serutton, J., in his judgment that "the key to many of the difficulties arising in c. i. f. contracts is to keep firmly in mind the cardinal distinction that a c, i. f. sale is not a sale of goods but a sale of dosuments relating to goods," he said, "I am not able to agree with that view of the contract that it is a sale of documents relating to goode. I prefer to look upon it as a contract for the cale of goods to be performed by the delivery of dcouments, and what those dccuments are, must depend upon itself." the terms of the contract Warrington, L. J., in his judgment said. "Ineidentally I desire to say that I entirely agree with Bankes, L. J., in the remarks he has made about the statement made by Serutton, J., that such a contract as this is a contract for the sale of dccuments. I need not say that it is with much deference that I express my disagreement with a statement of that sort made by a Judge with such Scrutton, J., but it seems to me that it is not in accordance with the facts relating to these contracts. The contracts are contracts for the sale and purchase of goods, but they are contracts which may be performed in the particular manner indicated by that passage from the judgment of Hamilton, J., which I have just read; in particular, that the delivery of the goods may be effected first by placing them on board ship, and secondly by transferring to the purchaser the shipping documents."

The judgment of Hamilton, J., referred to was given in the case of Biddell Brothers v. E. Clemens Horst Co. (2). That this view is the correct view is clear from the judgments in the House of Lords in Johnson v. Taylor Brothers & Co., Ltd. (3). Their Lordships were dealing with the question as to whether leave should be given for service out of the jurisdiction of a writ of summons. Where the breach of a contract which is the founds. tion of the action was committed within the jurisdiction, leave would be granted, but where the breach was committed outside the jurisdiction, leave is not, as a rule, granted. The facts of the case were practically the same as the fasts before us. The seller had shipped no goods. That breach had been committed outside the jurisdiction and the breach to deliver documents was committed within the jurisdiction and it was sought to obtain leave by reason of this latter breach. The Lord Chancellor held: "The real complaint of the respondents against the appellant is that he did not, according to his contract, put on board ship the goods which he had contracted to sell. It is ludicrous to suppose that their substantial complaint lies in the withholding of paper symbols which could have no meaning, and which, indeed, could have no existence when once the original breach had been committed." Lord Danedin said: "Turning now to the present case, what is it that the plaintiff really complains of? It is that the ore was not shipped in order to be forwarded. That is the gist of the whole matter, The non-tender of the shipping documents might have constituted a breach if the ore had been shipped, but when the ore was not shipped, no shipping documents could be called into existence, and the breach of non tender was, so to speak, swallowed up by the prior breach of nonshipment." Lord Atkinson said the same. "But here the seller has in breach of his agreement failed to ship the goods. By doing so he has made the creation, and, of course, the tender, of the shipping documents impossible. That is a nesessary but collateral ecusequence of the main substantial breach of his contract," Lord Buckmaster said: "In the present instance the refusal to ship the goods ie, in my opinion, the whole of the breach. Unless and until the goods are shipped, the shipping documents cannot come into existence, and refusal to tender such documents is consequent upon the refusal to put the goods on board. It is perfectly true that without the documents, the title to the goods is not complete, that delivery is not effected, and it may be that in an action for non-delivery cf the documents the measure of damage would be the same as that for non-delivery of the goods."

Regarding, therefore, a.c. i. f. contract as a contract for the sale of goods and not as a contract for the sale of documents relating to goods, and having regard to the fact that the seller put no goods on ship board and that, consequently, the shipping documents could not come into existence, it is clear that the failure to tender the shipping documents has no relation to the damages arising from the breach of the contract as a whole.

It was at one time contended that damages could not be recovered for loss of market on a contract of carriage by sea, but this view was rejected in Dunn v. Bucknall Brothers (4). Colline, M. R., said, "Wherever the eirenmstances admit of calculations as to the time of arrival and the probable flietus. tions of the market being made with the same degree of reasonable certainty in tha ease of a sea as of a land transit, there ean be no reason why damages for late delivery should not be calculated as. cording to the same principles in both CA908."

The ries in this suit was purchased to be delivered at Colombo with a view of re-sale (4) (1902) 2 K. B. 614; 71 L. J. K. B. 963; 51 W. R. 100; 87 L. T. 497; 18 T. L. R. 807; 9 Asp. M. C. 336; 8 Com. Cas. 183, there. The time that would be occupied in the transit from Bassein to Colombo would be four or five days under ordinary circumstances. The plaintiffs appellants, therefore, would be able to calculate the time of arrival and the probable fluctuations of the market, and they bought with reference to the probable rate of the market and this fact the defendants respondents must be taken to have realized.

The ordinary rule as to the measure of damages is to be found in section 73 of the Indian Contrast Act. The party who suffers by the breash is entitled to receive from the party who has broken the contract compensation for any loss or damage caused to him thereby, which naturally arose in the usual course of things from such breach, or which the parties knew, when they made the contract, to be likely to result from the breach of it.

The loss that would be caused to the plaintiffs appellants in this case would be the loss of the market at Colombo and not the loss of the market at Rangoon. That loss was due, in the present case, solely to the breach by the seller of his contract to ship the rice at Bassein and send it to Colombo. That, as has been shown, is the principal and substantial breach of the contract. The failure to deliver the shipping documents has either nothing to do with the loss arising from the breach of the contract, or has been swallowed up in the principal breach.

In Williams Brothers v. El. T. Agius Ltd. (5) it was held that the true measure of damages was the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time of the breach. That was also c. i. f. contract case. In the course of his jadgment in that ease, Lord Danedin drew attention to the distinction which must be made batween cases in which damages were elaimable in consequence of a total breach and eases in which damages arose from delay. Referring to Wertheim v. Ohicoutimi Pulp Co. (6) he said: "The buyer, therefore, got the goods, and the only damage he had suffered was in delay. Now, delay might have prejudiced him; but the amount of prejudice was no longer a matter of speculation, it had been put to the test by the goods being actually sold; and he was rightly, as I think, only held entitled to recover the difference between the market price at the date of due delivery and the price he actually got. But when there is no delivery of the goods the position is quite a different The boyer never gets them and he is entitled to be put in the position in which he would have stood if he had got them at the due date. That position is the position of a man who has goods at the market price of the day-and, barring special eiroumstances, the defaulting seller is neither mulet in damages for the extra profit which the buyer would have got owing to a forward re-sale at over the market price, nor can he take berefit of the fact that the buyer has made a forward re-eale at under the market price."

The authorities, therefore, elearly show that, in this case, the only breach or, at any rate, the principal and substantial breach for which damages are to be awarded was the failure to ship the goods in order that they might be delivered to the boyer at Colombo, and, under the law, damages are to be awarded to place the buyer in the same position as he would have been in, had the contract been duly carried out and the goods delivered to him on due date. In order to put plaintiffs appellants in the position that they would have been in had this contract been duly performed, the damage to which they are entitled is the difference between the contract rate and the rate at which the goods could have been sold by them at Colombo had they been delivered on due date.

The parties are agreed that the rate prevailing at Colombo, which is to be taken to calculate the amount of damages, is Re. 26 per bag.

The appeal will, therefore, be accepted and the decree of the lower Court will be set aside, and a decree will be passed in favour of the appellants for the sum of Rs. 4,425 with costs on that amount in this Court and in the Court below.

We certify for two Counsel.

MULLA-DEFENDANT-RESPONDENT.

Cantonment land—Ejectment—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), applicability of—Secretary of State—Owner of Cantonment lands—Adverse possession—Person occupying Cantonment land, position of—Coste—Plaintiff suing in wrong Court and on wrong cause of action but succeeding—Defendant's costs, liability for.

The provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act do not apply to lands lying in Cantonment areas as they are under the direct administration of the Government of India. [p 582, col. 1.]

The Secretary of State is absolute owner of all Cantonment land, unless he has parted with the ownership. There can be no adverse possession against him. [p. 583, col 2.]

A person occupying land in Cantonments, which has not been specifically transferred by the Secretary of State, is in the position of a tenant or in the position of a licensee. [p. 582, col. 2.]

Where a plaintiff institutes a suit in a wrong Court on a wrong cause of action and on assertions, which he is unable to prove, but ultimately succeeds on appeal, he should pay his own costs throughout and those of the defendant. [p. 584, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Shabjahanpur, dated the 9th April 1920.

Mr. L. M. Banerji, for the Appellant. Mr. Mulhtar Ahmad, for the Respond.

JUDGMENT .- The facts of the suit out of which this appeal arises are that Mulla Kachi has been in possession of three 1594/1, 1594/2 and plots Nos. eitnated in Shahjahanpur Cantonments for over 20 years before the date of suit. He has been enlivating these plots which are of an aggregate area of about balf an aere. He purchased the plot by three sale-deeds, the first of the 10th of January 1895, the seecnd of the 20th of July 1896 and the third of the 14th of August 1896. On the evidence, he has never paid any rent in respect of these plots and his title to occupy the same was never challenged until the institution of the present proceedings. It would appear that in the year 1911 Babu Shimbbu Narain was appointed as Record Officer for the Shabjahanpur Canton.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA D. MULLA.

ments. Until this appointment, Mulla had been entered as proprietor of plots Nos. 1594. 1 and 1594.2, other persons being recorded as proprietors of No. 1601. Babu Shimbbu Narain altered the entry and declared Mulla to be a tenant. Mulla holds other Cantonment land admittedly as a tenant. Later on, the rent of these three plots was recorded as Rs. 5-8-0. In 1916 the Cantonment Authorities sued to eject Mulla under the Tenancy Act as a tenant-at-will from the half asre in question in the Court of an Assistant Collector. The plaintiff describes him as a non-occupancy tenant. The suit was decreed. Mulla appealed to the District Judge. The District Judge found on the merits that Mulla was proprietor of Nos. 1594-1 and 1594-2 and a portion of 1601. He directed his ejectment from the remaining portion of 1601. The Secretary of State appeals to this Court against the partial dismissal of the claim demanding that Mulls be ejected from all the three plote.

The first point for decision is, whether a Bent Court had jurisdiction. I find that the Bent Court had no jurisdiction in the matter. The Tenancy Act applies to the territories administered by the Governor of the Province of Agra with the exception of certain specified areas. The land in dispute is situated in Cantonments. Cantonments are under the direct administration of the Government of India. This is clear from Army Regulation, Volume II, Article 400, and the following articles. The suit was thus instituted in a Court which had no juris. distion to deside it. If the land had been land to which the Tenancy Act applied, Mulla must have been held to have acquired ossupancy rights over two of the numbers and a portion of the third, but as the Tenancy Act has no application, he has not obtained the privileges of an occupancy tenant. Mulls took the objection in the Court of first instance that the suit had been instituted in the wrong Court. appeal lay, in any circumstances, to the District Judge, as he asserted proprietary title. Section 197 of the Tenancy Act thus has application and, as I have before me all the materials necessary for determination, I must dispose of the appeal as though the suit had been instituted (as it should have been) in a Civil Court, I thus take it as an ordinary suit for ejestment. What is the position of Mulla? There can be only one answer to that question. There is a very long series of decisions from 1866 onwards; Carey v. Robinson (1), Babu Ram .. chand v. Collector of Mirzapur (2), Patterson v. Secretary of State (3), Secretary of State v. Jagan Prasad (4), Secretary of State v. Vamanrav Narayan Chiplunkar (5), Bank of Upper India Ld., Mussoorie v. Secretary of State (6) and Kaikhusru Aderji Ghaswala v. Secretary of State (7). The last decision is a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Conneil. From these decisions it is clear that the Secretary of State is absolute owner of all Cantonment land, unless it can be proved satisfactorily that he has parted with the ownership. In the absence of evidence, as is the case here, all Cantoument land balongs to the Secretary of State. There can be no adverse possession against him. The only position open to a person occupying land in Cantonments which has not been specifically. transferred by the Secretary of State, is the position of a tenant or the rosition of a licensee. It has been found on the facts that Mulla is not a tenant. He has never paid rent. His position is thus that of a lisensee, and it is open to the Secretary of State to eject him at will by revoking his license. This appeal must, therefore, succeed.

I have asked the learned Government Advocate to consider the advisability of representing to the proper Authorities that this is a hard case. Mulla purchased what he believed to be proprietary rights in Shahjahanpur Cantonments over 20 years ago. The Cantonment Authorities did not question his title until 1911. From that year they have all along permitted him to remain in occupation of this land. They assigned no reason for ejecting him. ease would be a hard ease in any oirenmetances. It is particularly a ease in view of the fact that Shahjahanpur Cantonments, although it remains a Military Cantonment in name, has for many years not been occupied by troops. There seems to be no suggestion that the sessation of sultivation over this area is necessary in the interests of the safety of Shahjahanpur. If the object of this suit has been to assert the Secretary of State's proprietary title, that object will be sufficiently gained by my deeree, and Mulla might, then, be restored to the occupation of the land if be agrees to pay rent for it. In the result, I decree this appeal, but inasmuch as the Secretary of State instituted the suit in a wrong Court on a wrong cause of action and on assertions which he was unable to prove, I direct that the plaintiff pay his own costs throughout and those of the defendant.

Mr. Autam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DUCKWORTH, J .- The plaintiffs respondents, A. H. Dawood & Co., are the indorsees of several promissory-notes executed by Ma Kyaw, deseased, in favour of one Jamal Aboo. As holders in due course, they brought a suit against the present appellants and certain others for the resovery of Rs. 7,818.10 6 alleged to be due on 18 pro-notes. The heirs and legal representatives of Ma Kyaw, deceased, were included other defendants, 88 defendants. The including the present appellants, Manng Po Mya and Ma Mya May, were added as partners of Ma Kyaw, deceased. In fact, it was sought to hold the defendants liable on the pro-notes executed by Ma Kyaw, because they were her partners, and because the partnership passed under the name and style of Ma Kyaw,

The execution of the pro-notes by Ma Kyaw was not disputed, and it was not denied that the money was lent by Jamal Aboo for the partnership purposes.

The partnership also is admitted.

The real defence was that Ma Kyaw had no authority to execute negotiable instruments on behalf of the partnership, or to take loans from outsiders, and that the deed of partnership specified the manner in which a loan of money could be borrowed for purposes of the partnership.

Another point raised by the defence was, that Ma Kyaw was not the name of the firm, that the words "Ma Kyaw" used in the pro-notes represented her name and her personal signature, and that the pro-notes hore her name alone, and were executed by her in her personal capacity.

The learned Judge on the Original Side found that Ma Kyaw was the name of the firm, and that Ma Kyaw, who obviously managed the business of the Mill, which was the subject of the partnership had authority to borrow money and to bind the firm by executing negotiable instruments, as security for the loans. He, therefore, gave the plaintiffs-respondents a decree for the amount claimed with costs.

Mr. Obari, on behalf of appellants, Maung Po Mya and Ma Mya May, who alone have MAUNG PHO MYA O. DAWOOD & CO.

appealed against the decree, argued the case at very great length, but I do not think it necessary to enter into all points argued by him, because, in my opinion, it is quite clear that the partnership in question was not a trading partnership, and, therefore, there must be evidence of the authority of any partner to borrow money on behalf of the firm, or to bind the firm by executing negotiable instrumenes.

The main business of the Mill was to mill other people's paddy, convert it into rice and sell, taking its profit in its milling charges. There is no sufficient evidence to show that it was habitual for this Mill to buy paddy, convert it into rice and sell that rice. It is, therefore, impossible to hold that this was in any sense a trading partnership, in regard to which the law is now settled. In such a case as this, as already stated, evidence of authority to contract loans for the partnership business is necessary, but there is no such evidence on the record.

This is not a case in which it is possible to infer that there was implied authority to bind the firm in this manner, and the mere fact that it may be very sommon in Burma to execute pro-notes for goods supplied on credit or for loans, will not warrant me in holding that, in this instance, Ma Kyaw had authority to borrow money or execute bills so as to bind her so partners by those transactions.

I am quite unable to agree with the learned Judge on the Original Side in holding that Ma Kyaw was the name and style of the partnership. There was a notice board at the Mill which bore the sign "Oktan Rice Mill," and if there was a name of the partnership at all, I think that the designation aforesaid must be taken as the name of the business.

It is perfectly true that Ma Kyaw was apparently allowed by the other partners to manage the business, and it is apparent that in doing so she used her own name, but with one exception the documents showed clearly enough that that name was used by her in her personal capacity and not in any sense as the name of the partnership in question. The sole exception to which I refer is the document, Exhibit B, filed in Civil Regular No. 55 of 1918 which bears the words "On Demand I, the undersigned, Ma Kyaw of Dallah, mutually and severally promise to pay, etc."

It has been argued that this dosument was sufficient to show that Ma Kyaw was used as the name and style of the firm, but I am unable to agree that this is the case. words "mutually and severally" were obviously put in by the writer of the doenment, because he thought that that was the correct and legal way of writing a document of this description, and it would be going much too far to lay so much stress upon the use of these words as to dedues therefrom that they were intentionally used to show that Ma Kyaw was not acting in her personal capacity, but was using her name to represent the partnership. I am, therefore, unable to hold that the words "Ma Kyaw" represent the name of the business. That being so, it is manifest that, inasmuch as the notes did not bear the name of the partnership, the other partners cannot be held to be liable under them.

I am, of course, dealing with this appeal on the understanding that the respondents' suit must stand or fall on the notes. He is, as stated, merely the holder in due sourse. and the notes were not made in his favour, but in that of Jamal Abco. The case of Maung Po Sin v. Vellayappa Ohetty (1) is to be distinguished for two reasons :-(a) the managing partner was given a powerof attorney, under which he was entitled to borrow money, and (b) the plaintiff was not the indorses of the bill. In the same way the Privy Council case of Karmali Abdulla Allerakia v. Bora Karim'i (2) is readily distinguishable, insamuch as the plaint. iff was not an indorsee of the negotiable instruments, as is the ease here. In the esse of Shanmuganatha Ohettiar Srinivaes (3) Aiyar distinction this referred to in the judgment of Was Srinivasa Ayyangar, J., on page 732*, though, indeed, his remarks were in the nature of obiter dicta. The point, however, seems to be that, in the present case, the suit of the respondents, as indorsees, can only be on the notes as such, and that the considerations which appear to have influenced their Lordships of the Privy Council in Karmali Abdulla's case (2) have no bearing. This was, moreover, shown by the learned Judge on the Original Side in his judgment.

There is little doubt, therefore, that, in the present case, the other partners cannot be held liable on the notes in suit.

On the other hand, there is no doubt that Ma Kyaw was personally liable, and that, since she is dead, her legal representatives are liable, so far as regards such estate of hers as came into their possession.

So far as regards the present appellants, Maung Po Mya and Ma Mya May, the appeal must be allowed, and the suit of the respondents as against them, must be dismissed with costs in both Courts.

ROBINSON, C. J.—I agree. The distinction between suits based on the pro-note and those on the original consideration for the note must be clearly borne in mind. We are dealing here with an indorsee who can claim merely on the notes and who cannot fall back on the original loan.

in the case of partnerships, not of a mereantile character, there is co implied author. ity in one partner to bind the others by negotiable instruments. He must have express authority. It is otherwise in the ease of an ordinary trading partnership. The present partnership is no: what is ordinarily recognized as a trading partnership and there is no proof on the resord that would entitle us to regard it as such. Evidence as to the nature of the business and as to the practice of persons engaged in such businesses would be admissible but none has been given. There is no express authority and, therefore the appeal must susseed. In addition to the authorities cited, I would refer to Premabhai Hemabhai v. T. H. Brown (4) and Thaith Ottathil Kutti Ammu v. MONIMUNJARY DEBI-DEFERDANT.

Gift, imperfect—Shares in limited Company—Transfer deed executed—Transfer not made in Company's register, effect of—Transfer, intended, whether can be treated as trust.

A. executed a transfer deed whereby he transferred certain shares in a Company to his wife and gave possession of them to her. She, however, did not, till after his death, complete the transfer deed by getting her name entered in the registers of the Company as share-holder, nor was it in his lifetime presented for registration with the Company:

Held, that the gift was not perfected as the donor did not do everything which, according to the nature of the property comprised in the gift, was necessary to be done to transfer the property. [p. 587, col. 1.]

Held, also, that as there was no equity to perfect an imperfect gift, the gift having been intended to take effect by way of transfer the Court would not hold the intended transfer to operate as a declaration of trust. [p. 587, col. 1.]

Mr. H. D. Bose, (with him Mr. N. N. Bose), for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. D. N. Fose, (with bim Mr. B. Ghose), for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT .- In this case, at the conclusion of the evidence and the argument, I gave judgment upon the footing that the deceased had, during his lifetime, transferred certain shares to the defendant, Sreemati Monimunjary Dabi. At the trial, it was a common assumption of both sides, that if the widow soul! show that the deceased had executed in her favour a certain transfer deed, and had made over the same to her she would be entitled to susseed. Mr. H. D. B:se, for the plaintiff, after my judgment had been given, asked me to re hear argument upon the case in view of the fact that subsequent emsideration had indused him to think that this assumption was wrong. Bather than have the rights of the parties determined assording to any other principles than those of law, I assented to having the matter re-opened in argument before me. Now I am quite elear on the facts of this ease that the gift, which the deceased intended of these shares, was intended by him to take effect by way of transfer, and that he did not intend a trust. If, upon the evidence, I thought that it was open to the AMARENDRA KRISENA DUTT C. MONIMUNJARY DEBI.

widow to say that, on this question, her opportunity for addusing evidence had not been in the sirsumstances complete, I should not disturb my previous intention, and I should give judgment in her favour. however, satisfied, that in view of the evidence given at the hearing, it is not now open to the widow to profess a desire to contend that the gift of shares by her husband was not intended to take effect by way of transfer. As regards the shares in question, the deceas. el husband was the absolute registered owner. If one may apply language which is not strictly applicable even in England except to land, one may say that he was the owner of the legal as well as the equitable interest in the shares. He executed the transfer deed, which is in evidence, and, as I have held, he gave possession of it his wife. She. however, did not, till after his death, complete the transfer deed : nor was it in his lifetime presented for registration with the Company. In my opinion the gift was not perfected. The donor must have done everything which, assording to the nature of the property somprised in the settlement, was necessary to be done to transfer the property : Mitroy v. Lord (1), Eithards v. Delbridge (2). The donee must 10 the case of shares, such as those with which I am concerned (the Articles of Association of the Company had been put in evidence), have a present, absolute and unconditional right to have the transfer registered : Societe Generale de Paris v. Walker (3), Nanney v. Morgin (4), Moore v. North Western Ban't (5), Ireland v. Hart (6).

In these circumstances, I must, in this case, apply the principle that there is no equity to perfect an imperfect gift, and that the gift, having been intended to take effect by way of transfer, the Court will not hold the intended transfer to operate as a declaration of trust. The evidence with regard to the disposition of the dividend does not alter this position and is no stronger than it was in the case of Milory v. Lord (1). Two cases, Merbai v. Ferosbai (7), Bhaskar Purshotan v. Sarasvitibai (8) were cited to me from Bombay, but, in so far as they qualify or whittle down the principles which I have endeavoured to explain, I am not prepared to follow them. The fact is this that, unless those principles be adhered to, every imperfect transfer will have to be made effectual by being construed as a perfect trast.

In these circumstances, the result is that the plaintiffs must succeed in the enit, but all the costs of the defendants after the first day of the hearing must be paid by the plaintiff to the defendants. As regards the costs of suit up to, and including, the first day of hearing, those must be paid by the defendant, Sreemati Monimunjary Debi. I am not prepared to make other defendants pay any costs.

As regards my first judgment, I have a copy of it, which is unsigned. To make the matter quite clear, what I purpose to do is to make the shorthand notes of the first judgment a schedule to this judgment.

SCHEDULE. Appeal allowed.

RANKIN, J.—In this case, I quite agree with the proposition that the matter should be treated with that degree of suspicion which is proper to claims which are made after a man's death against his estate. In the present case, I am not surprised that the parties have searched high and low for corroborative evidence on either side, but having regard to the extreme unreliability of certain witnesses, I think the evidence, in the end, is within a very narrow compass.

I do not think that the evidence of the plaintiff Amarendra Krishna Dutt, about what his father is said to have told him three years before his death, is worth anything at all. The statement that a dead man three years ago had said this or said that, is almost inevitable in such a case, and I am not in the least prepared to rely upon the evidence of Amarendra when he makes a statement of that sort, particularly as it is not corroborated by the evidence of any other brother to whom it is to be presumed some knowledge of the father's intention would be communicated. As regards the statement that the transfer deed, though not as filled up in the body of it now, was taken by Akhoy some time in August, shortly before his death, to the Stock Exchange to have the shares sold by means of one Protab Chunder Roy, that is not borne out by the evidence of this broker, and I do not in the least feel satisfied that is anything except a tale. Very much the same consideration applies to the witness Bholanath, a neighbour of the deceased, who, in my indgment, gave his evidence with some vagueness and did not in the box impress me as a man whose oath proved the things which he said. Further, I am of opinion that the whole story as to what happened at the opening of the iron safe after the death some time in September, is a story which comes to nothing in either direction. Even if it be true that this lady's brother, Rashik, who seems not to be a very reputable person, immediately shouted that there was no such thing as shares the moment the shares were mentioned, and that immediately thereupon these somewhat numerous parties assisting in this function got into a state of noise and quarrel, while the lady stood by the threshold, I am entirely unable to draw any inference useful for the decision of this case from these facts. Now, I think that the documentary evidence in this case is by far the most important, but I failed to find any importance in a minute examination of the time and manner in which the transfer form was, after the death, signed by Monimunjary Debi by the pen of Rashik for the purpose of accepting the transfer.

The position shortly is this:- The one witness, apart from the lady's evidence, who says that Akhoy Kumar Dutt executed the document now before me; that it was years ago in the condition, as regards the body of it, that it is now in, is the broker Dunanjoy Mullick. He is corroborated by the evidence of Amarendra in this respect, as it would appear from Amarendra's evidence, that Muliick's signature was on that document in August 1918. Now, it is quite true that Dunanjoy Mullick is a relation of this lady, but he is a share. broker and he is just the sort of person who might reasonably be called in for the purpose of assisting Akhoy Kumar Dutt to execute the transfer deed. There is no improbability, and merely by reason of the relationship there is all the more probability, that he would be called in for that purpose. Now, the position is this. The transfer deed has on it the date 29th November 1916, and I know that the deceased made his Will within a couple of weeks or after that, in December 1916 the same year. When I come to that fact I have before me the high probability that Akshoy was minded to arrange his affairs for some reason or other towards the end of 1916. In the Will he expressly says that he has no cash or moveable estate for distribution, and I find from the evidence of the share certificate that these shares had been transferred to him as long ago as the 15th June 1907 He is very unlikely to have forgotten about this holding in the Bengal Timber Trading Company and his statement that he has no moveable estate for distribution is, I think, pretty strong evidence, taking it with the evidence of Mullick, as to the transfer deed, that Akshoy had disposed as he thought of these shares at that time.

Now, when he was disposing of these properties in this way, we know something about his state of mind, because he says that the plaintiffs in this suit, "Abinash and Amarendra naturally bore a strong hateful feeling to my wife and quite disrespectful to me, especially Abinash." Remembering that the evidence of the testator himself is by far the best class of evidence that can be appealed to by claimants against his estate, I think I have here ample evidence for this, that the testator was minded to give these shares to his wife and was of opinion, as the recital in the Will shows, that he had effectively done so and that they no longer belonged to his estate. In these circumstances, although the date 29th November 1916 is in type and not in manuscript, I am satisfied, reading the circumstances together with the Will, that it was executed as on the date which it purports to bear.

It being, therefore, established that the testator was minded to give these shares to his wife and thought that he had effectively done so, it remains to consider the point which Mr. H. D. Bose very properly pressed. People often are minded to make gifts and yet do not complete the gift. That is quite true, but I am satisfied not only that the transfer deed was signed and witnessed, but that it was given effect to by parting with it to the wife with the intention that from that time she was to be the owner of the shares. In the first place, there is some presumption that if a man wants to make a gift he will do all that is necessary to effectuate his purpose. He is treating the matter in the Will as though the shares were not his, and, when I come to examine the evidence that the testator handed the paper over to his wife, I find the position to be this. The lady's evidence is confused and in some places unreliable, but it does seem fairly certain that both he and she had a private box of their own and they both had access from time to time to each others. The lady is an illiterate purda-nashin. If she were to be required to make her mark upon the transfer deed and to have the shares transferred into her own name with the result that dividend warrants would come addressed to her, it is very probable that that would produce a great deal of trouble and inconvenience both to the husband and to her every time that these matters had to happen. It is not an astonishing thing at all that, in these circumstances, the transfer deed should be made over to the wife, but that the transfer deed should not be presented for registration and a new share certificate taken out in the name of the purda-nashin lady. Every probability, it seems to me, is in the lady's favour. It is probable that the husband meaning to make a gift did make the gift; he thought he had made it and it is quite consistent that they should not do what would be very troublesome in its consequences, namely, get the shares put in the lady's name during her husband's lifetime. As regards the receipt of dividends, the lady says that her husband had, of course, to collect the dividends. Sometimes he made them over to her and sometimes it seems that he spent them, I do not know, whether on household expenses or upon his own; but the mere fact that he paid the dividends, as such, on any occasion to his wife, is corroboration of the gift, and there is no doubt, having regard to the relationship of the parties, that if he did not pay the dividends over as received to his wife he did so by her implied consent or at any rate as between her and him, upon the footing that it was with her permission. I think, under the circumstances, that the evidence proves to my satisfaction not only that the document was executed in November 1916, but that it was made over to the lady and that there is room for quite sensible reasons, why the transfer was not completed by the registration of the shares in the new name. The lady must, therefore, succeed in this suit. The suit will be dismissed with costs on scale No. 2.

MAUNG PO MYI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS —RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59-Attestation—Standing by without signing as attesting witness, whether sufficient—Mortgage-deed—Registration defective—Evidence—Personal covenant.

To satisfy the requirements of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, the witnesses must sign their names after seeing the actual execution of the deed. Standing by and seeing the executant write something on the deed, without signing as attesting witness to the executant's signature, is not sufficient. [p. 589, col. 2]

Mortgage-deeds which are invalid for want of registration, or by reason of defective registration, are admissible in evidence to prove a personal covenant to pay, and, where there is no doubt that the consideration-money was paid, and there is an unqualified agreement to pay, the lender is entitled to a decree for the amount of the money lent with the interest due thereon. [p. 590, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the judgment of the Divisional Judge, Tenasserim, confirming a decree passed by the Additional District Judge, Tavoy.

Mr. Shaw, for the Appellant.

Mr. Maung Lat, for Respondents Nos. 1 and JUDGMENT .- The plaintiff appellant has brought this suit on a mortgage deed, dated the 18th September 1917, executed by Maung Po Myi and his mother Ma Yaing. The deed resites that they desired to mortgage the properties specified for Rs. 3,000 at the rate of Rs. 1 4 0 per cent per mensem, and it continues, "we will re pay the principal with interest at once when the money-lender demands the same. If we fail to do so, the money-lender may sell these mortgaged properties assording to law and return the exesss money, if any, to us. We will make up the amount, if it is short," and, later on, the deed resites: "Under these conditions the rish man Quah Cheng Gwan lent the amount of Rs. 3,000 to the mother and son." When the suit was brought, Ma Yaing was doed, and her heirs and legal representatives had been brought on the resord. Manne Po 11

Myi did not defend the suit, and a mortgagedecree was passed against him. As regards Ma Yaing's liability, the mortgage failed, as it had not been properly attested in respect of her signature. The deed was first executed by Maung Po Myi, and bis signature was duly attested by two attesting witnesses. At that time Ma Yaing was ill in bed, and after execution by Po Myi, the deed was taken to her. The two attesting witnesses stood at the door and saw her write on the deed, but they did not sign themselves as attesting witnesses to her signature. To satisfy the requirements of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, the witnesses must sign their names after seeing the astual execution of the See Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir deed. Rowthan (1).

Plaintiff asked for a personal decree, and the question is, whether the mortgage failing in respect of Ma Yaing, a personal decree for the money can be given. The learned Divisional Judge has felt constrained by the decision in Bunscedhur v. Sujaat Ali (2), which follows the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Narotam Dass v. Shee Pargash Singh (3), and another decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kalka Singh v. Paras Ram (4), to hold that no personal liability accrued or could be enforced. In this we think he is clearly wrong.

In the first Privy Council, ease cited, their Lordships were dealing with a particular case, and they held that the document in question contained no personal covenant to pay the debt out of personal estate, or any other estate than the particular talue that had been hypothesated. In Bunscedhur's case (2), the mortgagor promised to re-pay the principal on a certain specified date, and interest in a certain month year by year. If the interest was not paid, the mortgages was to be at liberty to recover the same by suit. The document then proceeded that, if the mort gaged property should ever be sold by auction for arrears of Government revenue or for any other reason, then the mortgagee might recover both the principal and interest in any manner they might consider feasible, either from the person or other moveable or immoveable property of the mortgagor; and that, if the principal was not paid by the agreed date, then the mortgages might institute a suit to recover from the mortgaged property. In other words, it was held that a special agreement had been made as to the remedies which were to be open to the mortgagee, and that, therefore, he could not recover his loan in any other way. In Kalka Singh's case (4), the same principle is laid down. Their Lordships stated: "In the next place, although an unqualified admission of a debt, no doubt, implies a promise to pay it, their Lordships are not prepared to hold that that is necessarily so where there is an express promise to pay in a particular manner. It must depend on the construction of the instrument in each case." In all three eases it will be observed that it was held that there was no general promise to pay but only a promise to pay in a particular way, and, therefore, these authorities do not apply to a case where the mortgagor has not limited his liability to pay only in a particular manner, and that was the view of the law taken in the case of Ethel Georgina Kerr v. Clara B. Ruxton (5).

It is unnecessary to refer to the authorities which lay down that mortgage-deeds which are invalid for want of registration or by reason of defective registration, are admissible in evidence to prove a personal covenant to pay. What has to be considered, therefore, in each case is the terms of a particular document.

In the present case there is no doubt that the consideration money was paid. There are concurrent findings by both the lower Courts as to this, and we see no reason to differ from them. There is an express promise to re-pay, and the dosument provides that, on failure to do so, the mortgagee may proceed against the mortgaged property. There is, further, the express admission of liability to pay any balance that might still remain outstanding after the property had been brought to sale. There is nothing in the document to show that the agreement to pay was qualified in its terms, or that there was any idea of substituting a remedy against the property for the initial liability to re-pay the loan. The plaintiff, therefore, was, entitled to a decree against the estate of Ma Yaing for the amount of money lent with the interest due.

We accept the appeal and reverse the desisions of the Courts below with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J .- This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves whereby the learned Judge dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff is an infant and saed by his mother and next friend. The suit was brought (i) for a declaration that the lis BISWANATH DAS GHOSE O. SHORASHIBALA DASI.

entitled to an undivided half share of and in the house and premises Nos. 155, 156.1 and 156-2, Baitakhana Road (formerly No. 155, Old Baitakhana Bazar Road) in the town of Calentta, subject to the life-interest thereon of the defendant Srimati Shorashibala Dasi; (ii) for a declaration that the indenture of conveyance, dated 25th day of March 1918, executed by the defendants, Srimati Shorashibala Dasi, Nogendra Nath Das Ghose and Srimati Golapmoni Dasi in favour of the defendant Niranjan Krishna Das, is void and inoperative as against the plaintiff; (iii) for a deslaration that the defendant Niranjan Krishna Das is not absolutely entitled to the whole of the said premises Nos. 156, 155-1, 156-2, Baitakhana Road (formerly No. 155, Old Baitakhana Bazar Road) in Caloutta.

The plaintiff further prayed for an injunction to restrain the defendant Niranjan

Biswanath Das Ghose, Sm. Provabati, (Minor), (Minor) Born 3rd Novem. Plaintiff, . Born 26th January 1911. ber 1908.

The plaintiff alleges that he is the legitimate son of Jogendra by his wife Charabala and that he was born on the 26th Japuary 1911.

Storaebibala, the 1st defendant, was eister of Jogendra; Nogendra, the 2nd defendant, was trother of Jogendra. Golapmoni, the 3rd defendant, was the mother of Jogendra, and Niranjan Krishna Das, the 4th defendant, was alleged to be the purchaser of the property in question from the first three defendants by a conveyance dated the 24th March 1918.

The main issues in the case were: (i) Was Charubala lawfully married to Jogerdra? (ii) Is the plaintiff the legitimate son of Jogerdra? The plaintiff alleged that in July or August 1905, Jogerdra duly married (Charubala, the mother of the plaintiff, according to the Hindu Shastras, and they lived as husband and wife until the death of Jogerdra on 22rd March 1916; that there was issue of the said marriage, vis., Probhabati, born on 3rd November 1908, and the plaintiff, born on 26th January 1911.

The first three defendants in the written statement alleged that Jogendra was never married to Charrbala, but that he kept her as his mistress for sometime, and that Jogendra ceased to live with her since 1909 and that the plaintiff was neither the legitimate nor the illegitimate con of Jogendra.

The 4th defendant, Niranjan Krishna. Dar, alleged that he verily believed that Charubala was a woman of the town.

The feets relating to the property in question may be taken from the statement contained in the learned Judge's judgment, as follows:—

"One Jaharmani Dasi, the aunt of Sherashitala, Nogendra and Jogendra, by ber Will, dated the 11th April 1905, appointed Shoraebitala cole executrix and directed her to pay all her just debts, and gave to Shorashibala absolutely No. 97, Beadon Street, and gave No. 156, Old Baitakhana Bezar Road (now represented by the premises in suit) to Nogendra and Jogendra absolutely in equal moieties subject to a life-interest in favour of Shorashibala, and she directed her executrix to pay monthly out of the income of her estate, Rs. 10 a month to Golspmoni for her maintenance during her life and to Nogendra and Jogendra each a like sum if they or any of them did not live under Shorashibala's eare at her own residence. The testatriz BIBWANATH DAS GROSE U. SHORASHIBALA DASI.

gave certain legacies and left all other her moveables and immoveables to Shorashibala. Jaharmani died on the 4th July 1913, without having revoked or altered her Will, and on the 4th January 1918, Probate of the Will was granted out of this Court to Shorashibala. From annexure 'B' to the affidavit of assets, it appears that no entry was made against the item 'amount of debts, due and owing from the deceased payable by law out of the estate.' On the 25th March 1918, Shorashibala, Nogendra and Golapmoni executed in favour of the defendant Niranjan a conveyance of the premises in suit for Rs. 12,800.

"The conveyance recites, inter alia, the Will of Jaharmani, the grant of Probate, the death of Jogendra on the 22nd March 1916, unmarried and intestate, and leaving his mother Golapmani as his sole beiress and legal representative, and that Shorashibala as executrix got possession of the estate of Jaharmani and paid up the legaeies and maintenance mentioned in the Will, and that Shorashibala, being in need of money for earrying out the directions in the Will as aforesaid, had agreed to sell the premises in suit, and that Nogendra and Golapmoni had agreed to join as reversioners so as to convey to the purchaser a good and valid title. Shorashibala, Nogendra and Golapmoni grant, sell, convey and transfer to the purchaser the premises in suit and all the estate, right, title, inheritance, use, trust, property, claim and demand of the vendors and of each of them into and upon the said property and the conveyance contains the usual covenant that the vendors and each of them had good right, full power, absolute authority and indefeasible title to convey and a eoverant for quiet possession and to indemnify and for further assurance.

"Shorashihala, Nogendra and Golapmoni on the same day swore an affidavit stating (paragraph 4) Jogendra's death, intestate and unmarried, and that Golapmoni was his heir and (paragraph 5) that besides themselves no other persons had any interest in the premises in suit and (paragraph 6) that the legacies and maintenance had been fully paid and discharged by the executrix. The same persons on the same day executed a bond in a sum of Rs. 25,600 in favour of the purchaser which recites, one of the conditions of the bond being to protect the purchaser against any persons claiming to be the heirs of Jogendra. Neither the conveyance nor the affidavit nor the bond makes any reference to any debts of the deceased Jaharmani."

After referring to the evidence, doenmentary and oral, the learned Judge held that a seremony of marriage was gone through between Jogendra and Charnbala, and that Charnbala was recognised as Jogendra's wife, and her children were recognised as his and that she lived with him as his wife in Upper Chitpore Road.

He forther held that Jogendra was a Kayestha and that Charnbala was of the weaver class and he then stated that it was necessary to consider whether a marriage between them could be a valid marriage and the children legitimate.

In this Court, the above mentioned findings of fact of the learned Judge have not been challenged by the learned Counsel who appeared for the first three respondents or by the learned Counsel who appeared for the 4th respondent, Niranjan Krishna Das.

The learned Counsel, who appeared for the appellant, challenged the learned Judge's finding that the plaintiff's mother was of the weaver class and urged that the Court should hold that she was a Kayastha: I see no reason, however, to differ from the learned Judge's finding in this respect and, consequently, the case must be decided upon the learned Judge's findings of fact.

The learned Judge further said that he must hold that, according to the law as laid down in Bengal, Kayasthas are Sudras and that the two (by which I understand him to mean the Kayasthas and weavers) are sub-divisions of the same caste. The learned Counsel for the first three respondents said that he disputed that finding, but he did not discuss the cases to which the learned Judge referred and on which he based his judgment in this respect. will be found the following passages:—

Judge that Kayasthan, according to the law prevalent in Bangal, are considered as Sudras. The question has frequently arisen in connection with cases of adoption, and it is settled that as Sudras no religious ceremony is in their case necessary, but that the mere giving and taking of a son is sufficient to give validity to adoption amongst them . . . They have been treated as Sudras in our Courts for a long series of years and their status as such cannot now be questioned.

"Bangali Kayasthas have been uniformly treated as Sudras in our Courts and the question does not appear capable of serious argument, although attempts may have recently been made by some members of the community to trase their descent from Khatriyas, and some of them may have actually taken the sacred thread as belonging to

This judgment, as I have already said, was not in any way shallenged by either of the learned Counsel who appeared for the respondents.

It must, therefore, be taken, as the learned Judges said in the above-mentioned ease, that the Bangali Kayesthas are treated as Sudras in this Court.

It follows, therefore, that Jogendra, being a Kayastha, and Charubala, being a Tanti, were members of two sub-divisions of the same easte, viz, the Sudras. The question, therefore, arises whether the marriage between Jogendra and Charubala was invalid by reason of the fact that they belonged to two sub divisions of the Sudra easte.

The learned Judge relied upon the opinion expressed by Mitter, J., in Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain (2), and upon the opinion of Sir Gooroodas Banerjes to be found at pages 75 and 76 in the 4th edition of his book on the Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhan.

there has been a marriage in fact, there would be a presumption in favour of there being a marriage in law.

In this case the learned Judge, as I have already stated, found that there was in fact a marriage between Jogendra and Charubala, that Charubala was recognised as his wife, and her children were recog. nised as his, and that she lived with him as his wife in Upper Chitpore Road, Calentta. These findings stand unchallenged. There is, therefore, a presumption that the marriage was valid and according to law, and the onus rests on the respondents to displace this presumption. No evidence of any usage or eustom applicable to the parties was given, except that Charubala, of the plaintiff, in erossthe mother examination, said that Jogendra Nogendra were Kayastbas, and that they could only marry Kayasthas: bala, however, was, at the time, asserting that she and her father also were Kayasthas and that there was a valid marriage between Jogendra and herself. The validity of a marriage between a Kayastha and Tanti was obviously not present to her mind.

In this Court the learned Counsel for the first three respondents urged us to remit the case for a further hearing upon the question whether, by the usage and eustom in this part of Bengal, a Kayastha could marry a woman of the Tanti class, and the learned Counsel was willing to submit to any terms as to costs which we might fix. This was opposed by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff. The case of these respondents in the Court below was, in the first place, that Charnbala was a kept mistress and that Jogendra had not married her; but the case was not confined to that as appears from the evidence and also from the learned Judge's judgment. It was obviously contended on behalf of these defendants that, even if there was a marriage between Jogendra and Charubala, it was not valid, breause Jogendra was a Kayastha and Charubala was a Tanti, and evidence was called by the defendants to show that Charabala was a Tanti; that being so, in my judgment, if the defend. ants were desirous of relying on any usage or sustom which went to show the invalidity of such a marriage, they should BISWANATH DAS GROSS &. SHORASHIBALA DASI.

have produced evidence in respect thereof at the trial. No such usage or custom was pleaded, nor was any evidence given thereof and, under these sireumstances, in my judgment, we should not now be justified in remitting this case for a further bearing in respect of this point. already stated, the defendants abstained from calling any evidence as to usage and evetom prevailing in this part of Bengal, but, for the purpose of rebutting the above-mentioned presumption, reliance appears to have been placed upon the to which the learned Judge opinion referred. In Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain (2), it was decided that, according to the doetrine of the Bengal School of Hindu Law. a certain description only of illegitimate sons of a Sudra by an unmarried Sudra woman is entitled to inherit the father's property in the absence of legitimate issue. viz, the illegitimate sons of a Sudra by a female slave or a female slave of his slave.

That decision has been disapproved of in a recent Fall Bench case, Rajani Nath Das v. Nitsi Chandra De (4). But the opinion of Mitter, J., in Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain (2), upon which Greaves, J., relied, was not overruled though it was pointed out by Mookerjee, J., in Raiani Nath Das v. Nitai Chandra De (4) at page 373,* that, "although it has been sometimes asserted that inter-marriages between different castes is prohibited in the present age, the authorities are not unanimous as to how far this prohibition extends to intermarriages between different castes of the Sudra elass in Bengal."

The opinion of Mitter, J., in Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain (2) was as follows:—
"In an ordinary case, where it is established that parties have lived together as husband and wife for a long length of time, it is consonant with natural justice to presume a valid marriage between them; and I am not aware of any peculiar provision in the Hindu Law which is inconsistent with such a presumption as this. But in this case there is no room for it, for the parties are of different castes, and a valid marriage between them is impossible unless same.

tioned by any peculiar social custom governing them: see Vayavastha Darpana, p. 1038, and Ward's Account of the Hindus, Volume I, page 94."

Markby, J., however, in giving judgment said:- "The only doubt I have is as to the reasons given by my learned colleague for holding that the District Judge is wrong in presuming that there was in this case a valid marriage, and that the son of Radhoo was, therefore, legitimate. I understand my learned colleague to consider that the presumption is excluded, because the alleged wife is of a different easte from the husband and that, unless sanctioned by custom, such a marriage is not legally binding. Upon a question of this kind I should hesitate greatly before I differed from my learned colleague, it being a question with which he is peculiarly well qualified to deal, I only wish to point out that no legal authority is quoted for this position. In the ancient text books no such authority could be found, because it is admitted (i) that in ancient times the Sudras were but one general easte or elass; (ii) that in ancient times the marriage of a man with a girl of a different class or easte was not prohibited. Whether the comparatively modern prohibition against inter-marriage of persons of a different class or easte extends in this part of India to the modern sub divisions of the Sudra caste or elass is a matter of very great importance. The restrictions thus imposed would be very numerous; and restrictions upon marriage, however convenient socially, assume quite a different aspect when recognized by the law. If the law does recognise them, of course, they cannot be ignored. But if it does not, it would be wrong to impose them, and I feel great hesitation in saying, for the first time, that there is a legal bar to these marriages." It is to be noted that the learned Judge dwelt upon the point that he was averse to holding for the first time that there was a legal bar to these marriages. The date of this case was 1875.

In Upoma Kuchain v. Bholaram Dhubi (5), which was a case from Assam, it was held that there is nothing in Hindu Law prohibiting marriages between persons belonging to different sections or sub-divisions of the

"The question remains, however, whether, according to Hindu Law, this was a valid marriage. It was contended, on the authority of a judgment of Mr. Justice Mitter in the 0380 of Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain (2), that marriage between two persons belonging to different sub-divisions of the Sadra easte is invalid. But that we think amounted to no more than an expression of opinion. The opinion of Mr. Justice Mitter was dissented from by Mr. Justice Markby, and the case was not desided on that ground. We further think that the opinion there expressed is inconsistent with the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Inderun Valungypooly Taver v. Ramasawmy Talaver (3). The question there was, whether the plaintiff, being illegitimate, and, therefore, as it was argued, of no easte at all, could son. tract a legal marriage with a person of the Sudra easte, and their Lordships said: - Their Lordships are not aware that there is any authority-there has been none quoted, and it does not appear that there is any authority supporting any such proposition as that which is contended for by the Pundits; and though their Lordships do not agree in everything that has been stated in the High Court of Appeal, they are satisfied that, in the Sudra caste, illegitimate children may inherit, and have a right to maintenance; and that, in this very instance, the illegitimate father of the mother of the plaintiff as well as his daughter, were treated as members of the family: and, on the whole, seeing that these parties are both of the Sudra caste, and that the utmost that has been alleged really is that the Zemindar was of one part of the Sudra caste and the lady to whom he was married was of another part, or of a subeaste, their Lordships hold the marriage to have been valid; to hold the contrary would, in fact, be introducing a new rule, and a rule which ought not to be countenanced.'

"The same view was taken in the case of Ramamani Ammal v. Kulanthai Natchear (6). There a similar objection baving been taken, their Lordships said (page 352):—"On the argument of this appeal this objection was not insisted on; it was conceded on both sides that resent decisions had declared the legality of a marriage between persons of those two sub classes of the Sudra caste.'

"We think that those decisions are conclusive as to there being no rule of law rendering such marriages invalid. It is true that the saces referred to were cases from the Madras Presidency; but it has not been shown to us that in this respect any principle of Hinda Law followed in that Presidency is inapplicable to the Presidency of Bengal, nor has any case or any authority from ancient writers been eited to show that such marriages are invalid. Mr. Mayne in his work on Hindu Law treats such marriages as obsolete; and, most probably, they are so in the more advanced parts of Bengal; in which eastes have become sub-divided in such a way that the sub-divisions are regarded as distinct castes in themselves. But the fast that these marriages are not resorted to is no ground for holding that they are invalid assording to law. Our attention was also called to another case-an unreported one-(Reg. App. 274 and 322 of 1886) which came before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice O'Kinealy. In that ease, it was not necessary to deside the precise point which is now before as, but both the learned Judges intimated very distinctly their opinion that, if it were necessary to dissent from the opinion of Mr. Justice Mitter, in the case to which we have referred, they would have done so. We hold, therefore, that there is nothing in the Hindu Law prohibiting a marriage between the parties to this suit."

We have referred to the judgment in the unreported ease to which reference is made by the learned Judges in the last mentioned ease. It was an appeal from an original decree Nos. 274 and 322 of 18:6 and the judgment was that of Wilson and O'Kinealy, JJ. I will read the material portion of it:—

Then, it is said that, if the adoption took place in fact, it is invalid in law, and for this reason that, although the alleged adoptive father and the alleged adopted son were both Sudras, they did not belong to the same branch of the caste or class of Sudras and that, by some rule of law the adoption by a person belonging to a particular class of the general

^{(6) 14} M. I. A. 346; 17 W. R. 1; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 493; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 736; 20 E. R. 816.

aste of Sudras, of a person belonging to the Sudra caste but to a different sub-division of it is invalid. It has always been accepted that the question of inter-marriage between two elasses and the question of adoption from one of these classes into the other is practically the same question. An opinion has, no doubt, been expressed by one of the learned Judges of this Court, Mr. Jastice Mitter, in the case of Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain (2) that a between parties marriage in different sub-divisions of the Sudra caste is probibited unless sanctioned by any special custom. That, I think, did not amount to a decision, but it does amount to a distinct expression of opinion by ore whose opinion earries very great weight. On the other hand, it was dissented from by Mr. Justice Markby who heard the case with Mr. Justice Mitter. If it were necessary for us to decide that question, we should, as at present advised, not be prepared to follow that rule. That there is no such rule of Hindu Law generally is now authoritatively settled by two decisions of the Privy Council, one in the case of Inderun Valungypooly Taver v. Ramasawny Pandia Talaver (3) where their Lordships deal with the matter very decisively. express their view on this question thus at page 159: 'On the whole, seeing that these parties are both of the Sadra caste and that the utmost that has been alleged really is that the Zemindar was of one part of the Sadra easte, and the lady, to whom he was married was of another part, or of a subeaste, their Lordships hold the marriage to have been valid; to hold the contrary would in fact be introducing a new rule, and a rule which ought not to be contenanced.' The same question was before the same tribunal in another case from Madras, the ease of Ramamani Ammal v. Kulanthai Natchear (6), and again the same law was distinctly laid down. That is conclusive against the existence of the rule contended for as a rule of Hindu Law generally. And we know of no principle accepted as belonging to the Bangal School of Hinds Law which distinguish it from could the other schools; nor is such a rule laid down in the books upon whose authority we are accustomed to rely. On the contrary, we know that any approach to such a doctrine is distinctly negatived by the highest authority of the Bengal School of Hindu Law, the Dayabhaga,

In the case before Mr. Justice Mitter, the Privy Conneil desisions are not referred to and only two authorities are cited, one is Ward's 'Accounts of the Hindus'-that is a Madras book-and if the writer rather intend. ed to lay down a rule of law and not merely to describe the habits of the people, the Privy Council has deslared that he was wrong. The second authority is also a passage in Shyama Charan's Vyavastha Darpana, but that writer has sited no authority in support of his position. If, therefore, it had been necessary to decide this question of law we should have been inclined to discent from the opinion of Mr. Justice Mitter. But it is not necessary to do so, because the utmost that has been said is that the rule is a rule which prevails in the absence of special oustom."

In view of these decisions, in my judgment, it must be held that there is no general rule of Hindu Law which renders the marriage between Jogendra and Charubala, which in fast took place, invalid, merely by reason of the fact that Jogendra was of one part of the Sadra caste and that Charubala was of another part of the same caste. In the jadgment of Wilson and O'Kinealy, JJ, it was stated that the learned Judges knew of no principle accepted as belonging to the Bengal School of Hindu Law which could distinguish it from the other schools, nor is such a rule laid down in the books upon whose authority we are accustomed to rely. The date of that case was 1838.

The position, therefore, is as follows: -A marriage between Jogandra and Charubala did in fact take place. Charubala lived with Jogendra, was recognised as his wife and had two children by him, who were recognised as his children.

The presumption, therefore, is that it was a valid marriage-there is no general rule of Hindu Law which rendered their marriage invalid. There was no evidence of any special usage or sustom applying to the parties or to that part of Bengal in which they lived, showing that the marriage was invalid, and, in the absence of such evidence, and in view of the decisions of this Court to which I have referred, in my judgment the general rule of the Hindu Law must be applied and the marriage must be held to be valid. The learned Counsel for the first three respondents strongly urged, as already BISWANATH DAS GHOSE U. SHORLSRIBALA DASI.

stated, that if an order for remand were made, he would be able to sall evidence to prove the existence of such special urage or enetom in this part of Bengal; we have desided that, in this case, it would not be right to make such an order. It was urged on behalf of the respondents that, from the social point of view in the part of Bengal in which the parties live, a marriage between a Kayastha and a Tanti would be almost impossible. In this ease there is not much to be said from the social point of view, for Jogendra, according to the evidence of his sister Shorashibale, was a man of bad character and a drunker! who, when under the inflance of liquor, used to assault people, and Shorashibala herself was kept as a mistress. But this is not the question which we have to decide: we have to be estisfied that the restrictions upon marriage alleged by the learned Connsel for the respondents have been recognised by the law and that the marriage which in fact took place between Jogendra and Charubala was not valid assording to Hindu Law. It may be that a special usage or eastom prohibiting inter marriages between two persons of the Kayastha and Tanti sub-divisions of the Sudra easte in some part of Bengal may be established by proper evidence. It is sufficient for us to say that in this case there is no evidence of any such usage or custom, prohibiting the marriage of Jogendra and Charubala, on which we could act. In my judgment, therefore, the marriage between Jogendra and Charubala must be beld valid according to the law and eustom prevalent in Bangal and the plaintiff must be held to be the legitimate son of Jogendra.

At the end of the judgment, the learned Judge said: "If I had been able to hold that the marriage was a valid one, I should have held that, by virtue of the conveyance, the share of the plaintiff did not pass and I should have held on the evidence that Jaharmani left no debts which were appaid at the date of the conveyance and that the purchaser bought with notice of this and that Shorashibala was not entitled at the date of the sale to sell as executrix. It is a well-settled rule of conveyancing, and laid down in the authorities, that, under eirenmetances similar to the present, if an executor cells, as such, within 20 years of the death and purshaser has no knowledge that there are no debts (and he is not bound to enquire) the whole interest passes, but this is not so if, as here, the purchaser knows there are no debts. I disbelieve the evidence of Pannarani and of the other woman who swore to debts and payment, and I disbelieve the evidence of Niranjan that he was told there were debts which is inconsistent with all the documents in the ease."

These findings of the learned Judge have not been challenged. It follows, therefore, in view of these findings and the marriage being held to be valid, that the share of the plaintiff did not pass by virtue of the conveyance, that Jaharmani left no debts and that the respondent, Niranjan Kishna Das, bought with notice of this and that Shorashibala was not entitled, at the date of the sale, to sell as executrix.

This being so, in my judgment, the appeal must be allowed and a declaration must be made in accordance with the first three paragraphs of the prayer in the plaint. The respondent must pay the costs of the plaintiff of the suit and of this appeal.

During the opening of the appeal reference was made to the above mentioned Fall Bench 1330 of Rajani Nath Die v. Nitai Chanira De (4), and it was argued on behalf of the appellant that, even if the marriage batween Jogendra and Charubala was invalid, the plaintiff was entitled to inherit a share of his father's (Jogendra's) estate. The learned Counsel for the respondents objected to this ease being disposed of on that ground, and he urged that the case had not been investigat. ed from that point of view, and that it might be that there were other persons who would have preference over the plaintiff : the learned leading Counsel for the appellant in his reply admitted that the appellant must stand or fall by the case which he had made in Court balaw. So that in this appeal it is not nesseary for us to consider farther the above mentioned point.

RICIARDSON, J.-1 arges. In my opinion the current of authority on this topic, ancient and modern, is strong to show that this marriage between a Kayastha and Tanti, however unusual, however opposed to carrent ideas it may be, was valid in law.

The Tantis are Sidras, and there are desisions binding on us which compel us to bold that the Kayasthas are also Sudras

BISWANATH DAS GHOSE O. SHORASHIBALA DASI.

[such as Raj Coomar Lall v. Bissessur Dyal (7)]. The parties, therefore, belonged to different sub divisions of the Sudraca ste and, that being so, it is not disputed that, according to the classical law, according to Manu's Institutes and the Dayabhaga, the marriage would be a good and legal marriage and the issue legitimate.

The Dayabhaga is still the store house of the common law of the Hindus of this Province: "It is to that treatise that we must look for the authoritative exposition of the law which governs Lower Bengal." [Moniram Kolita v. Keri Koliani (8).]

It follows that the burden of proving a modern sustom varying the Dayabhaga lies on those who set up the sustom.

Here the marriage was solemnized in fact, and strict proof must be required of a custom which would invalidate the marriage and basterdize the issue.

Of proof by cral evidence there is none worth mentioning.

As to modern judicial authority, no doubt Inderun Valungypooly Tater's case (3) and Ramamani Ammal's case (6) came from Madras, but there are the Bengal decisions to which copious reference has already been made by the learned Chief Justice. The only judicial pronouncement which can be brought against the legality of the marriage is the expression of Mitter, J., in Narain Dhara's cue (2), that inter-elass marriages are "impossible," a pronouncement which went beyond the actual necessities of the case, to which his colleague demurred at the time, and which has not been accepted as good law in subsequent cases. It would have been sofficient for the purpose then in hand to say that inter class marriages were so rare that the presumption of a legal marriage could not, in the circumstances, be drawn from the mere cohabitation of the parties. But enough has already been said about that case. The trend of judicial opinion in Bengal undoubtedly upholds the marriage.

The unsupported dicts of modern commentators, however eminent, do not make the law. Mitter, J., refers to the Vyavastha (7) 10 C. 688; 8 Ind. Jur. 621; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. s.)

Darpana. The first edition (1859, Volume II, page 1172, Principle 601) eites no authority. Nor does Mr. J. C. Ghose (1917, Principles of Hindu Law, Volume I, page 792). Sir Gooroo Das Banerjee, whose opinion is always entitled to the greatest respect, in his Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhan, adopted the view of Mitter, J., but it is still the duty of the Courts to consider and give effect to the cases as a whole.

Dicts on the other side are not wanting. Reference may be made to Golap Chandra Sirear's Hindu Law (3rd Edition, page 103). Dr. Dwarkenath Mitter, in his "Position of Women in Hindu Law" (1913, page 346), does not discuss the Bengal cases, but asems to lean towards the more liberal view.

Any argument based on the fact that inter class marriages are so infrequent as to be obsolete is now met by the observations of Sir Asutosh Mukerjee as Officiating Chief Justice in the judgment which he delivered on behalf of the majority in Rajani Nath Dos v. Nitra Chundra De (4). It is right to remember that that case had not been decided when the present case was tried in the Court of first instance.

The respectability and the distinction of the Kayaethas of Bengal as a class or caste stands unquestioned and unassailable. The Tantis of the Province, though their social status, according to the rules which govern matters, is undoubtedly inferior to that of the Kayasthas, are still described "elean caste," and as one of the superior Sudra eastes (Bhuttaebarya's Hindu Castes and Tribes). Nevertheless, such a marriage as that in question may be regarded with disapprobation by the friends and relations of the husband or by the Kayasthas as a class. There may be reasons, sufficient or insufficient, why such marriages should be socially reprehensible from the point of view of either or both of the classes to which the parties belong. But both elasses are equally members of And while it is true the body politie. that Hindu Law, Hindu religion and Hindu social observances are elosely interwoven, a declaration that all inter class marriages are illegal cannot safely be founded on social considerations alone. There are still social observances which, if they are to be enforced, must depend on social and not on legal sanctions.

As to the particular circumstances of the present case, regard being had to the character and standing of the Kayastha family to which the husband belonged and to his own character and reputation, I also agree that there was perhaps no such great metalliance on his part as might at first be supposed.

I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

SHANKAR DAS OR SHANKAR SHAH AND OTHERS-DEFENDANTS-RESPONDENCE.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, r. 1—Appeal—Temporary injunction pending appeal—Irreparable injury.

Plaintiff, who was the mortgagee of a plot of land, built a house on the plot under the terms of the mortgage-deed. The plot was subsequently sold by the owner to the defendant. Plaintiff sued for possession of the plot by pre-emption. His suit was dismissed by the first Appellate Court and he preferred a second appeal to the High Court. Defendant in the meantime obtained a decree for redemption and wanted to pull down the house. Plaintiff applied to the High Court for a temporary injunction restraining the defendant from pulling down the house pending the decision of plaintiff's pre-emption appeal:

Held, that if the defendant were permitted to pull down the house, the plaintiff would be deprived of the very ground on which he based his preferential right of pre-emption and would thus suffer irreparable loss, and that, therefore, this was a fit case in which a temporary injunction should be granted. [p. 60), col. 1.]

Petition under Order XXXIX, rule 1 and section 151, Civil Procedure Code, for issue of a temporary injunction restraining respondent No. 1 from enforcing the redemption decree, dated the 9th December 1918.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhny, for Diwan Ram Lal, for the Petitioner.

Diwan Mehr Chand, for Shankar Das, Respondent.

ORDER.—I have heard lengthy arguments on behalf of the respective parties.

The matter appears to be a hotly contested one. The facts are somewhat peculiar and may be stated as follows. One Karim Bakbsh was the owner of two plots described A and B in the order of my brother, Broadway, J., dated the 27th May 1920. mortgage with possession was effected in respect of these two plots in favour of Allah Din. It is admitted that under one of the clauses of the mortgage Allah Din was given the power to construct a house on the mortgaged land. He constructed a building on plot B. Karim Bakhsh's sons then sold the plots to Shankar Das, vendee. Allah Din thereupon instituted a suit for pre emption elaiming a preferential right of pre emption on various grounds, one of them was that, being the owner of a build. ing standing on the plot B, he was entitled to pre-empt under elause "sscondly" of section 16 of the Pre-emption Act. That suit was decreed by the First Court. In appeal the decree for pre emption was set aside on the ground that a preferential right of pre emption had not been established by Allah Din. Mr. Petman, who appeared on behalf of Allah Din in the lower Appellate Coart, stated on behalf of the plaintiff that his elient based his right of pre-emption on section 16, " secondly," Pre-emption Act. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court had, therefore, to decide this question. He eame to the conclasion that, in order to be the owner of a building, one ought to be the owner of the site as well. The learned Judge. however, stated in his judgment that he was not quite sertain of the soundness of this proposition, I am not, however, concerned with the decision of this question at this stage at all. It will be for the learned Judges of the Division Bench before whom the appeal will eventually come up for hearing to decide this point. I have simply to decide whether this is a proper case where an injunction prayed for should be granted.

Putting aside other grounds which may be urged, there is an outstanding ground that the very fate of the appeal before this Court depends upon the existence of the building. If Shankar Das is allowed to pull down the building before the appeal comes up for hearing, it will afford a ground to him to argue that the ground for pre emption has been out from under the feet of the preemptor, A Court of Justice cannot allow

MANICE CHAND &. CORPORATION OF CALCUITA.

Moreover, a Court of Equity has to balance the convenience and inconvenience of both sides. When I take the question of convenience into my consideration, I can come to no other conclusion than this that Shankar Das cannot lose much by waiting until the decision of the pre-emption appeal in this Court. If the appeal succeeds and the preferential right of pre-emption of the plaintif is recognized, irreparable loss would have been done to him before-hand, if I allowed the building to be pulled down.

I accordingly make the Rule absolute and grant the injunction prayed for, but make no order as to costs.

Counsel for the parties request that an early date for the hearing of the appeal may be fixed. I order that the papers be laid before the Hon'ble the Chief Justice for orders.

THE CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA AND THE CALCUTTA IMPROVE-MENT TRUST.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 6 (3)—Calcutta Improvement Act (V of 1911)—Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1899), ss. 20, 357, 556—Evidence Act 11 of 1872), s. 4—Proceedings before Land Acquisition Officer—High Court, power of, to inquire—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 45 (e).

An application was made under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act by the owner of certain premises situated in Calcutta and about to be acquired by Government for the widening of a street under the scheme of the Calcutta Improvement Trust on the ground that there was no sanctioned project for the widening of the street near which the premises were on the part of the Trust nor was any sanction obtained by the Calcutta Corporation which was acquiring the land at the cost of the Trust for any project in connection with that street, It was urged on behalf of the Corporation that under section 357 of the Calcutta Municipal Act the Chairman with the approval of the Corporation could acquire the land, that the procedure under section 45, Specific Relief Act, was not applicable and that under section 6 (3) of the Land Acquisition Act. The declaration was conclusive evidence that the land was needed for

Held, that though a notification issued under section 6 of the Land Acquisition Act was conclusive so far as section 4 of the Evidence Act was concerned, yet the High Court was entitled to inquire into the validity of the steps which led up to that declaration and into the legality and otherwise of the acts of the Calcutta Corporation and of the Improvement Trust. [p. £01, col. 2: p. 602, col. 1.]

Held, also, that it was not the policy of the Calcutta Municipal Act that the special powers given to the Corporation for acquiring land for certain purposes named in the Act were to be used to enable another body to acquire land through the medium of the Corporation, however estimable the purpose and that the powers of acquisition of land under the Act were limited to cases in which the Corporation itself intended to widen a street or effect an improvement. [p. 602, cols. 1 & 2]

The Legislature when, under the Calcutta Improvement Trust Act, it conferred powers of acquisition of land with certain well-defined safeguards, did not intend that the Trust should abrogate those safeguards and acquire land through the medium of the Corporation of Calcutta for the purpose of street widening and street improvements. [p. 603, col. 2.]

provement Trust.

JUDGMENT.—On the 6th January last I granted a Rule at the instance of Maniek Chand Mahata calling on the Calcutta Corporation and the Calcutta Improvement Trust to show sause why they should not be restrained from acquiring or taking any further steps to acquire the premises No. 38, Banctolla Street, in this City, the property of Manick Chand, and the Rule now somes before me for hearing. Manick Chand purchased the premises now in question in June 1919 for a sum of Rs. 72,000, so he stated, and on the 25th February 1920, he obtained the sanction of the Corporation to the erection of a new building on the site ontside the Municipal alignment of Banstolla Street, He states that he has ercoted on the site, in accordance with the canctioned plan, a rew building at a ecet of over Ro. 70,000, and that the market value of the premises is Rs. 2,50,000. On the 13th November 1920, te ressived notice from the Land Acquisition Collector of Calcutta that the premises were about to be acquired by Government for the widening of Banetolla Street,

MANICE CHAND U. CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

It appears that, on the 7th April 1920, a resolution was passed by the Corporation in the following terms: -

That the proposal to acquire premises No. 38, Banstolla Street (falling within the Barabazar alignment) under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Ast at the east of "the Trust be sanctioned."

The Trust is the Improvement Trust as would appear from the proseedings of the Corporation wherein the followingappears:-

Aequisition of 38, Banstolle Street. Committee were asked to consider the question of acquisition of premises No. 35, Banstolla Street falling within the Barabazar alignment of the Improvement Trust.

Sanction has been accorded to the construction of a new three-storied building at No. 38, Banstolla Street, which falls entirely within the Improvement Trust's 60 feet north and south alignment in the Barabszar not yet sanstioned by Government. The Trust propose that the property be acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, the cost being borne by them. The estimated cost of acquisition is Rs. 59,30C.

Resolved: That the proposal to asquire premises No. 38, Banstolla Street (falling within the Barabazar alignment) under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act at the cost of the Trust be resommended for sane.

Maniek Chand alleges, and it is not denied, that the Improvement Trust have not obtained or even applied for sanstion to any scheme affecting Baustolla Street and that the Board of Trustces of the Trust have not passed any sebeme for widening that street, and that the Corporation have obtained no sanction from the Local Government for any project in connection with Bunstolla Street.

The Calcutta Gasette of the 25th August 1920 contains the following Deslaration No. 7087 L. A., dated the 20th August

"Whereas it appears to the Governor in Council that land is required to be taken by Government at the expense of the Corporation of Calcutta for a public purpose, vis., for widening Baustolla Street at. No. 33 in the Town of Calcutta, it is hereby declared that for the above purpose a piece of land measuring, more or less, '1415 of an aere bounded on the north by premises No. 37 and 39. Banstolla Street, east by premises No. 37, Banstolla Street, south by Banstolla Street, west by public passage, is required within the aforesaid Town of Calcutta. This declaration is made, under the provisions of scotion 6 of Act I of 1894, to all whom it may concern,"

It is signed by the Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

An affidavit was filed by the Deputy Surveyor of the Corporation on their behalf in which he states (paragraph 6) that the Board of Trustees have in contemplation a scheme for a proposed public street under section 63 of the Calcutta Improvement Act affecting 33, Banstolla Street, and that they requested the Corporation to take steps to acquire those premises to keep down the expense of acquiring the same later on, and that, accordingly, the resolution of the Corporation was passed and it was arranged with the Board of Trustees that the Board should pay the cost of acquisition to the Corporation, which has been done.

The Advocate-General on behalf of the Corporation contended that the Rule should not be made absolute on three main grounds: (i) That under section 357 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899, the Chairman, with the approval of the Corporation, may asquire any land and the building thereon for widening, extending or otherwise improving any public street and that, under section 555 of the same Act, the Corporation may acquire any land and buildings needed for earrying out any of the purposes the Act, and that the provisions of these sections are not necessarily confined to eases where the Corporation is going itself to do the widening and that, in any ease, the street, when widened, would be handed over to the Corporation. The second ground urged against making the Bule absolute was that the procedure under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act was not applicable having regard to sub-sections (o) and (e), it being suggested that Maniek Uhand had another spesific and adequate legal remedy, namely, by suit, and that the remedy was not complete, as the matter was now in the hands of the Land Asquisition Collector and the Local Government who sould not be restrained under Motion 45. Thirdly, it was orged that under section 6 (8)

ration of the 20th August last was conclusive evidence that the land was needed for a public purpose, and that under section 48 of the Act the Government alone could withdraw from the Land Acquisition proceedings. On behalf of the Improvement Trust, Mr. Langford James relied, in addition to the above, on section 52 of the Land Acquisition Act and on the meaning given to the word "conclusive" in section 4 of the Indian Evidence Act.

I can dispose of Mr. Langford James' arguments very shortly. Section 52 of the Land Acquisition Act clearly application, as these are not proceedings commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of that Act whatever the indirect effect may be of any order which I may make. And as regards section 4 of the Evidence Act and section 6 (3) of the Land Acquisition Act the fact that the declaration may be conclusive as to the land being needed for a public purpose does not, I think, in any way debar me from enquiring into the validity of the steps which led up to that declaration.

On behalf of Maniek Chand, I was referred to section 20 of the Municipal Act and the necessity of the sanction of the Local Government (which it is not enggested has been obtained) having regard to the fact that the cost of acquisition, it is said, must exceed one lac of rupees.

I now some to the three points urged by the Advocate General. With regard to the first point, I am inclined to think that section 3.7 (1) of the Calentta Municipal Act does not assist the Corporation as the land is outside the street alignment. Sub-section (2), again, cannot be called in aid on their behalf as no sanction of the Local Government has been obtained. Section 556, again, does not help them having regard to the fact that, under the provisions of section 558, it is only on payment of the compensation moneys by the Corporation out of Municipal funds in the Corporation.

But, on broad grounds, I do not think that it was ever the policy of the Calcutta Municipal Act that the special powers that the land or buildings acquired vest

given to the Corporation for acquiring land for certain purposes named in the Act were to be used to enable another body to acquire land through the medium of the Corporation, however estimable the purpose. If this were so, the Corporation could use its power under Chapter XXV of the Act to acquire land for a private Corporation minded to erest for profit, sanitary dwellings for the poorer classes, or minded to improve Calentta by removing slum areas and erecting dwelling houses on the area cleared. This, I do not gather from the Act, was the intention of the Legislature, and I think the powers of acquisition of land under the Act are limited to eases in which the Corporation itself is going to widen a street or effect an improvement. Again, I do not think that the Legislature, when, under the Calcutta Improvement Trust Ast, it conferred powers of acquisition of land with well-defined safeguards, ever eertain intended that the Trust should abrogate those safeguards and acquire land in this manner through the medium of the Corpora. tion for the purpose of street widening and street improvements.

It remains to deal with the second and third points raised on behalf of the res-

With regard to the second point, I think "specific and adequate remedy" in subsection (d) of section 45 of the Specific Relief Ast refers not to a general right of suit which must, unless expressly barred, always exist, but to some spesific remedy expressly given by a particular Act. Again, with regard to sub section (e), am I to assume that the Local Government and the Land Acquisition Authorities will ignore any injunction which I may grant and continue the acquisition proceedings? It will be sufficient, I think, in this connection to assume that they will stay their hands in view of my desision and not be parties to what I hold to be illegal and ultra vires action on the part of the Calentta Corporation and the Improvement Trust. As to this see, generally, Rex v. Speyer (1) and the statement by Lord Reading, C. J., on page 610: "This is the King's Court:

we sit here to administer justice and to interpret the law of the realm in the King's name. It is respectful and proper to assume that once the law is declared by a competent judicial authority it will be followed by the Crown." A statement which I venture to think is as apposite here in India as in the United Kingdom.

With regard to the third point, I have already expressed my opinion and I see nothing in section 6 (3) of the Land Acquisition Act to prevent me inquiring into the legality and otherwise of the acts of the Calentta Corporation and of the Improvement Trust. I make the Rule absolute with costs against the Corporation and the Trust.

Landlord and tenant-Demolition of structures-Estoppel, equitable-Acquiescence-Decree, form of.

Where, in a suit for demolition of structures erected by a tenant, acquiescence on the part of the landlord is pleaded, it is not enough for the tenant to show that the plaintiff landlord stood aside and allowed the structures to be erected, for one of the essential elements of equitable estoppel is that the person who sets up that estoppel must have acted in good faith and must have been under the belief that he had a right to put up the buildings, which it is not possible for a tenant to put forward. [p. 603, col. 2.]

Where a Zemindar brings a suit for demolition of structures erected 12 years before the suit, the decree should only declare the plaintiff as proprietor of the site but should not order demolition of the structures. [p. 604, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Moradabad, dated the 29th April 1920,

Mr. A. Sanyal, for the Appellant. Mr. 8. O. Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in both these cases is Musammat Dulari Kunwar, who is a Zeminder in the village Ganaura. She brought two suits against certain tenant of this village alleging that about a year ora year and a half before the suits were brought, these persons had eneroached on her land in the village by putting up buildings. In short, ber ease was that these defendants occupied houses in the village and that they had enlarged them by eneroach. ing upon land which belonged Musammat Dalari Kunwar elaimed that, in the eircumstances, she was entitled to a deeree directing the defendants to demolish these new structures.

Both the Courts below have dismissed the plaintiff's suits. They have not believed the evidence which she put forward for the purpose of showing that the buildings, demolition of which was sought, had been erected shortly before the suits were filed.

The Courts also appear to have decided both eases on the consideration that Musammat Dulari had stood by and acquiesced in the construction of these buildings.

It has been argued before me that the judgments of the Courts below are erroneous, inasmuch as the learned District Judge has taken a wrong view of the law relating to acquiescence.

It is not enough in eases like these for the defendants to show that the plaintiff landlord stood aside and allowed the struetures to be erested. One of the essential elements of equitable estoppel is that the person who sets up that estoppel must have asted in good faith and must have been under the belief that he had a right to put up the buildings. In cases like the present, where there can be no doubt that the plaintiff is the Zemindar of the village and the defendants are tenants, it cannot, I think be said that the defendants fulfil the condition above required. It would not be possible for a tenant to put forward the plea that he erested buildings on land belonging to his Zemindar in the belief that the land was his own and that he had a right to erest buildings thereon. If the decision of these eases rested solely upon the ground of equitable estoppel the learned District Judge could not, I think, be supported. However, I have gone into the evidence in the case and the situation appears to me to be as follows:—Both the Courts below have definitely found that the statements of the plaintiff's witnesses to the effect that the buildings complained of were erected a year or a year and a half before the suits were brought, are untrue.

On the other hand, there is a considerable volume of evidence on behalf of the defend. ants which goes to show that, as a matter of fact, these buildings, which the plaintiff now wants to have pulled down, have been in existence for a very long time, and certainly for more than 12 years. It is true that the Courts below have not pronounced any regarding the opinion reliability defendants' evidence. It seems to me, however, after baving it all read to me, that there is no good reason for disearding it or for supposing that these witnesses are wilfully telling a false story.

I must take it, therefore, that the defend. ants' evidence does establish that these buildings in dispute have been in existeres for a long period, and sertainly for over 12 years. In those circumstances, the plaintiff, aithough she is the proprietor of the sites on which the houses are built, ought not now to be given a deeree for the removal of the houses. It is, I think, sufficient, in the eirenmetances, to declare that the plaintiff is entitled to be regarded still as the proprietor of the sites on which these houses stand but that she certainly is not entitled to the relief which she elaimed, namely, that the houses should be demolished. In this state of things, the order is, that the appeals stand dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher seele.

BECHARAM LAHIRI-DEFENDANT-RESPONDENT.

Defamation, suit for, against Pleader - Pleader acting in professional discharge of his duty.

While commenting on certain documents in the course of his argument in a suit for rent, the defence Pleader used the expression that the plaintiff,—'a lady) had forged the documents by means of fraud ("Juschuri Kariya Kagaj Pata Jal Kariyache") In a suit for defamation against the Pleader:

Held, that the Pleader was not liable for damages for defamation inasmuch as what he did was in the professional discharge of his duty and in good faith for the protection of the interest of his client, and his remarks were not irrelevant but pertinent to the enquiry which was being made before the Judge and had a direct bearing on the case. [p. 606, col. 2]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Nadia, dated the 29th of May 1919.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, Mritunjoy Chatterjee and Amuly 1 Charan Bhattachar ee, for the Appellant.

Mr.B. Chalrabarty, (with him Babus Bertin Behari Ghose, Amarendra Nath Bose and Jatindra Mohun Choudhury), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Woodress, J.—This is a suit for defamation against a Pleader. The defamation is alleged to have taken place during the course of the defence to an action brought for rent. It is alleged in the plaint that the plaintiff, who is a lady, was described as a cheat. It is alleged the defendant had said that that she had forged papers fraudulently, that she was a rogue, etc., and that the defendant "expressed wrath and contempt towards the plaintiff by making various accusations against her."

In the defence to the suit the defendant stated that these allegations were not true and that he merely commented upon certain Exhibite, Nos. P and Q, after reading them SHIVA KUMABI DEVI V. BACHABAM LAHIBI.

and that he did not use the expressions alleged by the plaintiff. Farther, the defendant says that he never used the expressions "Badmash," etc. The case in which the defamation is said to have occurred was tried in the Court of the Munsif who made a note at the time of the incident and stated in his evidence that he remembered one expression only, namely, that "(she) forged dosuments by means of fraud." This is also recorded in order 51 of the order sheet on the 8th May 1917. The learned Subordinate Judge, who has tried and dismissed this suit, has accepted the Munsit's evidence and held that the defendant used the expression Juochuri Kariya Kagaj Patra Jal Kariyache," The Subordinate Judge in his judgment says that: "It seems to me probable that he added to the aforesaid expression words, importing—it has been held so in the previous rent suit." He further cays that he cannot hold upon the evidence that he (the defendant) need the expression "Juashor" or "Badmash." Accepting the Judge's finding as to that, the question is, whether the defendant is liable for defamation. If this be a question of absolute privilege, the answer would be in the negative. If the question is one of qualified privilege, then it has to be shown that the statement was made pertinently and so forth. There is no need in the present care to go into the question of law bearing upon the general question of liability of Counsel and Vakils in respect of defamatory statements made by them in the scurse of proceedings in which they were professionally engaged having regard to firding on the facts. Upon the question of melies it is to be observed that the plaintiff herself states in her evidence that there was no enmity between her and the defendant before the institution of the suit. And it has not been sontended by the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant that there was any enmity or any malice in fact. The malice alleged is such as, (it is said), should be inferred from the fact that the statement was not justifiable. The eireumstances up to the statements complained of are these: plaintiff's husband had previously brought a suit for rent. In the judgment of that suit, the learned Munsif who tried the suit made the following observations :-"As to the Collection Papers filed on behalf of the plaintiff, they seem to have been manufactured for the purposes of the present suit, for they were produced long after the written statement had been put in." After that suit by the plaintiff's husband, the plaintiff hereelf filed another suit for rent as her bushand had done before her, and relied upon the Collection Papers which were produced on her behalf. Her suit was also dismissed and in the course of that suit, the Munsif who tried the suit, in his judgment observed, with reference to enhancement, that, "the enhancement must have been surreptitionaly made and tenants refused to pay further rent." The Muneif also says that : "The landlord attempted on two occasions to realise a larger amount by suit but could not get mcre than Rs. 36."

In the suit in respect of which this claim for damages arose, the learned Vakil for the defence referred to the previous proceedings in the suit brought by the precent plaintiff's husband and in doing so, be made the remark which the learned Subordinate Judge has stated in his judgment and which I have quoted.

It is contended on behalf of the respond. ent that it has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge that the remarks, such as he has found them to be, were justifiable on the part of the defendant as Pleader who was making legitimate comments on the ease. As I have already cb. served, the Subordinate Judge has found that it is not proved that the Pleader used the words "Jusehor" or "Badmash." As to the other statement which is found by the Judge to have been used, it seems to me that it does not by itself necessarily imply that any charge was made against the plaintiff of having herself personally and knowingly instituted a false suit. The comment made was, that the suit by the plaintiff war, in fact, false; and reliance was placed on the earlier suit by the plaintiff's husband for the purposes of establishing that fact. This, as I have said, is not necessarily a personal charge against the lady in question, who, so far as we can see from the evidence on the record, may have had nothing personally to do with the suit, beyond the fact that she was, the plaintiff in it. Probably the suit was, as is generally done in such cases, looked MAUNG BYA U. MAUNG KYI NYO.

after by officers of the plaintiff, one of whom was named Chandra Sanyal whom the Subordinate Judge has found to have had a grievance against the present defend. ant. The Subordinate Judge says: "The present suit is the outcome of malice that the plaintiff's man, Sanyal, bore against the defendant," In any case I am of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge has come to a right conclusion in holding that what the defendant did was in the professional discharge of his duty and in good faith for the protection of the interest of his elient, and that his remarks were not irrelevant but pertinent to the enquiry which was being made before the Judge and had a direct bearing on the case. I am of opinion, therefore, that the learned Subordinate Judge's decision in holding that it has not been shown that the defendant is liable for damages should be affirmed.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with

MAUNG KYI NYO AND OTHERS-RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110, scope of—Privy Council Appeal-Subject-matter of suit, value of, determination of—Principle governing.

In a suit for damages for erection of a bund and the alleged consequent inundation of the plaintiff's paddy field valued at above Rs.10,000, the First Court gave a decree for less than Rs. 10,000 which was set aside on appeal. On an application to appeal to the Privy Council it was objected that this was merely a suit for damages and that, in dealing with applications for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, the Court could not go beyond the amount of damages actually decreed by the Court of first instance:

Held, (1) that in granting leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, the correct principle to consider the subject-matter of the appeal was to look at the judgment, as it affected the interests of the parties, who were prejudiced by it, and who sought to relieve themselves from it by an appeal; [p. 607, col. 1.]

(2) that the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance exceeded Rs. 10,000 and the decree or final order involved indirectly a question respecting property worth more than that sum, and that, therefore, the applicant was entitled to the leave, [p 607, col. 1.]

Per Robinson, C. J.—The second paragraph of section 110 of the Civil Procedue Code is intended to deal with property other than that forming part of the actual subject-matter in dispute and which would be affected by the final decree or order. If the decree affects the petitioner's rights in or to such other property, that may be taken into consideration in estimating the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council. [p. 607, col. 2.]

Mr. Higinbotham, for the Appellants.

Mr. Leach, for the Respondents, JUDGMENT.

DUCKWORTH, J .- The value of the suit exseeded Rs. 10,000. By the First Court's deeree a sum of Rs. 8,821-8-0 was decreed by way of damages for the tort complained of, vis., the erection of the bund, and the alleged consequent inundation of plaintiffs' paddy-fields about 12 to 2 miles away. whereby some 13,500 baskets of paddy were lost to them. On appeal, the Bench of this Court dismissed the suit, setting aside the decree of the District Court, thereby, in effect, holding that defendant was entitled to maintain the bund, and thereby preventing the plaintiffs from suing again for its removal, and forcing them to asquiesce for the future in the alleged extensive damage to their fields. Now, these fields are obviously worth more than Rs. 10,000 and so would any portion thereof be, which sould yield over 13,500 baskets of paddy in one year, if ordinary prices of land and yield per aere, prevailed.

It is manifest, therefore, that section 110, Civil Procedure Code, will permit the appellants respondents to appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council. The value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was worth over Rs. 10,000 and the decree or final order appears to involve indirectly a question respecting property worth over Rs. 10,000.

Further, the District Court and the Bench of this Court differed on the facts of the case, and as to the law applicable, the latter involving questions of substantial difficulty.

MAUNG BYA C. MAUNG KYI ATO.

It was argued that this was merely a suit for damages, and that, in dealing with applications for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, this Court sould not go beyoud the amount of damages actually decreed by the Court of first instance more especially as there bad been no prayer for an injunction restraining defendants from closing the bund. The cases of De(1)Silva and De Silva ٧. Bhaunath Gir v. Bihari Lal (2) which Jenkin's followed Sir Lawrense sion in the Bombay case, were relied on, but they relate to a state of affairs which is entirely different from that in question here, and seem to me not to apply. In Macfarlane v. Leclaire (3) (an appea Canada)-their Lordships laid from down that the correct principle in such a case as this was to look at the judgment, as it affects the interests of the parties, who are prejudiced by it, and who seek to relieve themselves from it by appeal. This principle has been adopted in India.

In the ease of Lala Bhugwat Sahay v. Rai Pashupati Nath Bose (4) Maelean, O. J., and Mookerjee, J., dealt with a case where it had to be decided whether the valuation for purposes of the appeal depended upon the value of plaintiffs' share in an estate or the value of the whole estate. They decided that the latter value was in that ease the true eriterion. They followed the unreported case of Biraj Mohini Dasi v. Ohintamoni Dasi, in which Maelean, O. J., and Banerjee, J., had some to the same conelusion. In my opinion these decisions were sorrest. Further, I consider that the case of Sri Kishan Lal v. Kashmiro (5), was rightly decided. There Sir Henry Richards, C. J., and Banerjee, J., dealt with the case of an award by which all the property, including the mortgage rights, was divided amongst defendant Kashmiro, the widow of the deseased, and certain other persons, including the plaintiff. The lady obtained thereunder an eight-anna share in the mortgage rights. while plaintiff was given four annas. The lady alone filed a suit on the mortgage and recovered the money. The plaintiff thereupon brought the suit in question to recover his four anna share in the mortgage The suit was valued at over money, Rs. 10,000. The First Court gave plaintiff a decree for Rs. 8,800. On appeal the High Court held that the award was fraudulent and collusive, and dismissed the suit. The learned Judges held, in the matter of the application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, that the provisions of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, applied, inasmuch as the award, if the High Court's deeree became final, would be invalid as regards property other than the property in dispute in the suit-the said award admittedly relating to property far exceeding Rs.10,000 in value.

Applying this decision to the present case. I think that there is no doubt that section 110, Civil Procedure Code, is applicable, and that a certificate should issue.

It will issue accordingly. Respondents will pay appellants, costs three gold mohurs.

Robinson, C. J.—I am of the same opinion. The value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was over Rs. 10,000. In addition to this, the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council must be the same sum or upwards or the decree must involve directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value. The matter to be decided now is, whether this Court's decree involves indirectly some question to or respecting property of like amount or value.

The second paragraph of section 110, in my opinion, is intended to deal with property other than that forming part of the actual subject matter in dispute and which would be affected by the final decree or order. If the decree affects the petitioner's rights in or to such other property, that may be taken into consideration in estimating the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council. The whole question is very fully argued in Subray

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 90—Execution of decree for costs by attachment of mortgage-decree obtained by judgment-debtor and by sale of mortgaged property, validity of—Sale, if absolutely void.

A mortgage suit brought by A. against B. and C. was dismissed with costs so far as B. was concerned and decreed against C. B. in execution of his decree for costs attached the mortgage-decree of A. against C. and the decree for costs was satisfied with the sale-proceeds of some of the mortgaged properties. In an application by C. under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the sale set aside:

Held, that the sale was not absolutely void, but was certainly irregular and could be set aside if proper proceedings were taken for the purpose, and that the judgment-debtor could waive the irregularity and the sale could not be treated as a nullity. [p. 609, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Tipperab, dated the 20th of January 1919, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court of that district, dated the 23rd of August 1918.

Dr. Sarat Oh. Basak and Babu Chandra S. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in execution of a decree.

It appears that certain persons referred to as the "Banikyas" brought a suit ppon a mortgage against the appellants before us and certain other persons. Their suit against the appellants was dismissed with costs, but they obtained a decree upon a mortgage against other persons. The appel. lants in execution of their decree for costs against the "Banikyas" attached the mort. gage deeree they had obtained against the other persons, got themselves substituted as attaching decree-holders and proceeded to execute the decree. The mcrtgage-decree was for about Rs. 5,000. The appellants, bowever, executed their decree for realising only the amount of costs due to them vis, Rs. 259, and a share of certain property out of the mortgaged properties was sold and the deeree for costs was satisfied with the saleproceeds.

The judgment debtors applied to have the sale set aside under Order XXI, rule 92 and rection 47. Civil Procedure Code, one of the grounds alleged being that the decree could not be executed only for the amount of costs.

The Court of first instance dismissed the application treating it as one under Order XXI, role 20. On appeal the learned Judge observed that there was "no machinery" for making a declaration that the sale was illegal under the provisions of section 47. On second appeal to this Court, the learned Judges (Wcodroffe and Huda, JJ.,) were of opinion that the case had been fought out in the First Court as if it were a essa under Order XXI, rule 90. So far as the application under section 47 was concerned, the learned Judges expressed the opinion that their judgment would not debar the appellants from proceeding in the matter under section 47 if they had any rights under that section. Thereupon they made the present application under section 47.

The Courts below have held that the sale was void and accordingly set it aside under

not think that the sale was We do absolutely void. It was certainly irregular and sould be set aside if proper proceedings were taken for the purpose. The judgmentdebtors could waive the irregularity and we do not think, therefore, that the sale can be treated as a nullity. Upon a consideration of the orders of this Court, however, we think that the question whether the applicant is entitled to have the sale set aside under ssetion 47, Civil Procedure Code, was left open by this Court, and the present application seems to have been made in pursuance of that order. The application was made within three years of the date of the sale and, therefore, was not time-barred.

It has, however, been contended on behalf of the appellant that the application was made after the confirmation of the sale and that, unless the respondents can show that they had no notice of the sale or the confirmation thereof by reason of fraud or otherwise, they are precluded by the order confirming the sale from questioning the validity thereof under section 47.

This part of the case has not been gone into by the lower Appellate Court.

Our attention has been drawn by the learned Pleader for the appellant to the fact that the sale was attacked also on the ground that the decree-holders put up a share of one of the properties to sale. It is said that under the decree the appellants were entitled to sell the property which was not ensumbered, and that the share in dispute which was put up to sale was not ensumbered. The Pleader for the respondent says that that is not so. This question, therefore, will also have to be gone into by the lower Appellate Court.

We accordingly set saids the order of the lower Appellate Court and send the case back to that Court in order that the above questions may be gons into and the appeal disposed of assording to law. The Court below may take further evidence, if necessary.

Burma Laws Act (XIII of 1898) - Hindu - Kalai, whether Hindu,

If a twice-born Hindu migrates across the sea to Burma and marries a Burmese woman, his descendants, who are born and have always lived in Burma and who have inter-married with its people, form a community known as kalais, and as the usages and religion of this community are very divergent from Hinduism, the community cannot be regarded as Hindu within the meaning of the expression as used in the Burma Laws Act of 1898. Consolidated appeals from judgments and decrees of the Chief Court of Lower Burms (dated September 7, 1916 and reported as 37 Ind. Cas. 780; August 20, 1917; November 7, 1917), modifying decrees of that Court in its Original Civil Jurisdiction.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOURT HALDANE .- These are consolidated appeals from the judgments of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, which varied judgments of that Court on its original side. The real question to be determined is, whether one Maung Ohn Ghine, who died on the 10th June 1911, and who was an opulent and prominent mershant in Rangoon, was a Hindu within the meaning of section 13 of the Burma Laws 'Ast, 1898. If he was, it is not in controversy that Hindu Law so governed the succession to his estates, that a voluntary settlement made by him of the 5th May 1908 could not be fully operative. Section 13 of the Act referred to is in these terms :-

"(1) Where in any suit or other proceeding in Burma it is necessary for the Court to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or easte, or any religious usage or institution, (a) the Buddhist Law in eases where the parties are Buddhists, (b) the

MA VAIT O. MAUEG CHIT MAUNG.

Muhammadan Law in cases where the parties are Muhammadans, and (c) the Hindu Law in cases where the parties are Hindus, shall form the rule of decision except in so far as such law has, by enactment, been altered or abolished, or is opposed to any custom having the force of law.

"(2) Subject to the provisions of subsection (1) and of any other enactment for the time being in force, all questions arising in civil cases instituted in the Courts of Rangoon shall be dealt with and determined according to the law for the time being administered by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

"(3) In cases not provided for by subsection (1) or sub-section (2) or by any other enactment for the time being in force, the decision shall be according to justice, equity and good conscience."

The concolidated appeals arise out of two suits. In one of these a declaration was sought that the settlement referred to was wholly inoperative, and, alternatively, for a declaration that the dispositions in favour of persons unborn at the date of the settlement were void. The other suit was for adminis. tration of the estate under the direction of the Court. The Judge of first instance held that Maung Ohn Ghine was not a Hindu or a Buddhist within the meaning of the Ac', and it was not suggested that he was a Muham. madan. He, therefore, held that the law which applied was that provided by the Indian Succession Act of 1865, according to which, excepting in the case of succession to some one belonging to one of these three elasses, there are laid down provisions equivalent to rules of justice, equity and good conscience, which permitted the validity of the settlement of the 5th May, 1°C8 Under this, Maung Ohr Ghire conveyed property, reserving his life interest in it, to trustees for his wife and shildren and their issue, some of whom might be unborn, as in the deed provided. If the learned Judge was right in thinking that the settler did not some within any one of the three specified classes, it is not disputed that this further conclusion was correct.

The answer to the question raised in these appeals, therefore, turns on the question of the status of Maung Ohn Ghine. If he was not a Hindu within the meaning of the two Acts eited, in each of which the term Hindu is used in the same sense, this decision of the learned Judge was right. But the Chief Court on appeal held him to be a Hindu.

In order to deside which of the views of his status was right, it is necessary to turn to the story of Maung Ohn Ghine's life. He was a merchant in Rangoon who died during a visit to England. Among other positions, he held that of a Municipal Commissioner and Magistrate in Rangoon. It is clear that he was a Kalai, which means that he was the descendant of a Hindu who had married a Barmese woman. His parents also were Kalais, and he himself married a Kalai. His paternal grandfather was apparently a Hindu who had migrated from Madras to Burms and had married a Burmese. His son was, therefore, a Kalai, and the latter married a Kalai. Maung Ohn Ghine was, therefore, a Kalai, and he lived in Burma all his life, excepting when absent on short visits. Twomey, J., when delivering his judgment in the Court of appeal, gave a description of Maung Ohn Ghine's eareer, which is instructive : -

"In matters of daily life, apart from his religion, Ohn Gine was hardly distinguish. able from the Burmese community in general, and it appears that he was as a prominent member of the Barmese community that he was sent to England at the time of King Edward's Coronation. Great stress has been laid on the leading part taken by Ohn Grine in supporting various important Baddhist interests. In 1900 he wrote to the Governor of Madras urging that certain Buddhist relies lying in the Madras Museum should be made over to him to be placed in a shrine which he was preparing at Rangoor, and be referred in this letter to his Buddhist so. religionists. In a letter, dated the 18th February 1901, to the Colonial Ceylon, he joined with several others in advocating the cause of the Burmese Buddhist pilgrims to the Buddhist temple of the Sacred Tooth Relie at Kandy, and the writers of this letter describe themselves as Burmese pilgrims now on a visit to Ceylon.' As one of the community of the Buddha Gaya Missionary Society he also championed the cause of the Burmese Buddhists against the Mohunt of a Hindu temple at Gaya with reference to a certain Zayat erected there by King Mindon for the use of the Burmese pilgrims. He was one of the residents of Rangoon who presented MA YAIT U. MAUNG CHIT MAUNG.

an address on behalf of the Buddhist Community to the Vicercy, Lord Curzon, on his visit to Rangcon in 1901."

The learned Jadge goes on to make some observations on this evidence : -

"At first sight, there incidents in his career appear to support the contention that Ohn Ghine was as much a Buddhist as a Hindu. To understand their real meaning it is necessary to look at Ohn Ghine's career and aspirations as a whole. He was a man of ambition who had amassed a considerable fortune by his business capacity and industry. Sprung from an obscura class, he had little prospect of taking a leading place so long as be was identified merely with the Kalais. Caste prejudices kept Indian Hindus aloof from him and would prevent him from any kind of leadership among the Hindus general. ly. Bat by throwing in his lot with the tolerant Barmese, who formed the balk of the population of the province, he sould hope to attain some distinction. He was as much Barmese as Indian by blood, and in dress, language and manner of life he was more Barmese than Indian. He admired the Baddhiet doetrices and found much that was attractive in Buddhist religious practices. Material interests chimed with his inclinations and Ohn Ghine stood forth as a representative of the Barmese. He received more than one mark of distinction from Government, and probably hoped for more. In these circumstances, no special significance ean be attached to his posing as a member of the Burmese Buddhist Community, by assoelating with which he had achieved most of his success in life. His readiness to figure as a co-religionist of Baddhists in 1901 may be compared with his attitude of conservative Hinduism in Ma Na's sase five years later. On each occasion there was exaggeration with a purpose, and neither incident affords a safe guide to Ohn Ghine's astual religious The evidence shows that he never renounced or repudiated his membership of the Kale Community, and in spite his liberality to Baddhist monks and his liking for Buddhist prayers and practices, he draw the line at having his sons shinbyued (that is, initiated as Buddhist novices). He continued his Hinda worship at the Kale Temple, and when he died it did not occur iscontace teirpetco sid evad ce glimat sid et assording to any rites except those of the Hindus, and his ashes were sent to Benares. The marriage of his son, Chit Maung, with a Barmese girl, according to Burmese eastom in 1910, was no doubt a serious lapse from rectitude for a Hindu, but this incident can only be regarded as an example of the general laxity of the marriage customs of the Kale Community as compared with those of the recognised Hindu castes."

This description of Ohn Ghine's life their Lordships have but little occasion to question, excepting in the conclusions which the learned Judge draws about the religious status of the dead man. Before, however, proceeding to this it is desirable to supplement the narrative on sertain points. The ease of Ma Nu in 1906, to which reference is made by Twomey, J, was one in which Ohn Ghine was prosecuting a Barman for abdusting his daughter, and the question was whether she was abdusted or had merely eloped. Ohn Ghine, who objected to any suggestion of marriage, swore that he himself was a Hindu, in which case no marriage could properly have taken place. He had obviously a special motive for taking this course, and the incident comes to very little. As against it may be set the fact that ha sent his sons to a Baddhist Kyaung for instruction in the Baddhist faith, and that to one of his sons who was in England he despatched a card of admonition enjoining him to "daily think of the Buddha." This was in August 1907. As for the sending of Ohn Gnine's ashes to Benares, this seems to have been permitted by his widow in consequence of some suggestion made to When Ohn Ghine's daughter, Mya, died in 1910, he appears not to have himself sent her ashes to the Ganges. They were only sent there after his death along with his own. No doubt, Ohn Ghine's body was cremated when it was brought to Rangoon But the eremation took England. place in a compound which was not an exclusively Hindu cemetery, and, although Hindu rites were observed, Baddhiet priests or ponguis were standing round the body and reseived offerings, while the burning was earried out by Burmans. It is true that Ohn Gaine had supported the Hindu temple in Phayre Street, Rangoon, and was a trustee of it. Bat this temple was built by subscrip. tions from Kalais who frequented it, and does not appear to have been one where strict Hinduism was observed. Moreover, he also supported and went to Buddhist Pagcdas and worshipped there regularly, observing the Buddhist Lents, and making gifts to the priests.

Their Lordships have examined the evidence relative to Ohn Ghine's religious life, and the conclusion to which they have come is that Robinson, J., the learned Judge who tried this case, was right in thinking that Ohn Ghine observed to a certain extent the rites and seremonies of the Hindu religion, but that he also observed and followed the Buddhist religion to a great extent and was far from being an orthodox Hindu. this should have been so appears to them to have been far from unnatural, considering the nature of the Kalai Community, of which he was a member. They think that the real question in the appeal is, whether the Kalais community are Hindus within the meaning of the expression as used in the Burma Laws Act of 1898, It is not necessary for their Lordships to express any opinion upon the construction which Ormond, J., put upon the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Abraham v. Abraham (1). Whatever might be the conclusion on that matter would not dispose of the present controversy. If Ohn Ghine had been born a Hindu, mere deviation from orthodoxy would not have been sufficient to deprive him of Hindu status. He might have continued to possess it had he become a member of the Brahmo Somaj, as was decided by this Board in Bhagwan Koer v. Jogendra Chandra Bose (2), and he would not have the less possessed the status if he had been, say, a Sikh or a Jain, or probably if he had even at times worshipped with Buddhists. But Ohn Ghine was not born Hindu unless the Kalai Community generally is Hindu, and this raises a question of much more difficulty than that which arises in the case of a sirgle individual to whom considerable latitude of action is extended before he is deemed to have deprived himself of the religion which gave him his law by anything that does not amount to elear renunciation of that religion. In the instance of a community, the question must always be whether there has been continuity of character. No doubt, there may develop gradually among a set of people who live and worship together, variations from the regular practices of those who are Hindus which, though considerable, ought not to be taken to be such as have destroyed continuity of relationship.

In the valuable judgment delivered in 1909 by Sankaran Nair, J., in Muthusami Mudaliar v. Masilamani (3), that learned Judge considers the criteria according to which new eastes which have been evolved among the descendants of Hindus are to be consider. ed as having retained the Hindu religion. He points out that the formation of new castes is a process which is constantly taking place. Usage has modified old principles and it governs in the seets which have adopted such usage. Contact with other religious may well have evolved seets which have disearded many characteristics of orthodox Hinduism, and have adopted ideas and rites which are popularly supposed to belong to other systems. Continuity may not in such eases have been destroyed; but there is a limit to such processes. Continuity may be so broken that the new seet is outside the original pale. The Hindu Law which the Courts administer rests on the Shaetras, which elaim Divine sanction and are followed by Brahmins generally. There may have been introduced neages which constitute a departure from the principles of the Shastras so great that the community which has adopted them must be taken to have lost the character of being one in which Hindu religion governs. In the case of a seet at a distance from Hindu centres, where the surroundings are Borman and Buddhist and the mode of life is different from that of the Hindu communities in India proper, popularly known as such, it is easier to determine it as being outside Hinduism than it is in the ease of an isolated individual who has merely lapsed into unorthodox practices. It is obvious that few influences can be more potent in produeing new communities of this ceparate kind than the combined operation of migration, inter marriage and new occupations. When these influences have operated for sufficiently long a different community, with its peculiar religion and usages, may well result and be so outside Hinduism in the proper meaning of the word. To the members of such a community the expression Hindu in the Indian Succession Act and the Burma Laws Act would not be applicable.

Act would not be applicable. Of the mode in which this principle is applied, the judgment of this Committee, delivered in 1903 by Sir Arthur Wilson in Bhogwan Koer v. Jogendra Chandra Bose (2), is a good illustration. There it was explained how Sikhe and Jains can properly be treated as Hindue, and how even entry into membership of the Brahmo Somaj does not necessarily destroy continuity with a religion which is so elastic in its scope as is Hinduism. It is plain that the application of any merely abstract principle may be insufficient to solve the problem in concrete cases. A method which takes account of historical as well as other considerations must be applied, and the subjectmatter must in each instance be looked at a whole. In the recent appeal of Abdurahim Ha i Ismail Mithu v. Halimabai (4), a case of migration of a sect from India to East Africa, their Lordships laid down that, where a Hindu family migrates one part of India to another, from prima facie they earry with them their personal law, and if they are alleged to have become subject to a new local custom, this new enstom must be affirmatively proved to have been adopted; but where such a family emigrate to another country, and, having earlier become themselves Muhammadans, settle among Muhammadans, the presumption that they have accepted the law of the people whom they have joined should be made. All that has to be shown is that they have so acted as to raise the inference that they have out themselves off from their old environment. It was observed that the analogy is that of a change of domicile on settling in a new country, rather than the analogy of a change of enstom on migration within India. The question is simply one of the proper inference to be drawn from eireumstaness.

If a twice born Hindu migrates across the sea to Barma and marries a Barmese woman that in itself may not necessarily deprive him of his Hindu status in the eye of the law. But if he has descendants who have been born and have always lived in Burma, and who have inter-married with its people, then, even though they may form a community of their own which inherits many traces of Hindu usage, if the usages and religion are of a character so divergent from Hinduism as those of this community are. the community cannot, in their Lordships' opinion, be regarded as Hindu. They think that the Kalais asquired a non-Hindu status of their own of this kind, and, further, that Maung Ohn Ghine had so distinctly identified himself with the Kalais that his status was determined by theirs.

They are, therefore, unable to draw the inferences made by the learned Judges of the Appellate Court. They think that the contention of Ma Yait is well founded, and that her appeal ought to succeed, while the cross-appeal of Maung Chit Maung must fail.

It follows that the decrees of the Appellate Court in the two suits should be set aside and the decrees of Robinson, J., restored, excepting in so far as that in the Appellate Court coats were given out of the estate. This part of the decrees may stand.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Maung Chit Maung must pay the costs of the appeals.

Where a question arises as to the existence or non-existence of a particular custom and the lower Appellate Court has acted upon illegal evidence or on evidence legally insufficient to establish an alleged custom, the question is one of law, and a High Court is entitled in second appeal to consider whether the finding is based on sufficient evidence.

But where the Court has not rejected admissible evidence, has applied its mind correctly as to what the essentials of a custom are, and at the end has found that it is not satisfied on the evidence produced that such a custom exists, there is no point of law which can be taken in second appeal. [p. 615, col. 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Azamgarb, dated the 16th July 1920.

Mr. U. S. Baipai, for the Appellant. Mr. P. L. Baneri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises has been instituted by a Zemindar in the Azamgarh District against certain riaya on the allegation that they have appropriated the wood of a tree which was standing upon land of which they were in occupation after the tree had fallen down. She ascerted that under a custom of the village, she, as Zemindar, was entitled to half the value of all fallen timber, and she instituted a suit for small damages and for an injunction prohibiting the defendants from questioning her rights in such matters in future.

The defendants admitted that they were riaya; they admitted that the tree stood upon lard of which they were in compation; they admitted that the tree had fallen down and that they had appropriated it but they denied the existence of any sustom entitling the plaintiff to half its value.

The Trial Court found that such a sustem did exist and decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court found that no such sustem existed. The Zemindar appeals here.

It has been laid down by a Full Bench of this Court in Ram Bilas v. Lal Bahadur (1) that where a question arises as to the existence or non-existence of a particular enstom, and the lower Appellate Court has acted upon illegal evidence or on evidence legally insufficient to establish an alleged enstom, the question is one of law, and the High Court is entitled in second appeal to consider whether the finding is based on sufficient evidence. It was further held by Beneh in Roo Girraj Singh v. Hargobind Sahai (2), that a High Court in second appeal has jurisdiction to consider the evidence given in support of an alleged custom and to determine whether or not that evidence is sufficient in point of law to establish the oustom set up. But it appears, on reading the judgment of the Bench in question, that the learned Judges did not intend to go beyond what was laid down in the Full Bench decision. It is to be noted that the view taken by the Fall Bench was that it is open in second appeal to go into the question of law as to whether the evidence which the lower Appellate Court found sufficient to establish a sustom was adequate for the purpose : but neither of those decisions laid down that where a lower Appellate Court found that the evidence was insufficient to establish a custom, a point of law arose in second appeal that it was in fact sufficient. And it would appear to me that where the lower Appellate Court, after examining the evidence legally and properly and not having rejected admissible evidence, finds that the evidence is not sufficient to establish a custom, ro question of law can arise. This view appears to be borne out by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Conneil in Muhammad Kamil v. Imtiae Fatima

"The judgment of the first Court in this case decided that the rights of the parties were governed by the Muhammadan Law, and not by family custom, as had been alleged, and this was affirmed on appeal. The existence of such a custom is a question of fact, and as to this question the Courts in India concurred in their judgment."

In a somewhat similar ease to the present, a Bench of this Court decided in Baru Mal v. Tansukh Rai (4) that where a lower Appellate Court refused to find upon an entry in a wajib-ul-arz and the evidence of two decrees that a custom of pre emption existed in a certain village, the finding that no custom

The question as to how far a decision that B given state of fasts does not or does binding enstom or usage, establish 8 is a question of fast or law was discuss. ed very thoroughly by Mookerjee, J., in the case of Kailas Chandra Dutta v. Padma Kishore Roy (5). The view taken by that supports my conclusion. learned Judge The question of the existence of an alleged eastom is generally a question of fact, but it is conseivable that the desision may involve an error of law so as to justify the interference of the High Court in second appeal. Undoubtedly, the High Court could consider whether irrelevant evidence had been received or relevant evidence had been excluded or whether a enstom was found to exist on legally insufficient evidence or whether legal principles or tests had been erroneously applied. But where the Court, as the lower Appellate Court has done here, has not rejected admissible evidence, has applied its mind correctly as to what the essentials of a enstom are, and at the end has found that it is not satisfied on the evidence produced that such a custom exists, it appears to me that there is no point of law which can be taken in second appeal. If it had been opened to me to decide the question as res integra, I should not have taken a view different from the view taken by the lower Appellate Court. It appears that in the Settlement of 1826 no such eustom was recorded, that in 1872 the existence of the enstom was recorded in the wa; sb-ul are by the Settlement Officer; but it is to be noted that he added that the villagers in many instances denied that any such eustom existed and subsequently there have been a few instances in which the existence of such a custom has been recognised. A suit by certain tenants for a declaration that no such onstom existed was dismissed not on the merits but owing to a misjoinder of parties. One question remains. Were the defendants restrained on the principle of res iudicata from advancing their present defence? This much is clear. They are members of a joint Hindu family. Their father was sued by the plaintiff a few years ago for damages for having appropriated certain trees and out down

The suit failed in respect of the others. greater part of the reliefs sought but it was found that he had appropriated one tree which had fallen down and as against him it was held that the custom which it was now sought to establish did exist and he was directed to pay half the value of the wood as damages. That suit, however, was a suit for damages pure and simple. If the cause of action had arisen within the jurisdiction of a Court having Small Cause Court powers the suit would have lain in a Small Cause Court. It was a suit of a Small Cause Court nature. It was beard by a Munsif in the absence of an officer with Small Cause Court powers as a regular suit. But it remained a suit of a Small Cause Court nature to which the provisions of section 102 of the Code of Oivil Procedure applied as the subject matter was less than Rs. 500. The present suit is not a suit of a Small Cause Court nature, for it includes a plea for a mandatory injunction. I am inclined to think that, in these eircumstances, the previous judgment does not operate as res judicata as the Munsif in his espacity of an officer hearing a suit of a Small Cause Court nature was not competent to try the present suit. It is true that, apart from his capacity as an officer trying suits of a Small Cause Court nature, he was competent to try the present suit but the combination of two functions in the same officer does not affect the question of competency. In many cases, Sabordinate Judges who have, as Sabordinate Judges, practically unlimited powers in the desision of suits, are also Small Cause Court Judges. Apart from the question that the previous suit was against the father of the defendants, from which both the Courts below argue that inasmuch as he did not represent the family in that suit, the family being joint, this would seem to me sufficient reason for not considering the defendants estopped in their defence by a plea of res ju licata.

For the above reasons, I dismiss this appeal. The appellant will pay her own costs and those of the respondents.

Pleadings—Suit based on breach of agreement— Breach specified in plaint not proved—Decree, whether can be granted on ground that pleadings amount to breach.

No doubt in exceptional cases a Court can take cognisance of events since the institution of the suit where the adoption of such a course tends to shorten litigation, but where a suit is based on a breach of an agreement and the plaintiff fails to prove that breach he cannot demand a decree on the ground that something which has been alleged by the defendant in his pleadings or statement amounts to a breach of the agreement which gives him a cause of action. [p. 617, col. 2]

Chinta Hararan Das v. Radha Charan Poddar, 37 Ind. Cas. 962, and Subbaraya Chetty v. Nachiar Ammal, 44 Ind. Cas. 863; (1918) M. W. N. 199; 7 L.

W. 403, distinguished.

Plaintiff alleged that he was owner of a half share in a certain village, defendant being the owner of the other half, and that he had given defendant a 1/6th share in the village out of the half owned by himself, under an agreement whereby the defendant undertook to pay the malba and other miscellaneous expenses for the whole village. The agreement went on to provide that, "if any of the contracting parties or their descendants break the contract the parties would have to revert to their original half and half share in the village land." The plaintiff now sued to recover the 1/6th share on the ground that defendant had for some years ceased to pay the dues which he had undertaken to pay. The defendant pleaded that the agreement was invalid, and in the alternative that no breach of it had taken place. It was held that the plaintiff had failed to prove breach of the agreement. In second appeal the plaintiff contended that the defendant's plea that the agreement was invalid amount. ed to a breach of the contract and that he was entitled to a decree on the basis of that breach :

Held, (1) that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree on the basis of something which had occurred after the suit was filed and which would not necessarily have occurred in any case; [p. 617, col. 2.]

(2) that if the plaintiff desired to take advantage of the alleged breach of agreement he could only do so by means of a fresh suit. [p. 617, col. 2.]

Mr. Muhammad Raft, for the Appellants. Mr. Zofrulla Khan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- The suit which has given rise to this eecond appeal was between descendants of two brothers, Amir Shah and Mubarik Shab, who owned all the land in. Chak Hatar of village Akbar Shah in equal The plaintiffs are grandsons of sharea. Mubarik Shah. The case for the plaintiffs is that in 1877 an arrangement was arrived at by the ancestors of the parties by which a two thirds share of the land, instead of one. half, was given to the descendants of Mabarik Shah on the condition that the latter would be responsible for paying the swai dues and other miscellaneous expenses and also the cost of maintaining burkis and sehaddas and of supplying uniforms to the villege Chankidars. It is stated that this oral agreement was reduced to writing in 1901, when a registered deed was executed and signed by the parties, which provided that, "if any of the contracting parties or their descendants break the contract the parties would have to revert to their original half and half share in the village land," The plaintiffs slaimed back the one sixth share of the land which had been given to the defendants under the said agreement, on the ground that for five years previous to the suitthe defendants had ceased to pay the dues which they had undertaken to pay. The defendants admitted that there was an oral arrangement in 1877, but denied the validity of the written agreement of 1901, which they said was obtained by fraud and was not binding on them. They added, however, that they had not committed any breach of the contract but had continued to pay the dues above mentioned. The Court of first instance found that the agreement of 1901 was valid and binding on the defendants and gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession of the one-sixth share of land which had hitherto been in the possession of the defendants holding that the defendants had broken the contract by not paying the dues. The defendants appealed to the District Judge, who reversed the decree of the Trial Court, finding that the evidence relied on to prove the breach was vague. He held that there was nothing to show that the defendants had really backed out of the agreement. The plaintiffs have now preferred a second appeal against the above decision and we have heard Mr. Muhammad Refi on their behalf and Mr. Zafrulla Khan for the respondents.

The decision of the lower Appellate Court that no breach of the agreement is proved to have taken place cannot be questioned in second appeal and is not assailed. It is argued, however, that even if no such breach had occurred before the suit, it did certainly take place during the pendency of the suit, when the defendants repudiated the agreement of 1901 and said that they were not bound to pay the malta dues and would sack their proper remedy against such liability. Mr. Muhammad Bafi urges that the defendants by this pleading gave a cause of action to the plaintiffs and the latter should not be made to bring a fresh suit in order to get a relief to which they are clearly entitled after it has become patent that the other side are not going to abide by the terms of the agreement. He refers to Subbaraya Chetty v. Nachiar Ammal (1) and Chint: Hararan Das v. Radha Charan Poddar (2) in support of the contention that the relief claimed can be granted to him in the present suit, even if the cause of action arose subsequent to the institution of the suit.

Another ground of appeal which is pressed before us is, that under the agreement of 1901 it was open to either party to revert to the status quo ante by going against the terms of the contract and that the plaintiffs would be, in any case, entitled to say that they were no longer willing to adhere to the contract and would in future prefer to pay their share of the dues and to get back the one. sixth land, the profits of which the defendants were enjoying. This argument, however, is taken for the first time in second appeal and the plaintiffs cannot now be allowed to set up a new case. Their case was originally confined to the definite allegation that the defendants had broken the contract. So far as the ground first discussed is concorned, Mr. Zafrulla Khan argues, in the first place, that the pleadings of the defendants have not been correctly understood or interpreted. He says that what the defendants said about seeking proper remedy was, at the outside, a mere declaration of an intention to do something in future. He also points.

(1) 44 Ind. Cas. 868; (1918) M. W. N. 199; 7 L, W. 408; (2) 87 Ind. Cas. 962; out that in the statement on behalf of the defendants made before the issues were framed it was declared by them that they would continue to pay the dues in question, He says that, in the face of this changed position taken by the defendants, it cannot be orged that a cause of action based on a breach of the agreement has arisen and contends that the plaintiffs should bring a separate sait for anything fresh which they allege has happened since the suit under appeal was lodged. Mr. Zafrulla Khan distinguishes the rulings quoted on behalf of the appellants from the present case, on the ground that the events which occurred subsequent to the filing of the suits, in the cases dealt with in those decisions, were such as would have nesessarily occurred even if the suits had not been filed and would have given the plaintiffs a cause of action. We agree with the contention that the sases cited are distinguish .. able. In Subbaraya Chetty v. Nachiar Ammal (1) there was a suit for money, which be came really payable after the filing of the suit and it was held by the Madras High tte plaintiff should not be Court that compelled to institute another suit and a desree should be passed in his favour in the enit already filed. In Chinta Hararan Das v. Radha Charan Poddar (2) plaintiff was holding land on an itara lease at the time of the suit, but the lease expired before the deeres was passed and he was given a decree for khas possession of the land in the same suit, as he was found to be entitled to possession, and the Calcutta High Court laid down that in exceptional cases Courts can take cog. nizance of events since the institution of the suit where the adoption of such a course tends to shorten litigation." We think the present ease is somewhat different from the cases above referred to and if the plaintiffe in this case desire to sue on the alleged breach of contract owing to the pleadings of the defendants in the suit, they can do so only by means of a fresh suit and they are at liberty to bring such a snit, if so advised, in which the questions of the exact significance and effect of the pleadings can be gone into. The result is that both the grounds of appeal pressed before us fail and this appeal is, therefore, dismissed with soats.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meernt.

Messrs. D. O. Banerji and K. O. Mital, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- This appeal arises out of a suit for sale on a mortgage. It appears that there were two brothers, Ramji Lal and Baldeo, who owned a 1/12th share each in a certain property. Baldeo died leaving two sone, Babadur and Nathu. Ramji Lal applied for mutation of names in place of Balden and obtained an order in his favour; and on the 5th of December 19.5, he mortgaged with possession the whole share, that is, 1/6th, belonging to his deceased brother and himself. On the 15th of June 1906, he executed a simple mortgage of the 1/oth share in favour of the plaintiff Premraj.

One Hari Singh, who is a defendant in the suit, had two simple money decrees against Ramji Lal and Baldeo separately. He brought to sale the 1/12th share of each of the two brothers in execution of his decrees and purchased them himself. He purchased the share of Ramji Lal subjest to the plaintiff's ensumbrance of the On the 4th of 5th of December 1905. March 1907 Premraj sued the mortgagor Ramji Lal, Hari Singh and Bahadur and Nathu the sons of Baldeo on his mortgage of the 5th of December 1905 and obtained a deeree for sale.

On the 16th of August 1911 Hari Singh mortgaged the property purchased by him to Beopar Shahayak Bank and paid off the deeree of Premraj.

On the 22nd of December 1911 Hari Singh mortgaged the property to Mohan Lal defendant and with the money so taken paid off the mortgage of Beopar Shahayak Bank.

The plaintiff Premraj now sues for sale of the whole property on his mortgage of 1905. Mohan Lal contended inter alia that Ramji Lal had no authority to mortgage the whole of the property and his half share, that is, a 1/12th, only could be sold. He also claimed priority to the extent of the amount due on the mortgage of 1905 which he had satisfied.

The Munsif came to the conclusion that Ramji Lal was not competent to mortgage the whole of the property in the presence of Baldeo's two sons, but sould mortgage only his 1/12th share. He decreed the claim subject to the payment of Rs. 1,157 the principal and interest on the mortgage of 1935 to the defendant Moban Lal.

The plaintiff went up in appeal, and the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that Hari Ram, Bahadur and Nathu were made parties to the previous suits, as legal representatives of Ramji Lal and sould not be heard to say that the mortgage by Ramji Lal of the whole of the family property was incompetent, He then went on to say that the mortgage security became extinguished as soon as Premraj obtained the decree for sale on his mortgage of the 5th of December 1905 and, therefore, no right of subrogation could be elaimed by Hari Singh. On these findings he modified the decree of the Court of first instance by giving the plaintiff an unconditional deeres for sale of the whole of the property.

The defendant Mohan Lal comes here in second appeal and contends that (1) it was open to him to contend that Ramji Lal was not the owner of the entire property but of half, (2) that he was not the legal representative of Ramji Lal, (3) that Ramji Lal was not competent to mortgage the share of his brother Baldeo, and (4) that having satisfied the plaintiff's own MOHAN LAL U. PREMEAJ.

mortgage of 1905 he was entitled to priority to that extent.

As to the first contention urged on behalf of the appellant, we do not think that it has any force. Hari Singh was made a defendant in the previous suit by the plaintiff as he had purchased the property which was already mortgaged to the plaintiff. The Court had found in that case that the mortgage given by Ramji Lal was partly on account of the debts owing by both Ramji Lal and his brother Balder.

As to the second and third points raised which are connected with the first, we are of opinion that the appellant who had parchased the whole of the family property in execution of a simple money decree was the legal representative of both the brothers Ramji Lal and Baldeo. In the pravious suit of Premraj the Court decided in effect that Ramji Lal was competent to mortgage the share of his brother Baldeo also We do not think the defendants can now go behind that finding.

The fourth contention, namely, that the the defendant-appellant having satisfied plaintiff's first mortgage of 1905 WAS has entitled to hold it up as a shield, It been hotly contested on both sides. was argued by Mr. Durga Charan Binerji, the learned Advocate for the appellant, that according to the dostrine of subrogation the defendant-appellant was entitled to do so. On the other hand, Dr. Sep, the learned Advocate for the respondents, contended that the doctrine of subrogation as applied in India was confined to the provisions of section 74 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) and referred only to a subsequent mortgages redeeming the next prior mortgage. In our opinion this argument cannot be accepted. The Transfer of Property Act does not purport to consolidate the law relating to mortgages in India but only defines and amends certain parts of the law (see the Preamble to the Ast and paragraph 10 of Dr. Gour's Law of Transfer in British India). Farthermore, their Lordships of the Privy Council have applied the principle in the case of purchasers also [see Gokaldes Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsuhh (1)].

(1) 10 C. 1035 at p. 1044; 11 J. A. 126; 8 Ind. Jur. 896; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 543; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 632 (P. C.).

Another contention of Dr. Sen is that, where there are two mortgages in favour of the same person, no question of subrogation can arise because a creditor can claim no subrogation against himself. No authority has been cited before us in support of this contention and we do not think that on principle there is any difference between the case where a purchaser pays off a prior mortgage in favour of a third person and the case where he pays off a prior mortgage against the same creditor against whom he claims the right of subrogation. We are of opinion that the contention of the appellant on this point is correct.

We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and in lieu there. of pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff for sale of half the mortgaged property unconditionally and for sale of the remaining half if the sale-proceeds of the former does not prove to be sufficient, subject to his paying Rs. 1,157 to the defendant appellant Mohan Lal. The defendants must pay the amount due to the plaintiff within six months from this date. In ease of their failure to do so the plaintiff will be entitled to recover his money by sale of half the mortgaged property. In case his mortgage is not satisfied by such sale and he wants to sell the remaining half he will have to pay Rs. 1,157 to the appellant Moban Lal within six months of the sale of the former half be entitled to sell and be will then the remaining half of the property also to recover the balance due to him and the amount of Rs. 1,157 so paid to Mohan Lal. The plaintiff is entitled to balf his costs in all Courts and the defendant appellant Mohan Lal will get half his costs in all Courts from the plaintiff. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale, Presumption.

Where land is sold for arrears of taqavi and the sale-certificate shows that it was sold under the provisions of sections 100 and 161 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, free of all encumbrances, the Court may presume that the sale-proceedings were lawfully taken and that the facts stated in the sale-certificate are correct. [p. 621, col. 1.]

A sale under sections 160 and 161 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act for arrears of taqavi can only take place if the taqavi had been granted for the benefit of the property sold. Where the sale certificate states that the sale has taken place under those sections, the burden of proving that the taqavi had not been granted for the benefit of the property sold, lies on the person alleging it. [p. 621, col. 1.]

The plea that taqavi is not revenue and that land cannot be sold free of all encumbrances for arrears of taqavi is not maintainable in view of section 7 (1) (c) of the Land Improvement Loans Act, read with section 161 (1) of the U. P. Land Revenue

Mr. A. Rauf, for the Respondent,

JUDGMENT.—Suraj Prasad was the owner of certain plots in Mahal Latifnagar. He took a taquet advance from the Government for the construction or repair of a well and gave the plots as security for the advance. He failed to pay the advance and the plots were put to sale and purchased by Babu Ram, plaintiff, on the 17th of February 1919. The tale certificate is on the file and it declares that the plots were sold under sections 160 and 161 of the Land Revenue Act free of all enumbrances, Another Babu Ram, the defendant-respondent, held a mortgage on these plots. He brought a suit on the basis of his mortgage and obtained a decree for sale. The decree was put into execution and the plots were purchased by the decreeholder. In the execution proceedings the plaintiff-appellant objected to possession being delivered to the defendant respondent on the ground that he (the plaintiff appel. lant) had purchased the plots "free of all encumbrances" under the sale for tagavi, His objection was disallowed and he, therefore, brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for a declaration that he was the owner in possession of the plots which were purchased by him free from all encumbrances and that they were not calcable in execution of the defendant's decree. The defendantrespondent pleaded that his mortgage was prior to the tagavi advance and that though the land could have been sold free of all encumbrances for any revenue due upon it a tagati debt could not take precedence of a prior mortgage.

The Court of first instance held that as the tagavi advance was not for the benefit of the property in suit and the property was merely a collateral security for payment of the tagavi the sale of the property was governed not by sections 160 and 161 of the Land Revenue Act but by section 162 of that Act and that, therefore, the property must have been sold subject to the prior mortgage. The lower Appellate Court has agreed with the view taken by the Court of first instance and the plaintiff comes to this Court in second

The first point to be noted is, that there is nothing on the record to show that in fact the mortgage held by the defendantrespondent was a prior debt to the tagars advance. Both the Courts below appear to have assumed that the mortgage was a prior debt. But even if we assume that the defendant-respondent's mortgage was a prior debt it seems to me that the decision of the Those Courts lower Courts is not correct. have held that as the tagavi advance was not taken for the benefit of the property in suit sections 160 and 161 of the Land Revenue Act could not apply. prior incumbrance; and the lower Courts have set out a case for the defendant. respondent which was not pleaded by him, The plea was that tagavi was not revenue and that land sould not be sold free of all encumbrances for arrears of tagari. In view of section 7 (1) (c) of the Land Improvement Loans Act, read with section 161 (1) of the Land Revenue Act, this plea is clearly not The plaintiff produced his maintainable. sale-certificate which showed clearly that the land was sold under the provisions of sections 160 and 161 and was purchased by the plaintiff free of all enoumbrances. Omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta. The Court may presume that the saleproceedings were lawfully taken and that the facts stated in the sale certificate are correct. The sale under sections 160 and 161 of the Land Revenue Act for arrears of tagari could only have taken place if the tagavi had been granted for the benefit of the property sold. It, therefore, lay upon the defendant-respond. ent to show that in fact the tagavi had not been advanced for the benefit of the property in suit and the lower Courts were not right in presuming that the tagavi had been advanced for the benefit of some other property and that the property in suit was given as collateral security. The defendant respondent has made no attempt to discharge the burden which was upon him. In these eireumstances, the decree of the lower Appellate Court cannot be maintained. The appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the plaintiff's suit is deereed with costs in all Courts.

Petitioners.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Narendra Nath Chowdhuri, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by Uma Charan Sett and Annoda Prosad Sett for a Certificate that this is a fit and proper case for appeal to the Judicial Committe of the Privy Conneil. The relationship of the parties appears in the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee. After stating that the appeal was by the first three defendants in a suit for partition and accounts of a joint family property, he went on to say: "The founder of the family was one Bhola Nath Sett who died in or about Agrahan 1284, that is, towards the end of the year 1877. He left three sons Uma Charan (defendant No. 1), Annoda (defendant No. 2) and Nogen who died in 1279. He also left a widow Nritya Moyi, who is the third defendant. The fourth defendant in the suit is Rajendra who is the son of the first defendant Uma Charan. The plaintiffs in the suit are Kanai and Jyotindra—the two sons of Nogen. second plaintiff was, at the date of the institution of the suit and is even now, an infant represented by his mother Hari Priya,"

The appellants to this Court were the first three defendants. Uma Charan, Annoda and Nritya Moyi, and they were represented by the same learned Vakil, Babu Ram Chander Mozumdar, and the plaintiffs were represented by Dr. Dwarks Nath Mitter.

The real issue in the ease was, whether certain premises had been bought by the widow out of her own separate estate so as to make the premises her own property, or whether the premises had been bought by the deceased man Bhola Nath in the name of his wife.

The appellants in this Court were basing their title upon a deed of gift by Nritya Moyi to the two appellants Uma Charan and Annoda. The First Court held that the property had been bought by Bhola Nath in the name of his wife, and this Court same to the same conclusion and held that the decree made by the Sabordinate Jadge must be affirmed subject to one variation; as to this variation the learnel Judge said: "On behalf of Nritya Moyi the third defendant, Babu Ram Charan Mozumdar has pointed out that if it is established that the shop was not purchased by ber in 1868 but was in reality purchased by her husband Bhola Nath the question arises whether she is not entitled to a share of the properties on partition. Tais aspect of the case does not appear to have been raised in the Court below nor pressed before the Subordinate Judge. The point is also not taken in the grounds of appeal presented to this Court for the reason that if such a ground were taken it might weaken the defence that the property belonged not to Bhola Nath but to Nritya Moyi. But, in the eireumstances of this case, we are of opinion that when the properties come to be divided share should be allowed to one-fourth Nritya Moyi in lieu of her right to maintenance to be held by her during her lifetime."

"Subject to this variation the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed."

The result, therefore, was that, instead of getting one-third of the property in accordance with the judgment of the First Court, the effect of the judgment of this Court was that Uma Charan and Annoda would each get a quarter of the property and Nritya Moyi would get one-quarter during her life-time. The question, therefore, is whether the judgment of this Court is one of affirmance or reversal. In my judgment, it is one of affirmance except in so far as it was varied with the consent of the appellants to this Court.

It is clear that the decree of the lower Court was varied at the instance of Babu Ram Chunder Mczumdar acting on behalf of the appellant Nritya Moyi. But for his application the judgment of the First Court would have been affirmed, without any variation. The learned Vakil appeared not only for Nritya Moyi but also for the other two appellants, and inasmuch as it is suggested that the learned Vakil in making that application made any reservation as to the rights or position of the first two defendants, who now desire to appeal to the Privy Council, in my judg. ment, the considerion must be that, when the learned Vakil made that application on behalf of Nritya Moyi he must be taken to have made it with the consent of his other two clients, namely, the present appellants to England. Consequently, the position is, that this Court affirmed the decision of the lower Court except as regards the variation which was made at the request of Nritya Moyi and with the consent of the other appellants. The decree of this Court, therefore, was one of affirmance and, under these circumstances, it is necessary for the appellants who desire to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to show that there is some substantial question of law involved. This, they have failed to do, and consequently the application must be refused with costs, five gold mohurs.

RESPONDENTS.

Construction of document—Sale—Agreement to sell—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), 5. 54— "Price", what constitutes—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 113—Specific performance—Limitation, BISHESHAR DAYAL U. HAR BAJ KUAB.

In order to construe a document the Court must look to all the covenants in it. [p. 624, col. 1.]

A sale may be effected in lieu of the amount to be spent in a particular litigation, for, although the amount is unascertained, it is certainly capable of being ascertained. [p. 624, col. 2.]

The term "price" in section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act is used to denote consideration in the shape of money, or what is its equivalent. [p. 624,

col. 2.]

A deed was executed in order to provide money for the defence of a suit brought against the executant for possession of his property. The deed conveyed a share in this property to the transferee. It was described as a sale-deed and was stamped as such and it contained a statement that the executant had made an absolute sale of the share. The ostensible consideration was a sum of Rs. 14,0 0, Rs. 13,800 of which were left with the vendee to be spent in the litigation, together with the "labour, efforts and hard work of the vendee." If less was spent the executant was not to be able to recover it while if more was spent he was not to be liable for it. In the event of success the vendee alone was entitled to the costs of the litigation recovered through the Court. The vendee was to be entitled to have possession of the share sold after success in the suit After obtaining a decree the management of the decreed property and the collections was to vest with the vendee and the vendor and each party was to be entitled to have the partition made. After the registration of the deed the executant was not to be entitled to admit the right of inheritance of any one else either directly or indirectly, by his act or word, with respect to the share sold. If the executant made collusions against the interests of the vendee or acquired any undue advantage for private benefit then the vendee was to be entitled to step in. Rs. 5, wo of the consideration money were left with the vendee to pay off a certain charge on the property only in the event of his getting a title to it by success in the suit:

Held, (1) that the real intention of the parties to the deed was that the transfer of title as well as of possession should be conditional on the executant's success in the suit and should only take effect upon the passing of a final decree in his favour; [p. 625,

(2) that, therefore, the deed was only an agreement to sell ; [p. 626, col. 1.]

18) that the limitation for a suit to enforce the agreement was contained in Article 113 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act; [p. 626, col. 1.]

(4) that limitation began to run from the date on which the suit against the vendor was finally dismissed on appeal. [p. 626, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 22nd September 1919.

The Hon'ble Syed Wasir Hasan, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Pandit Jagmohan Nath Chak, for Respondent No. 1,

JUDGMENT, -This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of certain properties on the basis of a sale deed executed on 26th Ostober 1912 by Sheo Ratan Singb, deceased. in favour of the plaintiffs and of the defendants Nos. 3 to 5 and for mesne profits. plaintiffs also elaimed a sum of Rs. 928 realised by the first defendant Musammat Har Raj Kuar, widow of Sheo Ratan Singh, on assount of sosts in connection with the litigation set out below. The suit property consists of a share in four villages Uttarpara, Rajwapur, Muhammadpur and Kutwarmau. The deed in suit was executed in order to prosure money for the defence of a suit brought against Sheo Ratan Singh by Madho Singh and others for possession of his property consisting of Muhammadpur and Kutwarmau and an 11 biswa 2 biswansi 22; desimal share in Mouzas Uttarpara and Rajwapur. Sheo Ratan Singh was successful in the litigation and the suit of Madho Singh and his co-plaintiffs was dismissed both in the original and the Appellate Courts. Madbo Singb was likewise assisted in those proesedings by sertain professional litigants to whom he had transferred shares in the property and who were joined in the suit as coplaintiffs.

The present suit was resisted on various pleas of which two only are material to this appeal, the others having been rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge. The pleas on which the defendants have succeeded in the Court below are:—

(1) that the deed, though in form a sale, was really an agreement to transfer the property in the event of the suit brought by Madho Singh being dismissed,

(2) that the deed was procured by undue influence.

On these findings the lower Court has given the plaintiffs a decree for amounts actually spent by them with simple interest at twenty per cent, per annum, amounting in all to Rs. 3,059 2.7, together with future interest at six per cent. A high rate of interest was allowed in view of the plaintiff's exertions in connection with the litigation and the risk they ran of losing their money. The lower Court followed the precedent set in the case of Loke Indar Sngh v. Rup Singh (1) a case which was affirmed by the Privy Council in Ra a Mohkam Singh v. Raja Rup Singh (2). The plaintiffis appellants contest the finding of undue influence, which they assert was never set up by the defendants, and plead that the transaction in suit was an out and out sale of the property and that they were entitled to a decree for the share sold. The issues are:—

(1) Was the transaction evidenced by the deed in suit a sale in præsenti or merely an agreement to sell?

(2) Were the plaintiffs in a position to dominate the will of Sheo Ratan Singh and was the bargain unconscionable, so as to render the transaction voidable on the ground of undue influence within the meaning of section 16 of the Indian Contract Act?

The first issue has to be decided with reference to the terms of the deed which is Exhibit I on the record. The deed is described as a sale deed and was stamped as such and it contains a statement that the executant has made an absolute sale of the property in suit. This is a strong point in favour of the plaintiffs but it is not conclusive. We have to look to all the covenants in the deed and see whether the intention of the parties as expressed in the deed was to effect an immediate transfer of proprietary right in favour of the plaintiffs.

The ostensible consideration was a sum of Rs. 14,000, Rs. 13,800 of which were left with the vendees to be spent in the litigation, together with the "labour, efforts and hard work of the vendees," but as the deed contained a covenant that if less was spent the executant should not be able to recover it, while if more was spent he should not be liable for it, the real consideration was the amount to be spent by the vendees in the litigation, less any sum they might recover as costs from the opposite party. The deed contains a covenant, which is material on the question whether the bargain was unconscionable, that in the event of success the vendees alone shall be entitled to the costs of the suit recovered through the Court. In the event they were unable to recover any costs as they were not made parties to the suit. Sheo Batan Singh at first applied that they should be made parties. The opposite party objected. Subsequently, on 11th January, Sheo Ratan Singh repudiated the agreement, and the Court ruled that as the transferees took their transfer pendente lite they were not necessary parties and should not be joined.

We need not seriously consider the sugges. tion that the transaction was bad as a sale because the astual amount which would be spent by the defendants was unascertained. If not ascertained it was certainly capable of being ascertained, and no authority has been shown us to support the view that a sale cannot be effected in lieu of the amount to be spent in a particular litigation. It is true, however, that the consideration consisted in part of a promise by the defendants to spend their labour and effort in defending the suit and it may be doubted whether this part of the consideration can be considered as "price" as the term is used in section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. As Dr. Gour says in his commentary on the Transfer of Property Act, Fourth Edition, Article 960, page 599:-

"Although the term 'price' has been nowhere defined, it is no doubt used to denote consideration in the shape of money, or what is its equivalent, for if the transfer is otherwise, it may be either an exchange or a gift, but not a sale."

The most that can be said on this score is that the fact that part of the consideration consisted of services to be rendered in the future makes it rather more probable that the parties had in mind an agreement to sell rather than an immediate sale.

The covenants contained in clauses (4), (6), (10) and (11) of the decd, particularly the last three of these, are of great importance in determining the true intention of the parties. They are as follows:—

- (4) That after success in the suit, the vendees shall be entitled to have possession of the shares sold, with all the dakili and kharii rights, sir and khudkasht lands, sayer and groves, etc., pertaining to the shares sold along with the executant.
- (6) That after obtaining a decree the management of the decreed property and the collections will vest with the vendees and the vendor and each party will be entitled to have the partition made either perfect or imperfect.

(10) That after the registration of this sale deed I, the executant, shall not be entitled to admit the right of inheritance of anyone else either directly or indirectly by my act or word, with respect to the shares sold. If I will do so it will be invalid and illegal and will have no effect on vendess' right to the share sold.

(11) That if anyone of the vendees or I, the executant, directly or indirectly make collusions against the interest of other sharers or acquire any undue advantage for private benefit then all the vendees and I shall be entitled to recover damages and costs proportionate to the shares from the person and all sorts of the property of that person through Court, and under these circumstances the said person will lose all his proprietary rights in the property sold and the vendees and the executant shall proportionately be entitled to that.

Clause (4) makes the transferees' right to possession contingent on success suit. Clause (6) gives them a right to obtain partition, and, till partition a joint right in the management and sollections of the property, when and only when a decree has been obtained in their favour. is the only clause in the deed which refers in any way to the profits of the preperty, and, though the point is not elearly stated, seems to indicate an intention that Sheo Ratan Singh should continue to collect and appropriate the income of the property until the suit was decided. It is common ground that no claim to the profits of the property during the period when the litigation was pending has ever been made by the plaintiffs. It is important to remember that Sheo Ratan Singh was defendant in the suit filed by Madho Singh and that he was in possession of the property at the time when the agree. ment was made. It is not merely that delivery of possession was deferred, but delivery of possession and apparently a right to participate in the profits of the property was deliberately made contingent on the success of the suit. Clause (10) is meaningless if there was an immediate transfer of proprietary right. If the proprietary right in the property was to pass to the present plaintiffe immediately on completion of the deed their rights could in no possible way be affected by the executant admitting the right of any person to inherit property which was no longer his. It is only on the assumption that he still retained a proprietary interest in the property during the pendency of the suit that it could be necessary to provide against his admitting some third party as his heir, whether by Will or otherwise, and dying before the final desision of the suit. Clause (11) is very inartistically expressed, but so far as it provides against sollusion by the executant it also assumes that during the pendency of the litigation he still retains a proprietary right in the land sold which he will be liable to forfeit by colluding with the other side without the consent of his transferees. If he attempted any such collusion the vendees would be entitled to step in and say that the compromise made was of no effect as regards the property covered by the deed, since, by the very act of making it, all his right had passed to them, "and the vendees and the executant shall be proportionately entitled to it "apply strictly only to collasion by one of the vendees, but the clause is directed against collusion by either party and the penalty of loss of proprietary right in the property sold is imposed equally on both.

Rs. 5,000 of the sonsideration money was left with the vendees to pay off a charge on the property held by one Rani Jagannath Kuar. This also was only to be paid by them in the event of their getting a title to the property by success in the suit. Sheo Ratan Singh expressly covenants that in the event of the suit being lost the debt due to Rani Sahiba will be paid by him.

Looking to these covenants and to the whole tenor of the deed it appears to us that the real intention of the parties was that the transfer of title as well as of possession was conditional on the suit of Madho Singh being dismissed and was only to take effect upon the passing of a final decree in favour of Sheo Ratan Singh.

A number of cases have been eited at the Bar, on both sides of the argument, in which the construction of deeds purporting or alleged to be sale-deeds has been in question, but as none of these deeds contain envenants similar to those of the deed in suit it is unnecessary to discuss them in detail.

BISHESHAR DAYAL V. HAR BAJ EUAR.

The Privy Council case of Lal Achal Ram v. Raja Kazim Husain Bhan (3) is elearly dictinguisbable. The deed most nearly recembling that now in suit is that which came before their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rance Bhotosoondree Dasseah v. Issur Chunder Dutt (4). In that case the deed purported to be a sale-deed of an eightanna share for a sum of Rs. 3,000 left with the transferees to be spent in litigation. In the event of the suit being decided in favour of the executant both parties to the deed were to take the costs, mesne profits, jole jummah and the taluk in the shares mentioned above. If more than the agreed consideration was spent by the transferees they were not to be entitled to elaim it from the transferor. The deed concluder: "In whatever way the suit is deereed, I will give and receive 8-annas thereof as aforesaid, that is, in half shares."

The suit filed was, as their Lordships observe on page 40 of the report, not one claiming specific performance of contract but a suit in the nature of ejectment. It was a suit to recover possession of the property mentioned in the deed by virtue of the title acquired under it. The question before their Lordships was whether the deed operated as a present transfer of the property or only as an agreement to transfer it on certain contingencies which did not happen, and they decided that the latter was the correct interpretation.

If, as we hold, the learned Subordinate Judge has rightly interpreted the deed as being an agreement to transfer the property in the event of success in litigation the question arises whether The Article of elaim was within time. limitation applicable in such a case is admittedly Article 113 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908, which allows a period of three years from the date fixed for the performance. The date fixed by elause (4) of the agreement was the date of success in the suit. Now the suit was dismissed by the first Court on 23rd Desember 1913 and by this Court in appeal on 21st September 1915, (Ex: hibits A133 and A135). On the face of it, therefore, limitation expired on zlat September 1918 whereas the present suit: was not filed till 25th October 1918. The learned Subordinate Judge has extended the period of limitation by allowing a further six months' time from the date of the decision of this Court for a possible application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council under Article 179 of Limitation Act, as it then stood. have no hesitation in holding that the learned Subordinate Judge was in error on this point. The appeal to this Court was dismissed and Madho Singh's slaim rejected on a occentrent finding of fact that he had failed to establish his relationship to the person whose property he was claiming which formed the basis of the title. Not only could the plaintiffs in that suit not have claimed leave to appeal as of right under the provisions of sections 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but even the conditions necessary to enable a party to apply for special leave to appeal were entirely wanting. After making his submission on the question of limitation the learned Advocate for the respondents intimated on behalf of his elients that they did not wish to press this point and were willing, as a matter of right dealing between the parties, to accept the decree passed against them for the amount spent by the appellants. They have also abandoned the cross-objection put in by them as to the amount of interest. That portion of the deeree, therefore, which awards Rs. 3,059 2 7 with interest against the defendants must be treated as a decree by concent.

In view of our finding on the first issue it is not strictly necessary to enter into the question of undue influence, but as the point has been fully argued on both eides it will be convenient briefly to dispose of it. The appellants' learned Advocate in arguing this part of the case has accepted the findings of fact arrived at by the Court below but contends that they are not sufficient to establish a plea of undue influence. That the bargain was in fact unconscionable can hardly be doubted. The whole property was valued at Rs. 10,000 in the suit filed by Madha

Singh (vide Exhibit A 133). The learned Subordinate Judge has given reasons for thinking that this was an undervaluation and that the true value of the half share covered by the deed in suit is Rs. 40,000. It may be admitted that it would not fetch anything like this price while a suit for possession of it was pending. If the ostensible consideration, Rs. 14,000, had been the true consideration there might have been something to be said on behalf of the bargain but, as we have seen, the real consideration was the amount to be spent in the litigation plus Rs. 200 paid in each and Rs. 5,100 to be paid on account of the charge on the property, which latter sum was only to be paid when the purebasers got possession. The actual amount spent by the plaintiffs apart from interest has been found to be Rs. 1,501. Owing to the dispute between the parties the costs of the appeal were borne by Sheo Ratan Singh, but even if the appellants had borns these the amount enald not have been increased by more than a half. This amount might possibly have to be doubled if the case had gone to the Privy Council. Even this amount was not in the long run to be paid by the appellants. The deed provided that they alone should be entitled to realise and appropriate any costs which the Court might award in the suit. It comes to this, therefore, that in the event of sussess they were to get property worth approximately Rs. 40,000 for Rs. 5,000 and such portion of the amount spent in the litiga. tion as they might fail to recover from the opposite party. In the event of failure they risked the loss of Ra. 2,000 or in the case of an appeal to the Privy Council possibly R. 4,000. On the other hand, the chances of success were certainly more than even. The barden of proof in the suit which was pending lay on the plaintiffs in that suit. Shee Batan Singh was in possession of the property and, as the event showed, had a perfectly good title to

What, then, induced Sheo Ratan Singh to consent to a bargain so disadvantageous? Madho Singh had obtained the assistance of certain professional litigants, Muhammad Husain and others, in prosecuting his suit and this fact had considerably alarmed

Sheo Ratan Singh. These persons made a practice of buying up claims and prosecuting them in the Courts. Sheo Ratan Singh felt that he must get the assistance of some one experienced in litigation as a counterpoise. Beni Prasad, plaintiff No. 2, was such a person. It is admitted by the plaintiffs' witness Naud Kishore that for the last fifteen years Bani Prasad has been speculating in litigation. Shee Ratan Singh had already been to two other persons, Bhagwat Prasad and Raja Sukhmangal Singh, to attempt to induce them to finance his suit for him. Bhagwat Prasad refused point blank and Sukhmangal Singh put him off by saying that he could not give a definite reply until he had consulted his lawyers. Sheo Ratan Singh was at the time in debt to the extent of at least Rs. 10,000. He had been advised by his agent Bhagwant Rai to approach Beni Prasad, and he seems to have been in that condition of mind in which he was ready to accept any terms for the purpose of obtaining Beni Prasad's assistance. This Bhagwant Rai was an old servant on whose advice Sheo Ratan Singh was in the habit of relying in matters of business and in whose hands the management of the estate largely rested. The evidence of Gauri Shankar, one of the plaintiffs' witnesses, shows that though Sheo Ratan Singh stated at the time of execut. ing the deed that he wanted to consult some of the residents of Ras Bareli he completed the deed without stopping to do so. One of the purchasers was the brother of the plaintiffs' agent Bhagwant Rai, the man named above, at whose suggestion the transaction was entered into.

These facts appear to be sufficient to justify the finding that Beni Presed was in a position to dominate the will of Sheo Ratan Singh and that he used his power to obtain a contract the terms of which were unconscionable. This raises a presumption of undue influence under section 16 of the Contract Act which the plaintiffs have failed to rebut.

It is urged that a case of undue influence was not set up in the written statement. It is true that the defendants relied largely on a case of fraud which they failed to establish but they did allege in the written statement that the transaction was unconscionable and extortionate and that Sheo Ratan Singh was in such perplexity as not to understand the real effect of the transaction. In the proceedings of the 29th November 1918, tin explanation of the 16th paragraph of he written statement, the defendants' Advocate pleaded undue influence in express terms.

The parties went to trial on a clear issue of undue influence, and evidence was adduced on both sides upon it, and it is too late for the appellants to urge in appeal that the plea of undue influence was not raised.

It has been pleaded in this Court that even if undue influence is found against the appellants, the transaction was afterwards affirmed by Sheo Ratan Singh therefore, the respondents are presluded from succeeding on this issue. This point was not raised in the Court below and no issue was joined on it. Of the twelve issues framed the only one which even by implication could cover this issue is the ninth issue, which rops-"should not the contract be specificially enforced?" A reference to the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge shows that this issue was decided against the plaintiffs on the basis of the findings on specific issues already decided. Even, however, if the plaintiffs are allowed to urge this plea in appeal there appears to be nothing in it. The plea is based mainly on a reciept, (Exhibit A), dated 14th April 1914, executed by Sheo Ratan Singh on account of Rs. 2,000 spent by the defendants in connection with the litigation. This resiept was given only a short time after the agreement in suit. It is quite elear that by the time the ease reached the stage of appeal Sheo Ratan Singh was repudiating the agreement and refusing to be bound by it. In the order of this Court dated the 21st September 1915 rejecting the plaintiffs' application to be made parties, it is stated that Sheo Ratan Singh was even then proposing to institute a suit against the appellants for a declaration that the deed of transfer was null and void. The same thing appears from a reply (Exhibit A 12) cent by him to a notice issued to him by the appellants before the appeal was filed. A few days later the appeal was set down for hearing. They sent a notice to him stating that they were prepared to engage Counsel for the appeal. This notice (Exhibit All) was treated as unproved in the lower Court but has been admitted and relied on by both parties before us. In his reply (Exhibit Al2) Sheo Ratan Singh repudiated the agreement, which he alleged they had got him to sign by holding out false promises and hopes.

On the above findings we uphold the decree of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs. We also dismiss the cross-objections but without costs, as if they had been pressed the objection regarding limitation would have succeeded.

Will, construction of—Absolute devise to Hindu widow—"Malik," meaning of—Right of pre-emption given to heirs and co-sharers, whether restricts absolute devise in favour of widow.

A Hindu testator by his Will authorised his widow to adopt five sons in succession and provided that if a son were adopted, the widow and the son should take the estate in equal moieties as owners . maliks) with full power of gift and sale to be exercised by each of them. There was a clause in the Will which ran as follows :- "If for any reason the adopted son or my said wife is required to sell any property left by me, he or she shall sell it to my heirs and co-sharers for proper price, that is to say, the highest price, offered by them, but if they refuse to purchase the property on paying the proper price, it may be sold to others." The next clause of the Will ran thus :- "If my said wife do not adopt any sons, then on my decease, my said wife would be the owner (malik) of all my property with power of gift and sale and shall be able to give and sell it according to the directions contained in the previous clause." The widow did not adopt any son and died having herself made a Will by which she dedicated the property to religious uses In a suit for the construction of the Will of the husband:

Held, that the widow took an absolute estate in the property left by her husband, which was not cut down by the right of pre-emption given to the heirs and co-sharers. [p 630, col. 1]

Per Richardson, J .- The word "malik" usually denotes an absolute owner. [p. 630, col. 1.]

Per Chaudhuri, J.—In all cases of gift by Will whether to male or to female, unless the instrument shows that a restricted interest was intended to be created, the legatee or the devisee must be entitled to the whole interest of the testator. [p 630, col. 2.]

The word "malik" imports full proprietary rights unless there is something in the context to qualify it. The fact that the donee is a Hindu widow is not sufficient for that purpose. [p. 631, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J .- The learned Vakil for the appellant has given us an interesting address. But in my view the case is a very elear one. The question depends on the construction of the Will of Banka Behari Das who died in May 1893. The Will is dated the 30th Bayeak 1303 B. S. There is a codicil to the Will which, however, does not affect the point at issue. Banka Behari had a brother named Ganga Charan Das who survived him but has since died. The plaintiffs in the suit are the widow and the minor son of Ganga Charan Das. By bis Will, Banka Behari authorized his widow to adopt five sons in succession and the Will provided that, if a son were adopted, the widow and the son should take the estate in equal moieties. It goes on to say: "They will be the owners (malike) in possession with full power of gift and sale to be exercised by each of them." As I understand that devise, if the widow had adopted a son, she and the son would each have taken a moiety of the estate in absolute right. As a matter of fast, however, no son was adopted and it is unnecessary for us, therefore, to deside what estate the widow would have taken if she had adopted a son. The point turns on clauses (4) and (5) of the Will which I shall read, Clause (4) runs as follows :- "If, for any reason, the adopted son or my said wife is required to sell any property left by me, he or she shall sell it to my heirs and co-sharers for proper price, that is to say, the highest price offered by them; but if they refuse to purshase the property on paying the proper price, it may be sold to othere," Clause (5) is this: "If my said wife do not adopt any sons, then, on my decease, my said wife would be the owner (malik) of all my property with power of gift and sale, and shall be able to give and sell it accord. ing to the directions contained in clause (4)." Now, the widow, Kamini Sundari, acted on the supposition that she took an absolute estate under her husband's Will. She died in 1911 having herself made a Will by which she dedicated the property to religious uses in favour of a diety known as Thakur Banka Behari and appointed sertain persons, who are the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 in this suit (the diety being the defendant No. 7), as executors. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs for the construction of Banka Bahari's Will and for the purpose of recovering the property from the diety and the executors of the widow's Will, on the ground that the widow had only a widow's estate in the property of which she affected to dispose.

As I have stated, the question turns on the two clauses of the Will which I have read. Speaking for myself, I can conceive of no language which would have more elearly indicated the intention of the testator that his widow should take an absolute estate. I entirely recognise and appreciate the fact that, ordinarily, a Hindu leaving property to his widow to be enjoyed by her after his death would desire that the widow should take the usual widow's estate so that the property should not go out of the testator's family. But it is too late to contend that, if the husband's devise in terms confer upon the widow an absolute estate, even then the widow can only take the limited widow's estate. The law has been otherwise, at any rate, since 1872, whom the ease of Porsunno Koomar

SUDBAMANI DAS C. SURAT LAL DAS.

Chose v. Tarrucknath Sirkar (1) was decided. A recent illustration will be found in the case of Nanda Gopal Sinha v. Fareshmoni Debi (2), and between these two cases there are numerous authorities which might be referred to.

Now, turning to the words used in the Will, the testator has used the word " malik" which usually denotes an absolute owner. To my mind, there is nothing in clause (4) which curtails the force of the word "malik" in elause (5) or the power of gift and sale conferred by that clause and outs down the meaning of the language so as to make the estate devised an ordinary widow's estate. It is argued that under clause (4) a restriction was put upon the disposal of the property by the It is true that clause (5) lays down that the widow is to give and sell the property according to the directions contained in clause (4). But what do those directions come to? The widow was enjoined, if she should sell, to sell in the first instance to the testator's heirs and eo sharers for a proper price which was defined as the highest price, meaning, I suppose, the highest price obtainable in the market at the time. If, however, the beirs or the so sharers refused to purchase the property paying the proper price, then the widow was to be at liberty to sell the property to others. Now, I am not considering the ultimate effect of the words. It is unnecessary to decide whether, if the widow had sold the property without first offering it to an heir or a so sharer, the transfer would or would not have been valid. But assuming for a moment that it would not have been valid, is the restraint, such as it is imposed by the clause sufficient to out down the plain meaning of the words in the succeeding clause? In my cpinion, that question can only be answered The right which the the negative. testator purported to give to the heirs and co sharers was a mere right of pre-emption. I agree entirely with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge and, generally, for the reasons which he has stated in his judgment. I am of opinion, that the suit was properly dismissed. The appeal, therefore, fails and should be dismissed with costs.

CHAUDHURI, J .- The learned Vakil for the appellants has placed before us the whole history of the law relating to gifts to a wife by a Hindu husband, beginning with Maulei Mohamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (3), down to Bhoba Tarini Debya v. Peary Lall Sanyal (4). He concedes that the result is that it is now practically settledlaw that, in all cases of gift by Will, whether to male or to female, unless the instrument shows that a restricted interest was intended to be ereated, the legatee or the devisee must be entitled to the whole interest of the testator. He has also called our attention to the ease of Sures Chandra Falit v. Lalit Mohan Dutta (5), which lays down that, in constraing the Willof a Hindu, it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property, namely, that a Hindu generally desires that an estate, especially an ancestral estate, shall be retained in his family and also that a Hindu knows that, as a general rule, at all events, women do not take absolute estates of inheritates which they are enabled to alienate. The learned Judges also say in that case that the instrument must receive a ecostruction according to the plain meaning of the words and centerces therein contained, that is, the words are to be read first in their grammatical and ordinary sense unless the context shows otherwice. There is no difficulty in accepting there general principles. In fact, they are always recognised by Courte in constraing Hindu Wills. The testator in the second paragraph of the Will in this case clearly says that, if his wife should adopt a son in accordance with the authority given by him by the first clause, the adopted son and the wife "shall sneed to the ownership of the entire properties in equal shares vested with the power of sale and gift and no violation of such iprovision shall be permitted." The Bengali words used are Dan bikrah sattadekarateh malik dakhilkar hos be." It is conceded that by that clause au absolute half is given to the son and the other half is given to the wife. Clause (5) of the Will deals with the case if no son is adopted by the wife. It says that the wife shall succeed to all the properties left by the testator after his death with powers of sale and gift and that she shall be the malik and be in presession and that she shall have power of sale and gift in assordance with the provisions of paragraph 4 to which I shall refer later. The Bengali words are "Dan bikrah datwa adhikare o melik dakhiltar hoe be." The expression "Ditta adhikari" is apparently a mistake for "Sattaadhikari." Bat whether that is so or not, it is quite clear that the same words or words which practically have the same meaning have been used in slauses (2) and (5) and, therefore it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that the testator intended to give his wife an absolute estate if she did not adpot. It has been argued that this has to be read in conjunction with the provisions of paragraph 4. It is said that that olsase restricts the right of alienation because it says: "If the aforesaid adopted son or my wife aforesaid should find it nessessary to sell any of the properties left by me, they shall be entitled to sell it to a stranger if my heirs and so sharers rofuse to purstage it for adequate consideration," and reliance placed upon Macleay, In re (6), in which a devise to a brother on the condition that he was never to sell out of the family was considered a valid condition. Tast case doss not seem to me to be applicable, in the present sironmetances. Here, there is no absolute restriction of the sale; the power of sale is not interfered with by that direction. It practically says that the widow should sell to the highest bidder. It is also to be noticed that it gives power to her to sall any of the properties ineluding in that expression properties both moveable and immoveable. I do not think that we can accept the argument that this restricted the right to sell, thus showing that a trusted estate was being given to the widow. It seems to me that words elearly and unequivocally gave the estate to the lady absolutely. Clause (4) refers to the adopted son also. He did not take under the Will but by virtue of adoption .: The restriction was not operative against him and I do not think it out down gift. to the wife and an absolute one-half or the absolute whole if she did not adopt a son. With regard to the use of the word "malik" I may refer to the case of Mani v. Rabi Nath O,ha (7), where their Lordships of the Privy Council say: "The word malik imports full proprietary rights unless there is something in the context to qualify it. The fact that the donee is a Hindu widow is not sufficient for the purpose." We think that the words used here are stronger than the word malik. The same words were used when the gift was made to the son; and that also indieates that an absolute estate was being given to the wife. I agree that the appeal should be diemissed.

entitled to a decree for possession subject to the puisne mortgagee's right to redeem, inasmuch as the transfer to the puisne mortgagee was made during the active prosecution of the prior mortgagee's suit.

Per Dhobley, A. J. C.—Order XXXIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, is merely a rule of procedure enacted with the object of preventing multifariousness of suits in respect of the same property and cannot affect the plaintiff's rights. Its object is not to punish a plaintiff for his failure to join as parties, persons of whose interest he is ignorant and whose title-deeds he has no means to inspect. [p. 636, col. 1.]

In interpreting law equitable principles as its consequences cannot be overlooked. In determining the respective rights of parties the fact that by a certain interpretation unjust results would follow and that a rightful person would suffer for no fault of his, on account of circumstances over which he had no control and for which he could not be held responsible, cannot be lost sight of. If by another interpretation this result would not follow that interpretation should be adopted. [p. 637, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated 1st December 1919, in Civil Appeal No. 105 of 1918.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

HALLIFAX, A. J. C .- (July 8, 1920.)-Facts such as that a part of the decree in this case still subsists against one of the two defendants who do not appeal, and that the immoveable property in dispute is now represented by a sum of money do not affect the decision of the one matter now in issue and may be left out of considera. tion. The facts that do concern us are as The plaintiff sned a third party, his mortgagor, for foreclosure on a mortgage dated 25th May 1882. He filed his suit in the first week of August 1910, within a few days of its being barred by limitation, and obtained a final deeree for foreelosure on 3rd January 19.6. defendant filed a suit on 25th August 1910 against the same mortgagor on a mortgage dated 12th March 1901. He was given a final decree for foreslosure on 18th July 1911, and obtained possession of the prop. erty on 4th September 1911, more than four years before the plaintiff got his final decree on his prior mortgage in the suit instituted a few days before the defendant's. Neither party impleaded the other in his forcelosure suit, and the plaintiff now elaims that the defendant is bound to redeem his prior mortgage or give him possession of the property. He was given the deeres for which he prayed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. This was set aside and his suit was dismissed on appeal in the Court of the District Judge, and he has now some here in second appeal. My learned brother Masnair, who decided the appeal as District Judge, followed the ruling of Mittra, A. J. O. in Raghunath v. Sheolal (1) admitting that there was a very large distinction between the two cases. There the plaintiff sued the mortgagor after the equity of redemption had already passed from him to the puisne mortgagee. In this case the equity of redemption was still in the mortgagor when the prior mortgagee sued and had not then passed to the puisne mortgagee who was not impleaded. There is this further distinction that in Roghunath v. Sheolal (1), the plaintiff sought to enforce his rights by making the puisne mortgagee, whom he had not impleaded to begin with, a party defendant to the sait after the passing of the conditional decree.

2. In Raghunath v. Sheolal (1) Mittre, A J. C., considered the ruling in Har Pershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh (2) in which it was held by Brett, J., in a case very similar to this, that the plaintiff was entitled to a deeree for possession subject to the defend. ant's right of redemption, while Rampini, J., was of a contrary opinion, based to a large extent on the fact that the prior mortgegee's right had become barred by limitation before he sued the puisne mortgages. The case was referred to Mr. Justice Mitra who held with Mr. Justice Brett that the plaintiff was entitled to the decree he sought. In this Court Mittra, A. J. C., preferred to follow Rampini, J., pointing out that the other two learned Judges had ignored his argument to the effect that the prior mortgagee's right to forcelosure on his own mortgage was barred by limitation. The learned District though with Judge accepted this view, some hesitation, supporting it further with the remark that if the plaintiff had disobeyed the rule in Order XXXIV, rule 1, Civil Prosedure Code, which clearly directs him to implead the puisce mortgagee his disobedienes should surely entail some inconvenience, and to hold that he can elaim to be put in the same possession as if he had obeyed the order is to render the existence of the forder fatile.

3. The view taken by the majority in the Calentta case was approved and followed in the same Court by Mookerjee and Holmwood, JJ., in Ganga Das Bhattar v. Jogendra Nath Mitra (3) and in the Allahabad High Court by Piggott and Lindsay, JJ., in Babu Lal v. Jalakia (4), and in these cases each of the learned Judges considered the question of limitation discussed by Rampini, J., in Har Pershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh (2). Both deeisions, however, as well as that of the majority in Har Pershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh (2) appear to have been it figeneed to some extent by the fast that both parties in each case appeared in Court as auction-purchasers under a decree for sale. The weight of authority is thus distinctly on the side of the appellant here and I find myself inclined to that view. This, however, may be considered as opposed to the view taken by Mittra, A. J. C., in Raghunath v. Sheolal (1), although, as I have pointed out, that case is distinguishable on some points. Therefore, under section 9 of the C. P. Courts Ast I refer the following question for the desision of a Bench:-

A mortgages sues for foreclosure without impleading a puisne mortgages. After that sait is barred by time the puisne mortgages ares the same mortgagor for foreclosure of the same property without impleading the prior mortgages. The puisne mortgages gets his decree first and obtains possession of the property. Can the prior mortgages maintain a suit against him for possession subject to his right to redeem?

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

HALLIPAX, A. J. U.— (July 7, 1921).—I have seen the judgment which my brother Kotval proposes to deliver, and I concur in both the conclusions at which he arrives. The judgment in Byram; i Jamset; v. Chunilal Lalchand (5) shows that the doubts held in the High Court of Bombay on the question whether section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to involuntary transfers effected through a Civil Court, were set at rest by the ruling of the Privy Council in Moti Lal v. Karrabuldin (6) cited by my learned brother.

KOTVAL, A. J. O.—(July 7, 1921).—The facts of the case out of which this reference arises are sufficiently given in the Order of Reference. The question referred for the decision of the Full Bench is:—

A mortgagee sues for forcelosure without impleading a puisne mortgagee. After that suit is barred by time the puisne mortgagee sues the same mortgager for forcelosure of the same property without impleading the prior mortgagee. The puisne mortgagee gets his decree first and obtains possession of the property. Can the prior mortgagee maintain a suit against him for possession subject to his right to redeem?

Admittedly, a suit to enforce the plaintiff's mortgage against the defendant was barred when the present suit was instituted. It is the right to possession under the foreelosure decree against the mortgagor that is now sought to be enforced. For the plaintiff reliance is placed upon the view taken by the majority in Har Pershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh (2) which was followed in Ganga Das Bhattar v. Jogendra Nath Mitra (3) and Babu Lal v. Jalakia (4). On the other hand, the defendant respondent relies on Raghunath v. Sheolal (1) in which the contrary view of

Rampini, J., in Har Pershad Lal v. Dalmardan

Singh (2) was accepted.

In Har Pershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singl. (2) Brett and Mitra, JJ., did not consider the fact that the prior mortgagee's right to enforce their mortgage against the second mortgagees was barred by limitation. Both were influenced by the facts that the prior mortgagee had no knowledge of the second mortgage whereas the second mortgagees had full knowledge of the prior mortgage and did not make the prior mortgagees parties to their suit. In Babu Lal v. Jalaita (4), where this case is referred to, Piggott, J., was influenced by a similar consideration, but after the amendment of section 85, Transfer of Property Act, [which was in force when Har Fershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh (2) WES decided as in Order XXXIV, rule 1, First Sehedule, Civil Procedure Code, these fasts do not help the prior mortgagee or go against the second mortgages. Ganga Das Bhatter v. Jogendra Nath Mitra (3) follows Har Pershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh (2) without comment.

It has been held that where a prior mortgages obtains a decree without making the second mortgages a party to his suit the decree or its results do not affect the second mortgages: Pandurang Instant v. Sakharchand Mali (7), Ghasiram v. Ihingwa (8), Gangades
v. Bhakaii (9), Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (10) and Umes Chun er Sircar v. Zahur Fatema (11).

Har Pershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh (2) and the cases cited above in which it was followed all assume that the prior martgagee's failure to implead the second mortgagee is of no consequence so far as the former's right to possession against the latter is concerned; but the prior mortgagee's right to possession arises from the foreelosure decree which admittedly does not affect the second mortgagee.

J. 507; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 110 (P. C.).

The present suit is said to be based on a different sause of action, but in effects it is one to forcelose the second mortgages on his failure to redeem the prior mortgage, and an evasion of the law of limitation under which a regular suit for forcelosore is barred and the defendant has acquired an immunity from being compelled to redeem.

The cases cited above all profess to consider the question before them from an equitable point of view. I do not see how equity requires that where the prior mortgages has by his lashes allowed a suit for forcelosure to be barred against the record mortgages he should be helped to get the same relief against the second mortgages in a suit to enforce a right arising under a decree which does not affect the second mortgagee.

The prior mortgages in a ease like the present occupies a dual character. He represents the rights of both mortgages and mortgagor-Ponduring Jasvant v. Sakharchand Mali (7) followed in Gangadas v. Bhika i (9). In the present suit he does not claim possession in the former character, nor, even if he did, would be be entitled to it merely as the holder of a prior mortgage by conditional sale. As representing the mortgagor his title to possession accrued on his obtaining the foreelosure deerer, but before that the morigagor's right to possession had been terminated by the decree for foreslosure in favour of the defendant and the possession taken by him thersunder. This decree was a perfectly good desree and open to no objection in law except on a ground to which I shall refer presently, and neither the mortgagor nor the plaintiff as his representative one get possession in the face of it.

I agree, therefore, with the view of Mittra,

A. J. C., in Raghunath v. Sheelal (1) and hold that the prior mortgages cannot on the strength of his title under his foreclosure, decree maintain a suit against the second mortgages for possession subject to the latter's right to redeem.

There is, however, another point to be considered in this case, and that is lis pendens. The transfer in favour of the defendant was during the pendercy of the plaintiff's suit and the defendant took the property subject to the plaintiff's rights under his decres. On this point I agree with the opinion expressed by Brett, J., in Har Pershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh (2) at pages 200 and 901 of the report.

JOSESHWAR U. MOTI.

In my opinion, the mortgaged property was directly and specifically in question in the prior mortgagee's suit which was being actively prosecuted when it was dealt with in the second mortgagee's suit. There is ample authority for holding that the dostrine of lis pendens applies to involuntary transfers: vide Har Pershad Lal v. Dulmardan Singh (2). Har Shankor Prosad Singh v. Shew Gobind Shaw (12), Gobind Chunder Roy v. Guru Ohurn Kurmokar (13), Radhamadhub Holdar v. Monokur Mukerji (14) and Moti Lil v. Karrabuldin (6).

On the ground, therefore, of the transfer to the defendant having been made during the active proceention of the plaintiff's suit, the latter is, in my opinion, entitled to a decree for possession subject to the defendants' right to redeem.

DHCBLEY, A. J. C .- (July 7, 1921) .- In this Reference the respective rights of two successive mortgagees over the same properly have to be determined. The plaintiff Jagesh. war is the representative in interest of the prior mortgagee, while the puisne mortgagee is represented by the defendant Moti.

2. The first mortgage, which was a registered one, was executed on 25th May 1882, and was for its enforcement put in Snit No. 766 of 1910, instituted on 5th August 1910, in the Court of the Senior Sub Judge, Nagpur. To that suit the subsequent mertgagee was not made a party. The suit was contested and, finally, a preliminary forcolocure decree was passed on 11th July 1913. Attempts were unsuccessfully made by the defendants in that snit to have that decree set aside and the proceedings dragged on till 31st January 1916. when it was made final.

The second mortgage was an unregistered one and it was executed on 12th March 1901. Suit No. 108 of 1910 was instituted on 25th August 19:0, in the Court of the Senior Munsif, Nagpur, for its enforcement and a preliminary forcelceure deeree was passed on 25th October 1910. It was made final on 18th July 1911 and within the comple of months after that the defendant took possession of the foreelesed property. To this suit on the second mortgage, the prior mortgagee was not made a party.

4. The property was subsequently acquired by the Government for public purposes and the amount of compensation paid for it was received by the defendant. This was in 1915 before the final decree on the prior mortgage was passed. The plaintiff's suit which gives rise to this appeal was brought in December 1916 and it was for the recovery of that amount from the defendant. It is agreed between the parties that for the purpose of determining their rights, the plaintiff's elaim is to be considered as being ore for posses. sion, the compensation money being merely substituted for the property. From the dates given above, it will appear that the claim for the enforcement of the prior mortgage was, on the date of the present suit, barred by limitation.

5. The question referred to us for decision is, whether the plaintiff's suit for possession subject to the defendant's right of redemption was, on the above stated facts, maintainable. During the course of the argument the question as to the applicability of the doctrine of lis rendens was also discussed and it has thus to be seen whether the defendant is, on account of the principle of lis rendens, bound by the decree obtained on the first mortgage, because his own suit, on which he obtained the foreslosure of the property, was subse-

Before proceeding further, I think it necessary to state that to the suit brought on the first mortgage, certain other persons who had taken subsequent mortgages were made parties. It will thus be apparent that the first merigagee was anxious to bring on record all persons interested in the property and that his omission to implead the present defendant could not have been intentional. It is, therefore, fair to assume that this omission was due to his being ignorant of the existence of the deferdant's mortgage, which was, as already stated, an upregistered one. There could not have been any motive on his part for his intentionally omitting to join the defendant as a party to his suit, when he had joined the other subsequent mort. gagees. The other circumstance worthy of mention is, that while it took three years for the prior mortgages to get his preliminary desree and another three years for its being made final, the deferdant could course both his preliminary and final decrees and also possession within one year of his bringing the suit. There was in that suit no contest at all by the mortgagor, who had remained absent and had not defended it.

The questions which are to be answered in this Reference are not free from difficulty. It will, however, be useful to make a few general observations as regards the relationship between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. A mortgage transaction is primarily between two persons-the mortgagor and the mortgages-and these are the only persons who are parties to it. mortgagee may, in order to guard his own interests, be bound to make a diligent enquiry about the previous incum. brances over the property; but he is not expected to keep himself informed of the subsequent transfers by the mortgagor. He looks only to the mortgagor and to the mortgaged property for the estisfaction of the mortgage debt and it is on the mortgagor that he can make a demand for it. He is not expected to hunt up the Registration records to find out if any transfers subsequent to his mortgage have been effected, as he is not bound by any such transfer and as his own rights are wholly unaffested by them. If there is reason in this view, it would apply with very much greater force to subsequent transfers effected by unregistered documents which are not available to the general public for inspection and of which they can have no knowledge or information.

8. This brings me to the consideration of Order XXXIV, rule 1, Code of Civil Procedure, which has, with a slight change, been substituted for section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. It lays down that to a suit on a mortgage, all interested persons are necessary parties and should be so joined. This is, however, merely a rule of procedure, enacted with the object of preventing multifariouscess of suits in respect of the same property and cannot, in my opinion, affect the plaintiff's righte. Its object is not to punish him for his failure to join as parties, persons of whose interest he is ignorant and whose title-deeds he has no means to inspect. It may, no doubt, be said that under this provision it is the duty of the mortgagee, when he seeks to enforce his mortgagee, to dissover persons entitled to the equity of redemption-See Norender

Nargin Singh v. Dwarka Lal (15). It may also be said that when the later mortgage is a duly registered dosument, the earlier morigages is presumed to have notice of it at the time of briniging his suit: See Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (10), and that the possession of the subsequent transferes should put him on enquiry. But to say that he is bound to implead all persons interested in the property, whether he has or has not notice of their interest is to ask him to do an impossible thing, It would be unjust to hold that his rights as a prior mortgagee would be injuriously affected, if he failed to implead in his suit a subsequent mortgagee who got his unregistered mortgage behind his back and of whose existence he could not even after due dilligence be made aware. If the question of notice were material in this case, it would have been for the defendant to plead specifically and to prove that the prior mortgages had at the time his snit was instituted notice of his interest in the mortgaged property. See Ram Nath v. Lachman (16) and Lala Suraj Prosad v. Golab Ohand (17).

9. Coming back to Order XXXIV, rule 1. it will be seen that the words: "Provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest," which were to be found in sestion 85 have been omitted from the new rule. This omission does not, however, mean any change in the law and was not meant to affect the respective rights of the plaintiff and of the excluded parties. As observed by Dr. Gour in his Law of Transfer the above quoted proviso was quite unnecessary, if not misleading. It ereated an impression that the rights of a person whom the plaintiff was not bound to join as a party might be out off by a decree in a suit in which he was not represented. That was not the intention of section 85 and under it the ignorance of the plaintiff could not affect the right to redeem of a person interested in the equity of redemption. That right remained unaffested under the old section 85, as it now remains unaffected under the new rule 1, whether the plaintiff has or has not notice of the subsequent interest. The new rule does not, therefore, make any change in law nor does it affect the rights of the plaintiff or of the persons excluded from his suit.

10. Though the question of notice is not thus very material and though it does not affect the legal rights of the parties it assumes importance when one has to find out and interpret the law governing those rights. It is argued that the law should be interpreted as it is, without any consideration of equity or of its sonsequences. This is too broad a proposition, and interpreting law, equitable principles as its consequences cannot be entirely overlooked. We, for instance, see that though the wording of section 50 of the Registration Act is clear and unambiguous, it has always been intera special reference to the preted with equitable principle of notice and it has been held not to apply where of the competing deeds, the later is affected with notice of the earlier. In determining the respective rights of the parties, therefore, the fact that by a certain interpretation unjust results would follow and that a rightful person would suffer for no fault of his, on account of circumstances over which he had no control and for which he could not be held responsible, cannot be lost sight of. If by another interpretation this result would not follow, that interpretation must be adopted.

11. A person taking a transfer in respect of property which is already mortgaged, obtains only an equity of redemption as against the mortgagee, whose rights under the previous mortgage are left unaffected. All that the subsequent transferee elaim is to redeem the prior mortgagee. That right of redemption is left untouched, when he is not impleaded in the mortgage suit and has not been given a chance to redeem. Persons who have taken transfers of property subject to a mortgage cannot be bound by proceedings in a subsequent suit between the prior mortgages and the mortgagor. which they to have not been made parties: Umes Chunder Sircar v. Zahur Fatima (11). The subsequent trans. feree has got to be afforded an opportunity to redeem. He is not, however, entitled to anything more by reason of the fact that the plaintiff had omitted to implead him in his sait as defendant. This omission can neither improve his position nor the reverse-Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (18). The failure to implead an interested person in a mortgage suit cannot equitably be treated as placing him in a better position than he would have osenpied, had he been made a party to the former suit, -See Gangadas v. Bhikiji (9). If in execution of a decree obtained in a suit on a mortgage, to which the puisne mortgagee was not made a party, the property is purchased by a third person, the puisne mortgages has as against the purchaser the same rights as he had against the mortgagor and the prior mortgagee, He may redeem him as pricr mortgages or thereafter foreelose him as mortgagor—Pandurang Jas.

vant v. Sakharchand Malji (7).

12. In these cases the question of limitation did not arise and they are not, therefore, on all fours with the case before us. The case of Far Pershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh (2) is, however, very similar to the present one and in it the question of limitation was specifically raised. On the date of the second suit by the first mortgages for possession, the limitation for enforcing the first mortgage had expired and it was held by two out of the three learned Judges, that the first mortgages was entitled to a desree for possession on failure of the defendant to redeem. It would not be quite correct to say that the learned Judges had failed to consider the question of limitation, as the point was specifically raised and as the judgment of the learned dissentient Judge was based on it. This view was followed in a subsequent case of the same High Court-Ganga Das Bhattar v. Jogendra Nath Mitra (3), and it was held that, under similar circomstances, the decree obtained on the first mortgage doss not become intructuous against subsequent transferess, merely on account of their not being joined in the suit. In that ease, too, the enforcement of the first mortgage had become time barred on the day of the second suit for possession and still the plaintiff was held entitled to possession, subject to the right of redemption of the subsequent transferers. True, these cases were decided when section 25 of the Transfer of Property Act was in force, but as already observed; JOGESEWAR U. MOTI, Order XXXIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, did not make any shange in the respective rights of the parties. There is, however, a later case involving the same question, after the new Civil Procedure Code had been brought into operation. In Babu Lal v. Jalakia (4), the facts of which were very similar, it was held that the suit for possession was maintainable and that the subsequent mortgages was entitled to nothing more than an opportunity of paying off the prior mortgage. ease, too, the same question of limitation was raised. It will be aseful to quote from the judgment of the learned Judge (Piggott, J.,) portions relevant to the present eace, as the view expressed therein coineides with mine and as I am basing my judgment on it:

It seems clear to me, therefore, that the present suit is neither a suit for sale on the mortgage of Ostober 16th, 1893, nor a snit to foreelose that mortgage: it is not a suit on that mortgage at all. It is a suit brought after that mortgage had been extinguished upon a different cause of action, namely, the plaintiff's failure to cb. tain possession of the property purchased at the sale of July 30th, 1912 Babu Lal's purchase was first in point of time but he purchased at a sale held on a decree obtained by a paisne mortgagee in a suit in which the prior mortgagee was not impleaded. What was put up for sale and purchased by Babu Lal was the equity of redemption, sabject to the rights of the prior mortgagee. Babu Lal has a elear right to redeem the first mortgage and this right has not been affected by anything which took place in the course of in consequence of the plaintiff's suit on her mortgage to which the puiere mortgagee was no party......

"The plaintiff was bound...to implead the puisne mortgagee....The failure to do this has led to the present litigation; but the necessary parties are now before the Court and the duty of the Court is simply to work out the equities between them....I hold that Babu Lal is entitled to nothing more than ...an opportunity of paying off the prior mortgage...

"In arriving at this conclusion I have disposed of the plea of limitation in the only form...it bas...been taken by the appaliant himself. The present suit is not brought on the mortgage of Ostober 16th, 1898, but upon a cause of action long subsequent, and is well within limitation in respect of the said cause of action." (Pages 1154. 55*).

13. In assepting the correctness of this view I have not lost sight of the difficulty that faces me, and it is the ruling of our own High Court given by Mittra, A. J. C., in the case of Raghunath v. Sheolal (1). He follows the opinion of the dissentient Judge in preference to that of the other two Judges, deciding the case of Har Pershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh (2) already cited. I have given my most earnest and eareful attention to the question but have, with the utmost respect to the learned Judge who decided the case of Raghunath v. Sheolai (1), to differ from him. If his view were assepted as correct, valuable rights of innocent persons like the present plaintiff would be injuriously affected for no fault of theirs. It caunot be said that by the asceptance of the other view, the rights of the subsequent transferees excluded from the first mortgage suit would be injuriously affected. They had only a right of redemption and of it they would not be deprived. With very great reluctance. therefore, I have to differ from the view laid down in the case of Raghunath and to follow that laid down by the majority in the case of Har Prashad.

To the question referred my answer is, therefore, in the affirmative and my opinion is that the plaintiff is, on the facts stated, entitled to possession, of course, subject to the defendant's right of redemption.

was not specifically put in the order of Reference, it was allowed to be argued, as it arose out of the facts of the case. It is, therefore, necessary to express an opinion on it. It was contended for the plaintiff appellant that the defendant's suit for foreclosure having been instituted subsequent to his own, the decree obtained by the defendant must, under the provisions of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, be considered to have been subject to the result of the previous suit. This contention finds support from the judgment of Brett, J., given in the case of HarPershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh(2)

already sited. Though the wording of the section- the property in suit cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit or proceeding" would seem to indiest; that only voluntary transfers or dispositions of property were prohibited, the dcctrine of lis perdens has been held be applicable to involuntary sales effected through Civil Courts as well-See Byramii Jamset, i v. Chunilal Laichand (5), Moti Lal v. Karrabuldin (6) and Har Shankar Prasad Singh v. Shew Gorind Sham (12). But these and other eases on the subject refer to the Court sales held in execution of money desrees. The question is, whother a deeree for sale or for foreclosure obtained on a mortgage can be said to transfer or otherwise deal with the property covered by it. In my opinion the effect of such a decree is not to transfer or deal with property or any right in it from the date of that decree. The decree merely erforces the transfer already made under the mortgage and the title of the anotion-purchaser under the sale deeree or of the mortgagee under the forceleaure decree, relater, as observed by Mitira, J., in Har Tershad Lal's case (2), to the date of the original mortgage. The decree does not create any new right nor does it for the first time affect the property mentioned in it. Only the rights already oreated under the mortgage are declared in the decree and under the decree and by its mere force there is no new transfer or dealing with the property. It is contended that the right of sale or the right for possoebion are independent of .the mortgage and are brought into existence by the sale or foreelosure deeree. contention is not sound. The right to obtain a sale of the property or its foreelosure on the default in payment of the mortgage. debt is secured to the mortgages by the terms of the mortgage itself and is not a sreation of the decree. The only thing is that, for the enforcement of that right, the mortgagee has got to go to the Court. That the plaintiff's contention is not sound can be shown by an illustration. Suppose A takes a sale deed in respect of its property from its owner; subsequently B also takes a similar sale deed. B brings a suit for possession on the strength of his sale-deed; A's suit for possession on the strength of his sale deed is subsequently brought. A is not made a party to B's suit, nor is B a party to the suit filed by A. Both obtain decrees for possession. Will B be permitted to plead successfully that as he brought his east first, the result of A's suit would be enbject to the decree in the first suit and that possession which A would take on the strength of the decree in his favour would be subject to the decree for possession chiaired by B? Certainly not. The order ic which the suits are instituted, or in which the decrees are obtained have nothing to do with the rights either of A or B which are based on and which relate to their respective cale deeds. In the precent case, the defendant's contention that as his foreologure decree was obtained first, there was nothing left to be foreelosed under the plaintiff's subsequent decree, would not be beard, as the plaintiff's right to foreelcsure was created by the mortgage and not by the decree. Similarly, the plaintiff cannot be permitted to plead lis pendens and be does not get any better right, because his suit was instituted earlier. If the dostrine of lis gendens were held applicable to such cases, the subsequent mortgages would be deprived even of his right of redemption. The respective rights of the plaintiff and of the defendant are based on their mortgage. deeds and remain unaffected by the order in which the suits are brought or decrees obtained.

My opinion, therefore, is that the dostrine of lis pendens does not apply to the facts of the present case.

Pleading-Plaintiff setting up prescriptive right, whether should be allowed to succeed on basis of customary right-Remand on issue not raised in pleadings-Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 25.

When a plaintiff comes into Court on a specific allegation of prescriptive right, and that case is completely met by the defendant and the Trial Court, which comes to the conclusion that the evidence of prescriptive user was in a large measure unreliable, he cannot in appeal set up a new case of customary right, nor would the Appellate Court be justified in entertaining that case, and in remitting it for re-hearing on an issue not raised in the pleadings or even suggested in the Trial Court. JUDGMENT,-This appeal is directed against an order of remand made in a suit for the establishment of a prescriptive right to bury the dead in the disputed land, for a permanent injunction to restrain interference with such right and for incidental reliefs, The subject-matter of the litigation is a hillock which was included in the Reserve Forest of the Government up till 1907. In that year the defendant obtained a settlement from the Government and has since then been in possession. The plaintiffs, who are Moslem residents of the adjoining village of Talberia, allege that the Moslems of the locality have in the past buried the dead in the disputed tract, but were resisted by the defendant on the 26th October 1914. They assert that, from time immemorial and for more than a century, the hillock has been used as a burial ground, openly, continuously, without interruption and as of right, and that they have thereby asquired prescriptive right therein. They accordingly instituted this suit on the 1st November 1916 for the establishment and enforcement of the alleged prescriptive right. The defendant repudiated the claim as neither founded on fact nor On these pleadings, sustainable in law. twelve issues were raised. It is sufficient to refer to the eighth issue, which was framed in the following terms: "Is there any public or private easement?" The Subordinate Judge answered the question in the negative. He held that the evidence did not establish that the plaintiffs or the other villagers of Talberia had ever buried their dead in the hillock before 1911 and that the plaintiffs could not claim a right to use the land as a graveyard by prescription. In this view the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. Upon appeal it was argued before the District Judge that what the plaintiffs claimed was not a prescriptive right, but a customary right. The District Judge thereupon framed the following new issue and remanded the suit for re-trial: "Have the plaintiffs asquired a customary right to bury their dead in the suit land? If so, is this right valid to the extent that defendant must be restrained by a perpetual injunction from interfering with that right? And is that customary right to be held as existing over the whole of the suit land? If not, to which part of the suit land, if any, is that customary right to be held to exist?" The defendant has appealed against the order of remand.

No anthority has been poduced in support of the elaim put forward in the plaint, namely, that the plaintiffs bad acquired a prescriptive right to use the disputed land as a burial ground by reason of the interment of dead bodies therein for more than a century openly, continuously, without interruption and as of right. Such a prescriptive right was asserted in the case of Wooldridge v. Smith (1) but was negatived by a Fall Bench of the Missouri Supreme Court. Land for use as a burial ground may be asquired through purchase or dedication. But law does not recognise that an easement by prescription can be created by the mere fact that dead bodies are placed in graves on the land of another and permitted to remain there for the prescriptive term. The Indian Easemente Act contains the following definition of an easement : "An easement is a right which the owner or ossapier of certain land possesses as such, for the beneficial enjoyment of that land, to do and continue to do something, or to prevent and continue to prevent something being done, in, or upon, or in respect of, certain other land not his own. The land for the beneficial enjoyment of which the right exists is called the dominant heritage, and the owner or occupier thereof the dominant owner; the land on which the liability is imposed is called the servient heritage, and the owner or occupier thereof the servient owner." By no stratch of language can the right to bury in a given tract of land be deemed a right imposed forthe beneficial enjoyment of land. In such a ease; there is no such thing as a dominant heritage to which the easement right can attach and the right to bury upon a tract of land in no sense falls within the general definition of the term "easement." It may be conseded that, where the owner of land has asquiessed in the burial of dead bodies on his property, apart from all questions of asquisition of title by adverse possession, a Court of justice may prevent the desceration of the graves. But this does not justify the inference that the placing of dead bodies in graves upon the land of another creates an easement by prescription. Such an easement is unknown to law and it is well settled that the Court will not create a new species of easement especially if the easement claimed constitutes a naisance: Hira Lil v. Lokenath (2). In view of these difficulties, the plaintiffs set up a sustomary right to bury the dead on the disputed trast; they may have been encouraged to put forward such a elaim at the appellate stage by reason of the decision in Mohidin v. Shivlingappa (3). That case is an authority for the proposition that, where a certain section of the Moslem community had been for many years in the habit of burying their dead near a Darga on the land of the plaintiff who sued for an injunction to restrain them in future, the right of burial e aimed by the defendants was not an ease. ment but a sustomary right which, being confined to a limited class of persons and a limited area of land, was sufficiently certain and reasonable to be recognised as a valid local enstom. We do not desire to express an opinion upon the view adopted in the ease just mentioned. The question, when it arises, may require eareful consideration, whether a eastomary right of user of a place as a burial ground or a cremation ground may be acquired especially as against the Orown. Before such a custom can be recognized, it will be necessary to investigate whether it possesses what has been considered as the essential attributes of a custom, namely, that it must be immemorial, it must be reasonable, it must have continued without interraption sinse its immemorial origin, and it must be certain in respect of its nature generally as well as in respect of the locality where it is alleged to obtain and the parsons whom it is alleged to affect; Mahamaya Debi v. Huridas Haldar (4). Bat it is indispensable that when a enstomery right is elaimed, it should be specifically pleaded; all the essential requisites to its validity and binding effect must be averred and the sustom so pleaded must when put in issue be proved as laid. When a plaintiff sets up a prescriptive right he cannot in fairness to the defendant be allowed to succeed on the basis of a sustomary right. The two are fundamentally distinct, for, as has been well said, sustom differs from prescription in the fact that prescription is the making of a right while custom is the making of a law. The District Judge in this case has framed a new issue, apparently under Order XLI, rule 25, but this should not have been done as the new issue framed did not arise upon the pleadings. In this connection, reference may be made to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Ram Chandra Bhanj Deo v. Secretary of State for India (5) where Lord Parker observed that, even if an Appellate Court be deemed competent to remit a case for re-hearing on an issue not raised in the pleadings nor even suggested in the Trial Court, this cught only to be done in exceptional cases, for good cause shown, and on payment of all costs thrown away. In the present case, the respondents showed no ground whatever for the indulgence they elaimed and obtained in the lower Appellate Court; they did not suggest that they had been in any way taken by surprise or had discovered fresh facts of which they were nnaware when the case was tried before the primary Court. They came into Court on a specific allegation of prescriptive right of a novel character. That case was completely met by the defendant and the Subordinate Judge same to the conclusion that the evidence of prescriptive user was in a large measure unreliable. When they went on appeal, they realised that the decision of the Trial Court was unimpeashable both on the facts and the law, and accordingly set up a new ease of enstomary right. If this case is entertained, the plaint must be amended and the defendant permitted written statement. to file a new new case would then have to be tried on fresh evidence. This is a procedure which sannot be seriously defended.

The result is, that this appeal is allowed, the order of the District Judge set Urgent need of money on the part of a borrower is not in itself sufficient to place the lender in a position to dominate his will within the meaning of section 6 of the Contract Act [p 845, col 2]

Paragraph 1, Schedule II', (ivil Procedure Code, creates an absolute disability on the part of a debtor to deal with property while the powers conferred by the Schedule on the Collector are in force [p 648, col 1.]

o special form of permission is required by paragraph 1, Schedule III, Civil Procedure Code, to enable a judgment debtor to execute a mortgage of his immoveable property. It is sufficient that the Collector knows that the mortgage is being executed and that he does in substance sanctionits execution by an order in writing. Nor is it necessary under that paragraph that every detail of the transaction should be sanctioned by the Collector or even that there should be a separate permission in respect of each deed. All that is required is that the judgment-debor should have his written permission to mortgage the property. The permission mentioned in the paragraph need not take the form of a certificate under Order XXI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, for this rule and paragraph 1: of Schedule III are two entirely independent provisions and there is no warrant for reading the former into the latter. [p. 617, col. 2; p. 613, cols. 1 & 2]

The provision contained in paragraph 11, Schedule III, Civil Procedure Code, makes it illegal for a vivil Court to issue process against the property during the period the powers conferred by the Schedule are exercisable by the Collector, and a process which was illegal when it was issued cannot become effective when the Collector ceases to be in charge of the execution proceedings. [p 654, col. 2]

The explanation to section 64, Civil Procedure Code, gives no priority to claims under section 74, Civil Procedure Code, apart from the attachment in connection with which they are made and under which they are enforceable, so that a claim to rateable distribution made in connection with an attachment ceases to be enforceable under it when the attachment is withdrawn. [p. 650, col. 1;]

Section 61, Civil Procedure Code, refers only to claims enforceable under the attachment effected prior to the alienation, and not to claims enforceable under the decree in execution of which the attachment was made. [p. 651, col. 1.]

Where there is an explicit order putting an end to the attachment, Order XXI, rule 5; Livil Procedure Code, has no application, nor is there anything in the rule which limits the power of the Court to pass such an order. [p. 65;, col 1.]

Order XLI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, should ordinarily be confined to cases of cross-objections urged against the appellant; rule 33 of the same Order, however, gives the Court a very wide discretion, and cases may occasionally arise where justice requires that cross-objections against a corespondent should be heard. But, where one of several defendants against whom a decree is passed has allowed the period for appealing to elapse, the rule does not revive his right simply because a codefendant has instituted an appeal against the plaintiff on entirely different grounds. The same principle applies in the case of a respondent objector who does not file any appeal himself whose interests are identical with that of the appellant and who might, had he chosen, have joined in the appeal. JUDGMENT .- Sheikh Muzaffar Ali and Sheikh Asghar Ali, Talukdars of the Gandara Estate, were beavily in debt. Various creditore, among whom Sahu Parshotam Das and Balmakund Kapur are important for the purpose of this ease, were seeking to sell up the estate in execution of decrees. Execution proceedings were transferred to the Collector. With the Collector's approval a loan of Rs. 9,26,000 was obtained from the Maharaja of Balrampur to pay off the ereditors on the security of a mortgage by conditional cale, dated 2sth October 1914. It was afterwards found that the amount due under the various decrees had not been properly calculated and that the amount advanced was insufficient. A further sum of Rs. 2,16,425-10-0 was advanced by the Maharaja on the same terms. This avdance was seenred by a mortgage of 10th August 1915 of the same property and in identical terms with the mortgage of 29th Ostober 1914. Sheikh Asghar Ali had died between the execution of the two mortgages and the second mortgage was executed by Sheikh Muzaffer Ali and Sheikh 1kbal Ali, son of Asghar Ali, who are the principal defendants in the pres sent litigation.

MUHAMMAD MUZIFFAR ALI U, BHAGWATI PRASAD,

Suit No. 10 of 1916 now in appeal before us was instituted by the Maharaja of Balrampur for foreelosure of the mortgaged property on the basis of the two mortgages mentioned above, and the questions which arise in the various appeals are, how far and in what manner the mortgage is enforceable

(a) against the mortgagors, and

(b) against other ereditors of the mortgagors.

Over Rs. 10,18,500 of the sum advanced by the Maharaja was paid into Court for distribution to creditors holding decrees against the estate. The balance, apart from the cost of the stamp, etc., was paid out of Court in satisfaction of mortgages and other claims. Nevertheless, a number of creditors atill remained unsatisfied. These creditors have been seeking to enforce their various decrees by attachment and sale of the Gandara Estate. Hence they have been impleaded as defendants Nos. 3 to 21 in the suit.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the mortgage deeds are valid and enforceable according to their terms, but that the defendants Nos. 3 and 5 to 14 are entitled to priority over one or both of the deeds by reason of having attached the mortgaged property prior to their execution. He found that the other defendant ereditors, namely, the defendants Nos. 4 and 15 to 21, were not entitled to priority over the mortgaged debt but that by virtue of subsequent attach. ments they had a right of redemption under section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act. He accordingly made a decree permitting the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (the mortgagors) and the defendants Nos. 4 and 15 to 21 to redeem the mertgages. If they failed to do so, the plaintiff was required, as a condition of foreclosure, to pay up within seven months the amounts due to the defendants Nos. 3 and Against the decree five appeals have been filed by the plaintiff, the principal defendants, and three of the ereditors respectively.

The appeal of Muzaffar Ali and Ikbal Ali is Appeal No. 1 of 1920.

The plaintiff's appeal is Appeal No. 7 of 1920.

The appeal of the Bank of Upper India is Appeal No. 2 of 1920.

The appeal of Rae Bishamber Nath Tandan is Appeal No. 13 of 1920.

The appeal of the Allahabad Bank, Ltd., is Appeal No. 14 of 1920.

The mortgagors have pressed their appeal on five grounds. Two of these attack the validity of the mortgage, the third is concerned with the relief to be granted to the plaintiff, and, the fourth and fifth deal with points of procedure. The grounds are:—

(1) that the mortgages were obtained by undue influence and that their terms are

harsh and unconscionable;

(2) that the mortgages are invalid on the ground that the mortgagors did not obtain the written permission of the Collector as required by paragraph 11 of Schedule III of the Code of Civil Procedure;

(3) that a decree for sale should be substituted for a decree for foreclosure:

(1) that the Court below wrongly rejected an application for amendment of the written statement and framing of new issues;

(5) that the Court below erred in not granting an application for the examination of the appellants and of the plaintiff by commission.

The second plea was also taken by Babu Bishumbhar Nath Tandan in Appeal No. 13. Both the second and third pleas have been adopted by all three of the appealing creditors, though the third plea is not to be found in any of their grounds of appeal. The first, fourth and fifth pleas are peculiar to the appellants.

The plea of undue influence is based on section 6 of the Contract Act. In order to establish it, it must be shown, first, that the plaintiff was in a position to dominate the will of the mortgagors and, secondly, that he used that position to obtain an unfair advantage. If the terms of the contract appear on the face of them to be unconsciousable or are shown to be so, the second point may be presumed under sub section (3).

The argument of the appellants was mainly devoted to showing that certain terms of the mortgages are prima facie unconscionable. On the question whether the mortgages was in a position to dominate the will of the mortgagors they rely mainly on the circumstance that the latter were heavily indebted and that their estates were threatened with sale in execution of decrees held by their oreditors. There had been no previous transactions between the parties to give the mortgages any hold over the mortgagors. In fact, the mortgage seems to have been entered into largely for their benefit to give them one last shapes, though it might be a slight one, of saving the estate from sale. The admitted fact that the transaction was entered into with the knowledge and approval of the Deputy Commissioner of the district raises a strong presumption against undue influence having been employed. He was fully sognizant of the negotiations which were taking place, as is shown by Exhibit 38 and numerous other papers on the resord, and the money was paid to the eraditors in his presence. There is also the further fact that the defendants were represented by a capable and experienced manager through whom the transaction was negotiated. Kunwar Kamta Pershad, P. W. No. 14, a Deputy Collector who had retired from Government service in the previous year, was appointed by the defendants as their manager in January 1914 and the whole of the negotiations were earried on by him in consultation with his principles, appears from his evidence and that of the plaintiff's manager, the terms of the loan were fully discussed between the parties, and there is absolutely no room for the suggestion that the plaintiff was in a position to dominate or did dominate the will of the borrowers in any way. It has been elearly laid down by the Privy Conneil in Sundar Roer v. Rai Sham Krishen (1), that urgent need of money on the part of the borrower is not in itself sufficient to place the lender in a position to dominate his will within the meaning of section 16 of the Contract Act.

Even, therefore, if the terms were unconscionable, the requirements of section 16 are not fulfilled. It does not, however, appear that they were. Only two terms have been pressed before us as being such. The first is the agreement between the parties that the profits of the property should be taken to be Bs. 47,472-86 and that the value of the property should be calculated at 25 times this amount. It has not been shown either that the profits were wrongly stated or that the number of years purchase agreed on was in any way unusual, It was perfectly open to the parties, for the purpose of avoiding future disputes, to as to the amount of the profits. There is nothing either unusual or improper in such a contract. The only evidense relied on by the appellants for the purpose of showing that the property has been undervalued consists in the fact that in a sale statement, dated 27th May 1915, which was submitted to Government in connection with the proposed sale of the property under Parshotam Das's decree the value of 52 villages out of the 62 now mortgaged was shown as Rs. 15.68,437. and that in a sale proclamation dated 24th June 1915 in connection with the same case the value of the same 52 villages was shown as Rs. 23,98,437. The totals are not given either in the statement or the proslamation but are arrived at by adding up the value assigned to each village. The values given in a sale proclamation are not always very assurate and the fact that two such diverse estimates were arrived at within a month of each other shows that very little weight ean be attached to these statements for the purpose of showing what the property was actually worth.

The appellants' main argument is direct. ed against the condition of forcelosure. The term of the mortgage was seven years, but it was agreed that if at any time the unpaid interest and principal was found to exceed the value of the property as calculated in the deed, the mortgages should be entitled to forselose at ones. This was, on the face of it, a very reasonable condition for the protection of the mortgages who could not be expected to allow the debt to go on increasing when its amount already exceeded the value of its seenrity. After the first deed had been exeented it was found, as we have seen, that the amount due to decree holders very much exceeded the original estimate and under the second deed a further loan of Rs. 2,16,425.10.0 was made on the same security and on the same terms. It is now said that a calculation of the amount of uppaid interest on the first deed shows that at the time of execution of the second deed the amount due already exceeded the value of the property as agreed on between the parties, and, therefore, the mortgagee might have taken advantage of this stipulation to forcelose at once. In reply to this the plaintiff asks, what was he to do under the eireumstances ? Unless he made a further advance the purpose of the original loan would be frustrated, as the unsatisfied ereditors would come down on the property. On the other hand, he did not want to throw his money away, especially so large a sum as Rs. 2,16,425 10 0, and for the protection of his own interests it was necessary to retain the power of foreelosure in his bands in same the mortgagors proved unable to pay interest on the enhanced loan. In fact the mortgagee waited for nearly six months after the execution of the second deed before putting this clause into force and only did so when the mort. gagore failed to pay anything towards the instalment of interest which fell due on 1st January 1916: Having regard to the eireumstances under which the deeds were executed we should not be justified in holding that this term was unconsciouable.

The fourth and 6fth pleas may be very briefly disposed of. The evidence of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was recorded from the 5th to the 22nd August 1917, and again from the 19th to the 25th March 1919, and on the latter date they definitely stated that their evidence was closed. The application for amendment on which they now wish to rely was only made on 6th May 1919 after the case had been pending for over two years, after the whole of the evidence had been closed, and only a few days before the date fixed for arguments. The acceptance of the application would have meant entering into fresh evidence after the case was practically over and the learned Sabbordinate Judge was entirely in the right in rejecting it. As a matter of fact, several of the points which the defendants desired to raise were included in the issues already framed and have been fully discussed in the judg. ment

The fifth plea is based on an application dated loth August 1917 saying that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 wished to give syidence and were too ill to attend, they also wished to examine the plaintiff who was exempted from appearance in the Civil Courte, and they, therefore, asked for the issue of a commission for their cwn examination and that of the plaintiff. They asked, at the same time, for the adjournment of the case, Now the plaintiff's evidence was closed on 22nd June 1917 (except that the crossexamination of one witness was still to be completed) and dates were then fixed for the hearing of the evidence summoned by the appellants. The appellants did not inelude either themselves or the Maharaja among the witnesses whom they desired to eall. They put in no affidavit in support of the allegation that they were ill, and their application if allowed would have resulted in the adjournment of the ease. In fact, they applied for adjournment along with their application. Under these stances, we are unable to hold that the Court was bound to grant their appliestion.

The plea based on paragraph 11 of Schedule III of the Code of Civil Procedure is discuss. ed by the learned Subordinate Judge under issue No. 16. He rejects it on two ground; first, that paragraph 11 was framed for the benefit of the judgment ereditor and that, therefore, the attachment revived as soon as the Collector seased to be in charge of the property, and, secondly, that in fact the written permission of the Collector was obtained. The plaintiff's Counsel has, wirely, we think, not relied on the first of these arguments. Where the Lagislature intended that a particular alienation should be invalid only as against the claims of the attaching creditor it has said so in plain language, as in the case of section 64 of the same Code. The language of Schedule III is widely different and, as was hell in Ganga Prasad v. Ganga Bakhsh Singh (2), creates an absolute disability on the part of the debtor to deal with the property while the powers conferred by the Schedule on the Collector are in force. The language used is similar to that of sestion 37 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act, 1912. A very wide construction was placed by the Privy Conneil on similar language in an earlier Court of Wards ersetment [Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Shadi Lal (3) . A similar phrase competent to contract' is used in sections 10 and 11 of the Contract Act, and it is now well-settled that transactions by persons who are incompetent to contract, such as minors, are wholly void. The Khushalchand Premra Marwadi v. Nandram Sahebram Marwadi (4), relied upon by the learned Subordinate Judge, does not really support his argument, as the passage on page 525* to which he presumably refers is dealing with a claim under sections 273 and 295 of the old Code and the cases referred to in support of the argument are cases under these sections, and not decisions passed with reference to section 325A of the old Code which corresponds to paragraph 11 of Schedule III. The argument based on the latter provision was dealt with on page 52. of the report and it was held that when the alienation in question was made the Collector was not exercising the powers referred to in the sestion.

The learned Subordinate Judge has, however, found that the written permission of the Collector was in fact obtained. The argument to the contrary is a purely technical argument. It has been admitted on all hands before us that the Collector was aware of the transaction and that it had his approval. The appellants argue that the terms of the mortgage are so hard that they are fully justified in relying even on a technical plea to get rid of them. We have now to examine the evidense on which the learned Subordinate Judge's finding is based. It is common ground that, as shown by Exhibit 211, execution proceedings against the 62 villages now in suit in connection with the decree of Babu Parshotam Das were transferred to the Collector on 7th November 1912. and that on 8th January 1913 the Collector issued notices under paragraph 3 of the Schedule. Except for a short interval between March and June 1915, when the file was returned to the Civil Court for the purpose of substitution of names on the death of Sheikh Asghar Ali, the powers conferred under Schedule III remained vested in the Collector until 21st August 1915, when the file was returned to the Civil Court (Exhibit 20). Applications were made from time to time to the Collector to stay sale-proseedings in order to enable the judgment debtors to raise a loan from the Balrampur Estate. One such application dated 5th June 19 4 (Exhibit 218) was signed by the judgment-debtors and their manager Kunwar Kamta Pershad. To this there was appended a certificate from the plaintiff's manager that the Maharaja was prepared to give a loan to the estate on condition that the entire estate would be mortgaged to him as security for satisfaction of the loan. On this application, and another application in similar terms presented on the following day, the Collector passed an order postponing the sale for three months On 8th October 1914, eleven days before the execution of the first of the two mortgages, the defendants' manager wrote a personal letter (Exhibit 36) to the Collector which begins :

"Your Honour knows that the Gandara Estate is going to take a loan from the Maharaja of Balrampur, by executing a mortgage to pay off the debts for which the former estate is going to be sold on the 20th October 1914."

He then states that owing to the absence of the plaintiff's legal adviser a week's time will be necessary to get the deed registered. This would mean that the deed could not be completed before the date fixed for sale. On this letter the Collector passed the following order dated 19th October 1914:—

"As there seems to be ground for believing that the loan will be negotiated, and the decree holders satisfied, I order the postponement of the sale of Gandara Estate to November 1st, 1914."

It seems to us that this order must be read in sounsetion with the application on which it was passed, and that in poetponing the sale in order that the loan may be negotiated and the decree holders satisfied, the Collector was clearly referring to the execution of the mortgage, which he knew only required the approval of the plaintiff's legal advisor and the formality of registrations for its completion, and which actually was executed and registered within the time allowed by him in his order. No special form of permission is required by the Schedole and it is sufficient that the Collector knew that the mortgage was being executed and that he did in substance sanction its execution by an order in writing. After the execution of the mortgage the sum of Rs. 8,90,000 was sent by the plaintiff to the Collector for payment to the creditors and, as bas been already mentioned, was paid to them his presence. After this we have, in on 4th December 1914, a letter from the Collector to the plaintiff's manager (Exhibit 30) informing him that the amount sent was insufficient, as interest due since the preparation of the decrees had not been ealenlated and asking what he proposes to do in the matter as interest is mounting up every day, and unless the Maharaja took some further steps it might be necessary to fix a date for sale. this letter fresh negotiations were entered into between the parties. In the following month Asghar Ali, the father of the second defendant, died and his death delayed the negotiations. On 5th February the Deputy Commissioner wrote to the plaintiff's manager a letter (Exhibit 62) in which he said :

"I hope you will see the Gandara affairs are settled by the end of the month as promised by your legal adviser."

Three days later, and evidently in reply to Exhibit 32, the plaintiff's manager wrote to the Deputy Commissioner a letter (Exhibit 63) informing him that he had asked Kunwar Kamta Parehad, the judg. ment debtors' manager, to come and arrange for the execution of a supple. mentary mortgage deed by the Gandara Talukdars and for payment of their dues to the two remaining eraditors. He hopes that the matter will be settled before the and of the month as desired. The last sentence evidently refers to the wish expressd in Exhibit 62. Ultimately, the second mortgage was executed, as already stated. It is not necessary under paragraph 11 that every detail of the transaction should be sanctioned by the Collector or even that there should be 8 separate permission in respect of each deed All that is required is that the judgmentdebtors shall have his written permission to mortgage the property and that they had this permission sufficiently appears on the face of the documents referred to above.

An ingenious argument was put forward by one of the respondents to the effect that the permission mentioned in paragraph 11 must take the form of a certificate under Order XXI, rule 83. It is said that the first paragraph of the Schedule allows the Collector the choice of three methods of procedure and three only. In this case he must be taken to have acted under clause (a), and under that clause the procedure of Order XXI, rule 83, is obligatory. The most that can be said for this argument is that when the Collector acts purely under clause (a) he must follow the procedure laid down in the rule in question. In this case the Collector did not proceed purely under elause (a). issued a notice to the other creditors under paragraph 3 of the Schedule. In any ease Order XXI, rule 83, and paragraph 11 of the Third Schedule are two entirely independent provisions and there is no warrant for reading the former into the latter.

The third and only remaining plea to be discussed in connection with appeal No. 1 is, that the Court should substitute a decree for sale for a decree for foreelosure. This plea is also urged by the appealing creditors. It is based on the provisions of clause (2) of Order XX IV, rule 4. Civil Procedure Code, which lays down that in a suit for foreelcsure, if the mortgage is not a mortgage by conditional sale, the Court may, at the instance of any party interested, pass a decree for sale in lieu of a decree for forcelosure on such terms as it thinks fit. Assuming that this course is open to the Court, the plea loses all its force in view of the failure of the appellants to show that the property has been undervalued. The security being even at the time of execution of the second deed, and still more when the suit was brought, insufficient to cover the lcap, it is not reasonable to suppose that the plaintiff would ever have agreed to enter into the transaction unless the right of foreelosure had been secured to bim, and there is no legitimate ground wby this Court should interfere to set saide to the plaintiff's prejudice the bargain made by the parties. It is by no means certain even that the Court has power to do so. The mortgage is described in the deed as one by conditional sale (bai bil worfa) and its main provisions are purely such as elearly to some within the definition such a mortgage in section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. It contains, however, a sovenant against failure of the security to the effect that if the mortgagee is found at the suit of any slaimant to have no title to the whole or any part of the mortgaged property, or if any sumbrances on the property other than those spesified in the deed are discovered, the mortgages shall have the right to resover the mortgage-money at once either from the mortgagors personally or from the mortgaged property. The plaintiff's cause of action is based in part on this covenant. He says that the amount of ensumbrances exceeded that specified in the Schedule to the deed. So far as this covenant is concerned, the mortgage appears to be a combination of a simple mortgage with a mortgage by conditional sale and, therefore, to come within the definition of an anomalous mortgage as defined in sestion 98 of the Transfer of Property Act, Section 98, however, provides that in the case of an anomalous mortgage the rights and liabilities of the parties shall be determined by their contract as evidenced in the deed, and it is a question of some difficulty whether Order XXXIV, rale 4, Oivil Procedure Code, was intended to overprovision. On the face of ride this it, there appears to be an inconsistency between the two provisions. They can be brought into harmony if slause (2) of Order XXXIV, rule 4, is deemed to apply only to English mortgages, and this was the view taken by the Judicial Commissioner in an unreported decision in First Civil Appeal No. 16 of 1914 Baquar Hussain v. Balak Ram (5)]. This is also the view taken by Dr. Gour in his Commentary. It is, however, unnecessary to decide the question as, even if we have a discretion in the matter, we do not consider that we ought to exercise it.

The appeals of the Bank of Upper India (Appeal No. 2) and of Babu Bishambhar Nath Tandan (Appeal No. 13) have this feature in sommon that neither of these ereditors applied for attachment of the suit properties prior to the execution of the deeds in suit. They both applied for rateable distribution under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, in connection with the decree of Parshotem Das who admittedly had applied for attachment of the property on 17th September 1912. It was in connection with this decree that execution proceedings were originally transferred to the Collector under section 68 of the Code: It is common ground between the parties that Parehotam Das' degree was satisfied out of the consideration of the two mortgage deeds in favour of the plaintiff and that his attachment was withdrawn. Section 64 of the Code lays down that where property has been attached in execution of a decree, any private transfer of the property shall be void as against claims enforceable under the attachment, and the Explanation appended to the section provides that elaims enforceable under an attachment include elaims for the rateable distribution of the assets under section 73. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the claim of the appellants under their decreas is not a claim enforceable under Parshotam Das' attachment, eines when the attachment itself came to an end, there could no longer be any claim enforceable under it. The appellants contest this view and contend that a claim to rateable distribution made in connection with an attachment continues to be enforceable under it even though the attachment is withdrawn. In other words, they put a claim under section 78 on precisely the same footing as an dependent attachment.

This plea was considered and rejected in an elaborate judgment by a Fall Bench of five Judges of the Madras High Court in the case of Annamalai Chettiar v. Palamalai Pillai (6) in which they followed the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijor Singh Dudhuria (7). The Explanation to section 64, which did not occur in the corresponding provision of the old Code, was added to remove a difference of opinion between the Bombay and Allahabad High Courts as to the scope of the section. The Privy Council decision in Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria (7) was passed under the old Code, but it assumed the correctness of the Bombay decision and is, therefore, a relevant authority with reference to the existing Code. The appellants invite us to hold that the learned Judges of the Madras High Court misunderstood the meaning of the Code and the effect of the Privy Council decision. As their Lordships point, out though the word "attachment" occurs three times in the section (it now occurs four times) the reference is to one and only one attachment. The Explanation elears up a difficulty as to what kinds of elaims are to be regarded as being made under the attachment, but it is still the same attachment which is spoken of. The Explanation gives no priority to elaims under section 73 apart from the attachment in connection with which they were made and under which they are enforceable.

This disposes of the appeal of the Bank of Upper India (Appeal No. 2 of 1920).

Babu Bishambhar Nath Tandan applied for rateable distribution under the attachment effected on the application Balmakund Kapur, defendant No. 8. appears from Exhibit V 4 which is an ap plication of Babu Bishambhar Nath Tandan of 10th April 1915 that he did apply for attachment of the Taluka in execution of his own decree. The order-sheet (Exhibit VI of 24th May 1915 in the same ease (Execution Case No. 79 of 1915), shows that he subsequently stated that he did not wish to attach the villages in his own ease but he applied for rateable distribution in case No. 78 of 1915 which, as appears from Exhibit 175, was the execution ease of Balmakund Kapur. This attachment was never withdrawn, and in fact defendant No. 8 has been given priority over the deeds in suit on the basis of it. Apart from the objection taken by the plaintiff to the validity of this attachment, the appellant would be entitled to priority in respect of it. The learned Subordinate Judge refers to Babu Bishambhar Nath Tandan's application for rateable distribution in connection with Balmakand Kapur's decree on original pages 381 to 383 of his jadgment, but all he says with reference to it is that no order was passed on the application for of defendant No. 8 had been fixed for 23th June 1915 after attachment. It is not contested before us that Babu Bishambhar Nath Tandan had fulfilled the requirements of section 73 by applying for rateable distribution and that he is entitled to the same priority to which Balmakund Kapur himself is entitled.

The case of the Allahabad Bank, Ltd., appellant in Appeal No. 14 stands on a different footing from that of the other appellants, The Bank applied for attachment of the properties in suit on 15th November 1913, The only question in appeal is whether the Bank's claim is a claim enforceable under that attachment within the meaning of section 64, Civil Procedure Code. question turns on the effect of an order of 10th April 1915 which is Exhibit 220 on the record. At that time Asghar Ali, one of the judgment debtore, had died and the record of the execution proceedings had been returned to the Civil Court by the Collector in order that the names of his heirs might be substituted in his place. On this the Civil Court passed the following order:-

"Under the circumstances no further proceedings can be taken in this case under Order XXII, rule 12, Oivil Procedure Code. It is, therefore, ordered that the case having been struck off as unsatisfied be consigned to the record room, and the property under attachment be removed from the register (register se wa quear ho). The decree-holder can file a separate application under the rules for bringing up the names of the heirs in place of Asghar Ali, the deceased judgment debtor. Costs of the case to be upon the judgment debtor."

The register referred to in this order is the register of attached property which the Nazirs of all Civil Courts are required to maintain under paragraph 20; of the Oadh Civil Digest. There appears to be no room for doubt that the effect of the order was to release the attached property and put an end to the attachment. The appellant Bank relies upon Order XXI, rule 57 of the Code, which says that where, after property has been attached, a Court dismisses the application for execution the attachment shall sease. He contends that where, as in the present case, the Court was unable to proceed with the execution owing to a circumstance over which he had no control, namely, the death of one of the judgment debtors, the order passed could not have the effect of putting an end to the attachment. This is not the meaning of the rule. Under the old Code difficulties had arisen where the Court's order simply directed that the execution proceedings be struck off or that the case be consigned to the record room and was silent on the question whether the attach. ment remained in force or not. The present rule was inserted in the new Code to put an end to these doubts. Where there is an explicit order patting an end to the attachment the rule has no applica. tion nor is there anything in the rule which limits the power of the Court to pass such an order. It may be that the learned Subordinate Judge when he passed the order did not foresee all the sonsequeness that would flow from it, but if the Bank felt aggrieved by the order had its remedy by way of appeal, impossible to hold that the order was any way ultra vires. The fact that the Bank put in a fresh application for execution on a date subsequent to the deeds in suit may give it a right of redemption under section 91 of the Transfer of Property Ast but sannot give the Bank priority over the deeds in suit. Section 64 refers only to elaims enforceable under the attachment effected prior to the alienation and not to slaims enforceable under the decree in execution of which the attachment was made. Reference has been made in argument to the fast that on the very day on which the execution application was dismissed and the attachment terminated, the Bank put in a fresh application before the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow asking for substitution of names; but the very application which is relied on as proving this (Exhibit 219) shows that this was done after the previous execution ease had been struck off, and in fact in this application the Bank made a fresh application for attachment of the property. The date of this application is missing in the copy on the record but the prohibitory order passed on it by the Jourt is dated 10th Novem. ber 1916. The Bank's case may be a hard one but the Court below is clearly right in holding that it is not entitled to priority over the deeds in suit.

In Babu Bishambhar Nath Tandan's appeal another of the ereditors Balmakund Restogi, defendant No. 4, filed what purport to be cross-objections under Order XLI, rule 22. These objections are not in any sense directed against the appellant in that appeal; on the contrary, they are substantially the same as the pleas taken in the appeal itself. They are directed against the plaintiff. Balmakund Rastogi was not made a respondent in the plaint. iff's appeal because the plaintiff was quite satisfied with the decree passed against him by the Trial Court. The question is whether, under these eireumstances, the memo. randum of objections somes within the provisions of Order XLI, rule 22. It is true that that rule is wider than the sorresponding provision of the Code of 15-2, but the use of the word "eross-objections" does imply that the objections should be in opposition to the claim made in the appeal though they may affect other respondents as well. The objector relies on a Fall Bench desision of the Madras High Court in Munisami Mudaly v. Abbu Reddy (8) which has been followed by a single . unge of this Court in Second Civil Appeal No. 418 of 1918, printed on page 544 of Volume VI of the Oadh Law Journal Jagannoth v. Hanuman Singh (9)). The Madras judgment is a very short one and gives no reasons beyond the practice of the court and the convenience of having a fixed rule as distinct from the rule laid down by the Calcutta Hight Court in a case cited before them, that it is only in exceptional cases that the respondent may urge a cross-objection against another respondent. We think that the true rule is that laid down by the Patna High Court in Official Trustee of Bengal v. Charles Joseph smith (10), in which the matter has been exhaustively dealt with. It was there said that, where one of several defendants against whom a decree passed has allowed the period for appealing to elapse, there seems no good ground for supposing that the rule intended to revive his right simply because a co-defendant had instituted an appeal against the plaintiff on entirely different grounds. The observation would apply with equal force where the interest of the objector is identical with that of the appellant and he might, had he chosen, have joined in the appeal. The rule laid down by the Court in the judgment is, that—

"The rule should ordinarily be confined to cases of cross-objections urged against the appellant, but rule 33 of the same Order gives the Court a very wide discretion, and cases may coessionally arise where justice requires that cross objections against a co-respondent should be heard."

The provisions of the rule have been interpreted in the same sense by the Calcutta High Court and the interpretation commends itself to us as being in accordance with the intention of the rule. On the merits, the position of this defendant is similar to that of the Bank of Upper India and his objections, if they could be heard, would fail on the same ground.

The plaintiff's appeal, Appeal No. 7 of 1920, is directed against those creditors who have been given priority by the learned Subordinate Judge. He attacks the validity of their attachments under the same provision of law under which they attack the validity of his mortgage, namely, the first clause of paragraph 11 of Schedule III, Civil Procedure Code. The clause in question runs as follows:—

"So long as the Collector can exercise or perform in respect of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property, or any part thereof, any of the powers or duties conferred or imposed on him by paragraphs I to 10, the judgment-debtor or his representative-in-interest shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate such property or part except with the written permission of the Collector, nor shall any Civil Court issue any process against such property or part in execution of a decree for the payment of money."

Execution was transferred to the Collector tor on 7th November 1912. The Collector finally seased to exercise the powers conferred by the Schedule and returned the case to the Civil Court on 21st August

The whole of the executions relied 1915. on by the ereditors who have been sus. sessful before the Subordinate Judge fall within this period. The defendants Nos. 5 to 7 claim that the period from 19th March. 1915 to 24th June 1915 should be exelud. ed, and that their attachments fall within this period. On the former date the were sent bask to the execution cases Oivil Court for substitution of names in consequence of the death of Asghar Ali (tide Exhibits E 8 and F 15). On the latter date the file was received back from the Civil Court and proceedings in the Deputy Commissioner's Court were resumed (Exhibit 190). The defendants Nos. 5 to 7 applied for, and obtained an order of attachment on 21st May 1915. This was after the first but before the second deed. It may be noted here that the learned Subordinate Judge has proceeded on the principle of requiring the plaintiff to pay off all creditors who had obtained valid attachments before the execution of the latter of the two mortgage deeds and the plaintiff has taken no exception to this.

The plaintiff contends that the period from 19th March to 24th June 1915 He suggests ought not to be excluded. that, at most, the powers of the Collector were merely suspended during this period. The Collector, however, returned the papers to the Civil Court on the ground that no further proceedings could be taken until substitution was effected and it appears clear that while the Subordinate Judge remained seised of the proceedings the Collector could not have exercised or performed any of the powers or duties conferred on him by the Schedule. It might perhaps have been otherwise if, at the time of Aeghar Ali's death, the Collector had already granted a lease of the property because in such case the lease would have continued to run not withstanding the death. In the present case nothing of this kind had occurred and it must be held that the Civil Court and not the Collector was seised of the proseedings during the interval in question. Suppose, for example, that no application for substitution of names had been made in the Oivil Court; in that case the Collector's powers under the Schedule would have finally seased on the date on which he re-transmitted the proceedings to the Civil Court.

The Subordinate Judge's reasons for not accepting the plaintiff's contention are -

First, that it was not made till a late stage of the case, and

Secondly, that in his opinion the attachment is only invalid as against the ereditor at whose instance execution proceedings have been transferred to the Collector (vide o.

pages 377 and 378 of the judgment).

With reference to the first criticism, the objection is one which is apparent on the face of the proceedings and cannot, in our opinion, be ignored. The ereditors had to prove and rely on the dates of their attachments in order to obtain priority and if those dates show that attachment was made at a time when it could not legally be made the plaintiff was quite entitled to draw attention to the fact and to rely on it in answer to the plea of priority. It is urged that the plea should have been taken in the pleadings, but the attachments were pleaded for the first time in the written statements of the defendants. In answer to these written statements the plaintiff either pleaded ignor ance of or did not admit the attachments which were said to be prior to his mortgages. In this state of the pleadings he could hardly have taken a technical objection to the validity of an attachment of which he professed to have no knowledge. In any case, the fifteenth issue framed by the Trial Court necessarily involves a finding as to the validity of the attachments.

On the merits no satisfactory answer to the objection is forthcoming. The view taken by the learned Sabordinate Judge is not supported by the language of the Schedule which is markedly different from that of section 64. As in the case of the provision against alienation by the judgment-debtor the language used is very similar to that need in the Oadh Land Revenue Act of 1:76 with reference to persone under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. Section 174 of that Act ran:

"No such property shall be liable to be taken in execution of a decree made in respect of any contract entered into by any such person while his property is under such superintendence" The Privy Council held in Debi Bakheh Singh v. Shadi Lal (3), that this provision was meant to protect property against the execution of a deerse made in respect of any contract entered into during a certain period of time, and they rejected the contention that a decree obtained upon such a contract could be enforce i after the property was released. Similarly, the provision before us makes it illegal for the Civil Court to issue process against the property during a certain period of time, namely, the period during which the powers conferred by the Schedule are exercisable by the Collector; and a process which was illegal when it was issued cannot become effective when the Collector ceases to be in charge of the execution proceedings. The Schedule makes ample provision for the protection of the ereditors. Under paragraph 3 the Collector is empowered to publish a notice salling on all persons holding money decrees against the judgment-debtor or having claims against the property to put forward their elaims and such a notice was actually issued in this case. He is empowered to draw up a statement of the amount to be recovered by any creditors who have come forward with claims, and to arrange for liquidation of the amount found due to them. Clause (3) of paragraph II contains a further provision excluding from the operation of the law of limitation the period during which the deeres holders have been deprived of their ordinary remedy against the property by the provisions of the Schedule.

The case of Khushalchand Premraj Marwadi v. Nandram Sahebram Marwadi (4), in which most of the points now argued before us were considered, has been extensively quoted on both sides. Rightly considered, that case is entirely in favour of the plaintiff as the following analysis will show :--

The plaintiff got three decrees against the judgment debtor in 1900, 1901 and 1904.

He attached the property under each of the three. Execution proceedings under the first decree were transferred to the Collestor and remained with him till 21st May or 8th June 1904, On 21st May the plaintiff intimated that his claim was satisfied and the Mamlatdar who was in immediate charge of the property endorsed the execution application "as disposed of, to be returned to Civil Court." On 8th June the Collector despatched it to the Court,

Between 21st May and 8th June, i. c., on Sist May the judgment debtor sold the MUHAMMAD MUZAPPAR ALI U, BHAGWATI PRASAD SINGH.

property to the defendant in consideration of money advanced to pay off the plaintiff's first decree. The question in dispute in the High Court was the validity of this sale. The pleas urged against it were:—

(1) That it was bad under section 325 A (=Schedule III, paragraph 11) on the ground that the property was under the management of the Collector.

This was rejected on the ground that the Collector's powers had some to an end on 21st May.

(2) That the payment out of Court had not been sertified.

This does not concern us and was rejected.

(3) That the sale was illegal under section 276 (=section 64) because it was made while the property was still under attachment.

To this the Court replied that as the decree was satisfied there could be no claim now enforceable under the attachment.

(4) That the sale was bad under section 325 A (=Schedule III, paragraph II) because the execution proceedings under the second decree of 1901 were also transferred to the Collector.

This was rejected on the ground that the attachment under the second decree was itself invalid having been made while the Collector was in charge of execution and, therefore, contrary to the provision which is now contained in the last two lines of paragraph 11 (1), Schedule 111.

(5) That the second execution application was a claim enforceable under section 276, read with section 295, i.e., section 64, read with section 73, and, therefore, the sale was invalid against it,

From the language of the judgment it would seem that the claim under the second decree was relied on as being a claim for rateable distribution under the first. The Court held that any such claim was dependent on the continuance of the original attachment. As soon as the original decree was satisfied there was no claim left enforceable under that attachment.

On the ground that only 52 villages out of 62 originally attached were actually proclaimed for sale under Parshotam Das' decree it has been suggested that execution proceedings regarding the remainder may not remain under the charge of the Collector.

This plea, if correct, would only validate the attachments in respect of those villages as to which proceedings were removed from the Collector's control. In fast it has not been shown that any villages were excepted. There is no dispute that the whole execution proseedings were originally made over to the Collector and Exhibit 211 shows that the parties admitted the property to be ancestral. From a subsequent order of the Collector passed on 8th January 1913 (Exhibit 213) it appears that it was suggested in the course of the proceedings that two villages were self acquired but there is nothing to show that they were eventually held to be self. acquired, still less that any part of the execution proceedings was ever taken out of the hands of the Collector until he returned the papers to the Civil Court. This ples, therefore, has no force.

The dates of the various attachments are all given in that portion of the Subordinate Jadge's judgment which deals with the fifteenth issue and their correctness has not been impugned. Those of defendants Nos. 5 to 7 (21st May 1915), of defendant No. 8 Balmakund Kapur (24th May 1915) and of defendant No. 13 (15th May 1915) fall within the period during which the papers had been returned to the Civil Court and are, therefore, not affected by the plaintiff's objection. The validity of Balmakund Kapur's attachment order involves also the validity of the claim to priority made by Baba Bishambhar Nath Tandan who applied for rateable distribution in connection with that attachment. The remaining orders of attachment were all issued while the Collector was exercising the powers conferred by Schedule III. The attachment by defendant No. 3 was made in April 1914, that of defendant No. 9 in December 1914, that of defendant No. 10 in June 1914, that of defendants Nos. 11 and 12 in June 1913 and that of defendant No. 14 in May 1913. The above are the only creditors to whom priority has been allowed by the decree of the Court below. As against defendant No. 14 a special plea has been taken by the plaintiff to the effect that though the Court made an order of attachment in his favour the application on which this order was based only asked for rateable distribution in connection with Parshotam Das' deeree. It is unnecessary to decide this as the attachment was, in any case, invalid, but if it were necessary to decide the objection we should hold that there was no force in it. It is quite possible that an oral application supplementary to the written application for rateable distribution may have been made and there is a presumption that the proceedings of the Court were regular until the contrary is shown.

The final result of the above findings is as follows. Appeals Nos. 1, 2 and 14 of 1920 filed respectively by the judgment-debtors, the Bank of Upper India and the Allahabad Bank, fail altogether and are dismissed with costs in favour of the plaintiff respondent. Appeal No. 13 of 1920 filed by Babu Bishambhar Nath Tandan is allowed with costs against the plaintiff respondent in both Courts and his name will be included among those creditors to whom the plaintiff is required to pay the amount due under their decrees against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 before foreelosure under the deeree of the Court below. The payment must be made before 31st August 1921, otherwise the property will be sold in execution of the decrees of the defendants Nos. 5 to 7, 8, 13 and 21 (Babu Bishambhar Nath Tandan). The amount, if paid by the plaintiff to these defendants, shall form part of his mortgage money and shall earry interest at six per cent. per annum form date of payment as already directed by the Subordinate Judge. Appeal No. 7 of 1920 filed by the plaintiff is allowed in part and the names of the defendants Nos. 3, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 14 will be removed from slause (2) of the lower Court's deeree and inserted in clause (1), that is to say, that the plaintiff will not be required to pay the amount due to these ereditors under their deerees as a condition to obtaining forealosure but they will be allowed a right of redemption. The date on or before which these defendants will be permitted to pay the amount due to the defendants will be 31st July. The plaintiff will get his costs of this appeal against those defendants against whom he has been successful to the extent to which he has succeeded. These respondents who have successfully contested the appeal will be entitled to their easts against the appellant. The plaintiff will also get his sosts in the Court below against those defendants against whom his appeal has susseeded in assordance with the state.

ment of costs shown in the decree of the Court below. As between the plaintiff and the remaining defendants the lower Court's order as to costs will stand good.

Instalment bond—Entire amount payable on default —Limitation, operation of.

In a suit upon a money-bond which provides for repayment by instalments and which contains a condition that on failure to pay any one instalment the creditor would be entitled to recover the whole amount at once, the point to consider is, whether the creditor had an option to waive his right to bring a suit at once on the happening of the default, and whether, as a matter of fact, he did exercise this right of waiver, in each case the question is one of fact. [p. 656, col. 1.]

In the absence of anything to show such option and exercise of waiver limitation begins to run from the time when the first default in the payment of instalments is made. [p. 65%, cols. 1 & 2.]

Civil revision against an order of the Judge of the Coart of Small Causes at Gorakhpur, dated the 29th June 1921.

Mr. S. P. Sinha, for the Applicants. Mr. G. L. Agarwala, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT .- This application in civil revision raises a somewhat difficult point. The defendant executed a registered bond on the 8th of July 1911 for Rs. 250. It was recited in the bond that on making up accounts this sum was due to the predecessorin-title of the plaintiffs by the defendant and that he was unable to pay the money at once, it was agreed between the parties that he would pay it by twelve six monthly instalments. So long as the instalments were paid no interest was chargeable. But it was covenanted that if the instalments were not paid the failure of one instalment would entitle Ram Deo Marwari to resover the whole amount due at once together with interest Rs. 12 per cent. per annum. The suit was filed in the Court of Small Causes on the 26th of May 1921. The bond was a registered one and, therefore, was governed by the rule of six years' limitation. plaintiff claimed that his cause of action arose on the 7th of May 1917, the day on which the last instalment was due. The defendant admitted execution and coneideration, but pleaded that the suit was by limitation. The Court below barred has found that not a single instalment had been paid and held that the suit was timebarred. This is the question which is raised before me. A number of rulings have been eited but I do not think there is really any conflict between the various decisions of this Court. In all of them it has been held that the point to consider in each case is, whether the plaintiff had an option to waive his right to bring a suit at once on the happening of the default and whether, as a matter of fact, he did exercise this right of waiver; so it comes, after all, to a question of fact in each case. It is pointed out that a test of waiver or not may be found (P) prayer in each suit-did the plaintiff claim the whole amount, if so, was there no waiver, or only the amount due on unpaid instalments not time-barred? In this case it is argued that the plaintiff elearly did waive his right to bring his suit on the failure of the first default. This argument is based on the paragraph in the plaint in which the plaintiff states that as the defendant is a poor man he is suing only for the principal amount and not for the interest agreed on. Under the terms of the bond interest would only be payable if default had been made. If the plaintiff waived his rights, no question of interest would arise. Apart from this state. ment in the plaint and the fact that the suit was not brought till a long time afterwards, there is no evidence pointing to any waiver. The etatement in the plaint that the plaintiff does not ask for interest far from being evidence of waiver may be explained by the opening words of the paragraph that the reason for doing so is because the defendant is a poor man and, therefore, presumably would not be in a position to pay. On the one side, we have the cases such as Babu Bam v. Jodha Singh (1) and Amolah Chand v. Baij Nath (2) and on the other side Mohan Lal v. Tika Ram (3) and A udhia v. Kunjal (4). It seems to me that this case falls within the first class and in that view the decision of the Court below was right. I reject the application with costs.

ORIMINAL REPORT No. 99 of 1919
September 18, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Kemp, A. J. C., and Mr. Raymond, A. J. O.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

MENGHRAJ DEVIDAS - ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 141, 237, 403, 438, 537—Nuisance—Order under si 141—Accused challaned under s 291, Penal Code—Case withdrawn—Withdrawal, effect of—Accused subsequently proceeded against under ss. 189, 230, Penal Code—Proceedings, validity of—"Competent to try" in s. 493 (4), meaning of—"Competent jurisdiction" in s. 537, meaning of—S. 537, scope of—Revision—Report by Sessions Judge—High Court, power of.

A District Magistrate issued an order to the public under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code for prevention of a public nuisance in a certain locality within his jurisdiction. The order had not the desired effect, as the nuisance was repeated, with the result that the Police challaned the accused and others before the City Magistrate, for an offence under section 291 of the Penal Code. The case was not proceeded with, but after three or four adjournments, the Public Prosecutor, under instructions from the District Magistrate, withdrew it under section 494 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and, armed with a fresh sanction from him, filed a fresh complaint on the same facts before another Magistrate under sections 183 and 290 of the Penal Code:

Held, that as the withdrawal of the charge under section 291 of the Penal Code amounted to an acquittal under section 494 (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code, that acquittal operated as a bar under section 403 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code to subsequent proceedings under sections 188 and 290 of the Penal Code, as in the trial under section 291 of the latter Code, the accused could have been convicted under section 188 thereof, though not under section 291, and that, therefore, he could not be tried again on the same facts for any other offence of which he might have been convicted under section 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code though not charged with it.

The expression "competent to try" in clause (4) of section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code refers to the character and status of the Tribunal when it refers to the competency to try the offence.

The term "competent jurisdiction" in section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code refers to the character and the status of the Court which has decided the case. [p. 6t0, col. 2.]

The restriction imposed by section 537 of the Oriminal Procedure Code, not to reverse or alter a finding or order or sentence on the ground of any absence of sanction unless it has occasioned a failure of justice, clearly indicates that a Court may be of competent jurisdiction to try a case in the absence of sanction; and, therefore, a sanction is not a condition of the competency of the Tribunal, but only a condition precedent for the institution of proceedings before a Tribunal. [p. 660, col. 2.]

Section 537 only cures the want of sanction in those cases which are covered by section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code: the absence of sanction required by any other provision of the law cannot be remedied. [p. 661, col. 2.]

Although in a report to the High Court under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, a Sessions Judge does not recommend that the proceedings against the accused be quashed, yet, as a consequence of the report, the facts of the case are brought to the knowledge of the High Court, that Court has jurisdiction under section 439 to stop further proceedings, if it is satisfied that they are barred. [p. 652, col. 1.]

Report under section 433, Oriminal Pro-

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

Mr. F. J. de Verteuil, for the Acoused.

JUDGMENT,-On the 11th January 1919 the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Shikarpur, issued an order to the public forbidding persons from congregating in sertain streets in Shikarpur for the purpose of buying and selling Russian Notes and thereby causing an obstruction. The accused was alleged to have disobeyed this order and was in consequence challaned before the City Magistrate on 23rd January 1919 under section 291 Indian Penal Code: As it was obvious that in order to succeed on a charge under section 251 it was necessary to prove a specific order to the person charged, the Public Prosecutor after three or four hearings applied for and obtained permission under section 494. Criminal Procedure Code to withdraw the case.

By virtue of section 494, Criminal Pro-acquittal.

Subsequently, fresh proceedings under sections 188 and 290, Indian Penal Code, were instituted against the assumed before the Court of the A' Bench of Magistrates who ordered process to issue.

Apparently, the reason why these preceedings were not instituted before the City Magistrate was that he was engaged in the trial of another case and the District Magistrate directed the trial to be before the Bench

Magistrates.

The accused then applied to the District Magistrate for transfer of the cas which was refused. He then made a application to the learned Sessions Judge, Sukkur, praying that the order of the 'A' Bench of Magistrates directing process to issue and the summary trial of the case be quashed. He alleged various grounds in his application, vie., that one of the Magistrates on the Bench was his rival in business and two of them were dealers in Russain Notes, that one of the Bench would be called as a witness, that the mukhtyarkar was a Hyderabadi Amil like the Inspector of Police in charge of the proceedings, and that the applicant had made charges of bribery and corruption against the Inspector which required an investigation which could not be held in a case tried summarily. He also contended that he had been acquitted under section 231, Indian Penal Code, and could not, therefore, be tried again under sections 188 and 290, Indian Penal Code. The learned Sessions Judge has submitted the proseedings to this Court with a resommendation that the case should be transferred to a stipendiary Magistrate to try in a regular manner. He does this appar. ently under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code.

The Public Prosecutor for Sind informs us that the District Magistrate strongly opposes the transfer.

I consider it regrettable that there should be this divergence of opinion between the learned Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate whose duty it is, in the best interests of the district, to work in harmony. Nevertheless, the Sessions Judge is empowered under section 4.8. Criminal Procedure Code, to report the case to us as he has done.

There appears to be no substance in the grounds set forth for a transfer. The Inspector of Police has been re-placed by another and there is now another mukhtyarkar attached to the 'A' Bench of Magistrates. The Magistrate whom the accused proposes to call as witness need not sit on the Bench, which can form a quorum without him. The case is a simple one and can be tried summarily and any allegations against the Inspector of Police can be made the subject of a separate investigation or charge against him. Moreover, only one of the Magistrates is a dealer in Russain Notes.

The more important question remains, whe-

Penal Code, operates as a bar under section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, to subsequent proceedings under sections 188 and 290, Indian Penal Code. We can take notice of this objection of our own motion. The prosecution say that section 188, Indian Penal Code, requires sanction and that the City Magistrate could not have tried a charge under that section as no sane. tion had been obtained. In my opinion, this is a fallacy. If sanction had been obunder section 188 tained, the charge could have been tried Oity by the Magistrate. It does not rest with the prosesution to say whether a Court shall have jarisdiction or not. I do not agree with the observations of the learned Judges in Jivram Dankarji v. Emperor (1) to the effect that a Court, which is otherwise competent to try the case, is not a Court of competent jurisdiction merely because sanction has not been obtained. Section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, laye down specifically that no finding passed by a Court of competent shall be reversed or altered jurisdiction on the ground of any want of, or irregularity in, any sanction required by section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. It is clear from the wording of the section that the jurisdiction of the Court is not dependent on the sanction. It is clear that the City Magistrate's Court is a Court of sompetent jurisdiction to try an offence under section 188, Indian Penal Code, although, no doubt, the City Magistrate would not take sognizance of the offence until sanction had been obtained. Nevertheless, the City Magis. trate's Court was a Court "competent to try," with the sanction, the offence under section 188, within the meaning of section 403, Oriminal Procedure Code.

This is quite independent of the question whether sanction can be obtained at any time during the trial. On that point I express no opinion.

Now what were the facts here? The prosecution charged the accused under section 291, Indian Penal Code, alleging that he had been enjoined by the order of the Sab Divisional Magistrate, Shikarpur, on the 11th January 1919, against committing A nuisance and that he had repeated the nuisance. Clearly, the charge could not stand because a conviction under section 291 requires proof of a specific addressed to the person charged. As a matter of fast, on the fasts alleged by the prosecution, the charges should have been under sections 188 and 290, Indian Penal Code. The charge under section 188 can be sustained on a general order. The ease, therefore, clearly falls under section 237 (1) of Criminal Procedure Code, as the facts were certain but the wrong charge was based on them. At the trial before City Magistrate the accused might have been convicted on the facts on charges under sections 188 and 290, Indian Penal Code. He sannot now, by virtue of section 403 (1), be subsequently tried on those charges.

It is to be noted that in Jieram Dankarji v. Emperor (1) the user of the forged document which was the subject-matter of the subsequent charge occurred after the accused had already been charged for abetment of forgery.

Moreover, in that case it was held that the offences fell under section 235 (1), Oriminal Procedure Code and, therefore, section 403 (3) of that Code applied.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the proceedings before the 'A' Bench of Magistrates should be quashed.

RAYMOND, A. J. C .- This is a report by the Sessions Judge, Sukkur, under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, for the transfer of a case under sections 188 and 290, Indian Penal Code, pending before the 'A' Bench of Magistrates to a stipendiary Magistrate in the Sukkur District on certain grounds mentioned in the report. The concluding part of the Sessions Judge's report is as follows: "I submit the ease to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner with the finding that though proceedings should not be quashed on the ground of 'autrefois acquit,' a case has been made out for hearing this case in a regular manner, and in view of the grave charges against Senior Police Officers and others it would be desirable that the case should be tried by a sti-. pendiary Magistrate". On ascertaining the facts of the case, it appears that there were good grounds for the consideration of the question whether the present complaint against the accused under sections 188 and 290, Indian Penal Code, was not barred under section 403, Oriminal Procedure Code, by a withdrawal of the previous proceedings against him under section 291, Indian Penal Code, and the Public Prosecutor and the Counsel for the accused were salled upon to argue this point. The facts of the case which have been elicited from Counsel on either side may be stated as follows: The District Magistrate, Sukkur, passed an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, for the prevention of a public nuisance committed by dealers in Russian Notes in a certain locality within his jurisdiction. Apparently, the order had not the desired effect, as the nuisance was repeated, with the result that the Police challaned the accused and others before the City Magietrate, Sukkur, for an offense under section 291, Indian Penal Code, The ease was not proceeded with, but after three or four adjournments the Public Prosecutor of Sukkur, under instructions from District Magistrate, withdraw it under sestion 494, Criminal Procedure Code, and, armed with a sanction from him, filed a fresh complaint on the same facts before the "A" Bench of Magistrates under sections 183 and 290, Indian Penal Code. After this complaint was filed, the accused applied to the Sessions Judge that the order of the Bench directing process to issue, and that the case be tried summarily, be quashed and that a recommendation to that effect be made to this Court. In this application the assused stated that, as he had been acquitted of an offence under section 291, Indian Penal Code, he could not be tried again on the same facts in respect of offences under sections 290 and 188, Indian Penal Code. We are informed that, sontemporaneously with the application to the Sessions Judge. an application was made by the accused to the District Magistrate for a transfer of this case, but that the latter application was withdrawn probably on the ground of its being unnecessary, owing to the present report.

Now, though the Sessions Judgo has not asked us to quash the proceedings against the accused, yet, as the consequence of his report, the facts of the case are brought to our knowledge, we have jurisdiction under section 439, Criminal Frosedure Code, to stop further proceedings if we are satisfied that they are barred. The first proceeding against the accused under section 291, Indian Penal Code, was based on an infringement of the order passed by the District Magistrate under section 144, Oriminal Procedure Code. The withdrawal of these proceedings by the Public Prosecutor under section 494, Criminal Procedure Code, amounted to an aequittel of the accused under clause (b) of the section, as the offence under section 291 being a summonsease, no charge against the accused was necessary.

The Public Prosecutor has argued that the Magistrate before whom the proceedings under section 291, Indian Penal Code, were pending and who acquitted the accused was not competent to try the accused for the offence under section 188, within the meaning of clause (4) to section 403, Oriminal Procedure Code, as no sanction for the prosecution of the accused had been obtained, and his second argument is, that the facts involved in the consideration of the question whether the accused is guilty of an offence under section 291 are different to those under section 188, inasmuch as under the former section it is essential to a successful prosecution, to show that the accused had been personally enjoined not to continue or repeat the nuisance, whereas under the latter, a proclamation to the public or a portion of the public is sufficient. According to his argument, therefore, the offense under section 291 was distinct from that under section 188, and, consequently, the acquittal under the former was no bar to the trial of the accused under the latter, under clause (2) to section 403.

With regard to the first argument that the City Magistrate was not competent to try the accused for an offence under section 188 in the absence of the canction, it is important to consider what the words "competent to try" really connote. In Ganapathi Bhatta v. Emperor (2) it was held that the clause (4) to section 403 refers to the character and status of the Tribunal when it refers to the competency to try the offence. In my opinion, this correctly deseribes the meaning to be attached to the words "competent to try" and Illustrations (f) and (g) to the section do also bear out this interpretation. In the same Madras case it was held that sanction under section 195 was only a condition presedent for institution of proceedings before a Tribunal, so that it is not a condition of the competency of the Tribunal. In connection with this point it would be useful to refer to section 537, Criminal Procedure Jode. This section provides that, subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, no finding, sentence or order passed by a Court of a competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered on assount of the want of or any irregularity in any sanction required by section 195, Criminal Procedure Oode. The words "competent jurisdiction" do, in my opinion, refer to the charaster and status of the Court which has decided the The restriction imposed by section 6888. 537, not to reverse or alter a finding or order or sentence on the ground of any absence of sanction unless it has occasioned a failure of justice, slearly indicates that a Court may be of competent jurisdiction to try a ease in the absence of any sanction. And, therefore, a sanction is not a condition of the competency of the Tribunal, but only a condition precedent for the institution of proceedings before a Tribunal. The case Ganapathi Bhatta v. Emperor (2) was on the facts similar to the present case. Sanction was obtained by the complainant to prosesute the accused for an offence under section 211, Indian Penal Code, he was convicted but the conviction was quashed by the High Court in revision on the ground that no offence was committed under cection 211, Indian Penal Oode, but under section 182, for which no Complainant sanction had been granted. thereupon obtained sanction to prosecute the assused under section 182. held that the prosecution was barred by section 403, clause (1) and that section 403, clause (4), was not applicable to the case, The Public Prosecutor relied upon Jivram Dankarji v. Emperor (1). In one important point this case is distinguishable, as at the time when the accused was on his trial under sections 467 and 109, Indian Penal Code, there were no materials before the Court with respect to the offence under section 471, Indian Penal Code, for which he was subsequently placed on his trial and hence his previous acquittal was held to be no bar to the second trial. In this case, it was the opinion of the Court that the Court which acquitted the assused on a charge of a abetment of forgery, was not competent to try the offence under section 471 as at the time of the earlier trial no sanction for the prosecution under section 472, had been given under section 195, Oriminal Procedure Code, and as the grant of such a sanction was a condition precedent to the Court's jurisdiction to try the offence under section 471, without the sanction the Court was incompetent to undertake the prosecution. With regard to the argument based on the section 537. Oriminal Procedure Code, all that was said was that it would be relevant only if the prosecution under section 471 had resulted in: a conviction. No doubt, it would be relevant only under those eircumstaness, but why has provision been made by section 537 for earing the want of sanction if an accused is tried by a Court of compelent jurisdiction? If the want of a sanction has not led to any failure of justies, the conviction of a person by a Conrt of competent jurisdiction is to be upheld. Had it been an absolute bar, I fail to see how it sould be condoned by sestion 537, Oriminal Procedure Code. It is also signifigant to remember that section 537, Oriminal Procedure Code, only cures the want of sanction in those cases which are covered by section 195, Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. Elphinston also relied upon Em. peror v. Jiwan (3), that a Court is not a Court of competent jurisdiction unless a sametion has been obtained in those cases where sanetion is required. It is a decision of a Single Judge and I find on the perusal of the judgment that no reference is made to section 537, Oriminal Procedure Code clause (b), I must respectfully state that I am not prepared to follow this judgment with regard to its interpretation of the words "competent to try" as used in sestion 403, Oriminal Procedure Code. In the same volume, at page 110 [Gur Baksh Singh v. Kashi Ram (4)] there is a case where a Sessions Court had set aside a conviction under section 182, Indian Penal Code, on the sole ground that the offence, if any, which the appellants had committed was one under section 211, Indian Penal Code, and that no sanction for prosecution under that section had been obtained. A Division Bareh in setting aside the order remarked as follows :- "We are both of opinion that the Sessions Judge was not justified in ignoring the provisions of section 537, slause (b), Oriminal Prosedure Code. There had been a conviction by a Court of competent jurisdiction, and if there was any question as to sanstion, the provisions of section 537 could have met the case." The words "Court of compatent jurisdiction" have undoubtedly been used in the same meaning as in Ganapathi Bhatta v. Emperor (2), as connoting the character and status of the trying Court, and, therefore, notwithstanding the absence of sanction, the Court was a Court competent to try" within the meaning of sestion 403, slause (4), Oriminal Procedure Code. I may also refer to King-Emperor v. Krishna Ayyar (5), where section 403, clause (4), is discussed and the words "compatent to try" explained. The prosecution also relied on Tikaram Sakharam v. Emperor (6), in support! of their contention, but I do not think this case applicable. At the first trial the accused could not be convieted under section 498, Indian Penal Code, as there was no complaint by the husband. There is no similar provision in eaction 537, Oriminal Procedure Code, with regard to section 199, Oriminal Procedure Code, as there is in regard to section 195, Oriminal Procedure Code. It must be remembered that it is the want of sanction required by section 195 alone which is curable by section 537 and that the absence of the sanction required by any other provision of law can not be remedied, nor by any other express enastment for initiation of proceedings. I am, therefore, of opinion that the City Magistrate in the present case was a Court "competent to" try" the offences under sections 188 and 290, Indian Penal Code, with which the accused was subsequently charged.

With regard to the second argument advanced on behalf of the Crown, it is essential to remember that when the acensed was challaned under section 291, Indian Penal Code, it was in respect of the infringe. ment of the order promulgated by the Distriet Magistrate under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code. The prosecution under section 291 was clearly unsupportable in view of the admitted fact that the accused had not been enjoined by any specific order to discon. tinue or not to repeat the nuisance. The main point, however, in issue before the trying Court would have been, whether there was any infringement of the order under section 144: and if this was held proved, the account could have been convicted under section 188 though not under section 291. Therefore. in terms of section 403, clause (1), the accused cannot be tried again on the same facts for any other offence of which he might have been convicted under section 237, Criminal Procedure Code, though not charged with it. The evidence that would have been led before the Magistrate to prove the offence under section 188 would have been the same. and section 403, clause (1), clearly contemplates a case of this description.

I would, therefore, quash the proceedings against the accused pending before the 'A' Bench of Magistrates under sections 188 and 290, Indian Penal Code. In view of this order it is annecessary to discuss the merits of the transfer application. As it has been argued before us, I shall content myself with saying that I am far from being convinced of the necessity of any transfer of the case. The divergence of opinion between the District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge is a matter of regret, but I am not disposed to think it was necessary for the Sessions Judge to report under section 433, Criminal Proeedure Code to the High Coart that the ease should be transferred, the more so when he did not resommend the queashing of proseedings. If the accused was convinced, as is said, that his application for transfer would meet with no success before the District Magistrate, he could have easily applied to the High Court supporting his application by an affidavit. By the present circumlo utory method of applying for a transfer, he has certainly dispensed himself from the necessity of filing any affidavit.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1899), ss. 195, 537—Sanction to prosecute not in force at date of trial—Conviction, legality of—Failure of justice, absence of.

Where a person is sentenced upon conviction for an offence mentioned in section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the sentence is not liable to be reversed or altered on appeal, or revision, on the ground that the sanction required by that section was not in force at the time when the prosecution was instituted, unless it is established that this has in fact occasioned a failure of justice within the meaning of section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. As no order had been obtained from this Court to extend the time, the sanction must be deemed to have lapsed before that date. SANDERSON, C. J .- In this reference the material facts, which it is necessary for me to state for the purpose of my judgment, are set out at the beginning of the referense, and they are follows. On the 8th April 1919 the Munsif of Habigunj granted sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code to Abbas Ali, the complainant, to prossents the petitioner, Khetra Mohan Das, for offeness under sections 181 and 193 of the Indian Penal Code. The prosecution was not instituted till the 2nd January 1920, that is, after the expiry of the period of six months mentioned in section 195 (6) of the Criminal Procedure Code. As no order had been obtained from this Court to extend the time, the sanction must be deemed to have lapsed before that date. sanction which had been granted under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was no longer in force, as the limit of six months provided by that section had expired before the commement of the proceention. The judgment of the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Beverly, dealing with section 537 of the Code, was as follows: "Mr. Leith has drawn our attention to the provisions of see. tion 537 of the Code but that section is ex. pressly made subject to the provisions contained,' and we cannot, therefore, suppose that it was intended to override the provisions of section 195." The learned Vakil, who has argued this case on behalf of the accused, has asked us to interpret that judgment as applicable to the particular facts of the case which the learned Judges were considering, and his argument has proceeded upon the basis that, although section 537 (b) would apply to a case where no sanction had ever been granted, it would not apply to a case where sanction had been granted, but the sanction had lapsed before the proceedings were commeneed. In my opinion the words of the judgment, which I have quoted, are wide enough to cover both cases, the case where no sanction has been granted and the case where sanction has been granted, and has lapsed before the proceedings began, and the question is whether we are prepared to follow that decision. It was pointed out in the reference that that desision has been questioned in a considerable number of cases both in the Madras High Court and the Allahabad High Court, and a contrary opinion was adopted in one ease in this Court, Sunder Dasadh v. Sital Mahto (3) where Mr. Justice Prinsep in delivering judgment said as follows: "No doubt sanstion to the prosecution should have been given before the Magistrate took cognizance of that offence, but unless the want of such sanction has, in fact, occasioned a failure of justice (section 537, Code of Criminal Procedure), the conviction is not bad only on that account." In one of the cases which was decided by the Madras High Court, Perumalla Nayudu v. Emperor (5), the learned Judges in delivering judgment said this: "The words subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained,' which occur at the beginning of section 537, sannot be construed in such a way as to nullify the express provision of the latter part of the section, which in clause (b) enacts that no sentence passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed on appeal for want of any sanction required by section 195." To this should be added unless such want has in fact occasioned a failure of justice." In my judgment, without expressing any opinion as to whether the words "subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained" refer to the provisions contained in any previous part of the Code or whether they refer only to the provisions contained in Chapter XLV, they cannot be construed in such a manner as to nullify the express provisions of section 537 (b). Consequently, in my judgment, section 537 (b) applies just as much to a ease in which sanction has been granted under section 195 and the sanction has lapsed owing to the period of six months having expired before the commencement of the proceedings, as it does to a case in which no canction has been granted at all. In my judgment, in this case there was, on the date of the institution of the proceedings. a want of sanction. Consequently, I answer the question which has been referred to this Bench in this way; where a person has been sentenged upon a conviction for an offence mentioned in section 195 of the Oriminal Procedure Code, the sentence is not liable to be reversed or altered on appeal, or revision, on the ground that the sanction required by section 195 was not in force at the time when the prosecution was instituted, unless it is established that this has in fact oseasioned a failure of justice within the meaning of section 537 of the Oriminal Procedure Code. My learned brother, Mr. Justice Woodroffe, drew my attention to the fact that my learned brother, Mr. Justice Mookerjee, and I did not expressly find that there was no failure of justice in this case. In that view it is desirable to point out that the assumed person, when he was charged with the offence, pleaded guilty: and, in the explanation which the learned Magistrate has submitted in answer to the Rule, he said this: "The accused cannot say that he has been unfairly affected in his defence on the merits, since he pleaded guilty in unmistakable terms and prayed for merey." Consequently, in my judgment, there has keen no failure of justice.

Yeast balls, possession of -Offence.

Yeast balls are not excisable articles, but as they are materials for the manufacture of an excisable article, namely, liquor, the possession of them is prohibited by section 12 (c) of the Burma Excise Act, and is made punishable under section 30 (d) of that Act,

Reference made under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, by the District Magistrate, Thatpn, recommending the sentence of Township Magistrate, Pa-an, be set aside.

JUDGMENT.—The question is, whether the possession of yeast balls is punishable under the present Excise Act.

In Queen Empress v. Ngu Lu Gale (1), it was held that yeast balls were not intoxicating drugs as defined in clause (h) of section 3 of the old Excise Act and that they were not spirit or fermented liquor either.

Yeast balls are balls of flour scaked in the sap or juices of different plants, such as toddy-tree roots, kaing-grass roots, and: eccount roots, and a little sugar added and when they are mixed with rice water or jaggery, after three days or so there results a ferment as yeast, which is used only for the manufacture of liquor and nothing else.

Section 12 (c) of the present Excise Act says that no person shall use, keep or have in his possession any materials, or apparatus whatsoever for the purpose of manufacturing any excisable article.

Yeast balls are materials for the purpose of manufacturing liquor and liquor is an excisable article. Possession of them is, therefore, prohibited by section 12 (c).

The District Magistrate in his order of reference says he considers that yeart balls do not come within the definition of excisable article and that, in view of the case above cited, the conviction was wrong. Subsequently he wrote to say that his opinion was wrong and that he had over-looked section 12 (c) of the Excise Act.

The law as regards yeast balls may be stated thus:—Yeast balls are not excisable articles but as they are materials for the manufacture of an excisable article, namely, liquor, the possession of them is prohibited by section 12 (c) and made punishable under section 30 (d) of the Act.

The sonviction in this case was under section 30 (a). It should have been under section 30 (d).

The case above cited is obsolete. Return the papers.

Having regard to the great frequency with which a lathi, used in a melee, lights on the head even though not specially aimed at it, and the still higher percentage of cases in which a blow on the head with a lathi results in the death of the victim from a fractured skull, it would be contradictory to say that a person taking part in an assault with lathis does intend to break the victim's arm or leg but does not intend to break his skull, an injury which is undoubtedly sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. If a man strikes another with a light stick and then retires from the assault before the general assault begins and the lathis of others begin their work he can be said to have taken no part in the common intention of others, [p 669, col. 2]

Under section 100 and section 96 of the Indian Penal Code an accused cannot be considered to have committed any offence, even in intentionally killing a person, while acting in his right of private defence if he has kept within the limits prescribed by section 99 of the Code, i. e., if the assault could not be prevented by anything short of killing. [p. 670, col. 1.]

If some persons were acting in the exercise of their right to defend their master against what was certainly a murderous assault, and, with such care and attention as was humanly possible at the moment and in the circumstances, believing that they could not protect their master from that assault otherwise than by striking the deceased with lathis, even at the imminent risk of hitting him and cracking his skull, their acts amply satisfy the conditions required to bring them within the terms of the second Exception to the definition of murder in section 300 of the Indian Penal Code. [p 670, col. 1.]

An assault by a Mahar tenant on a Rajput Zemindar, even if it had not been likely to result in anything worse than grievous hurt, would undoubtedly give very grave provocation to the Zemindar's followers, quite sufficient to deprive ordinary men of their self-control and if they suddenly and immediately assault the tenant it must be held that they acted while they were still under the full influence of the passion engendered by the provocation. [p. 670, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the finding and sentence of the Sessions Judge, Bhandara, in Sessions Trial of 1921, decided on the 20th December 1921.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Appellant. Mr. S. R. Pandit, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT .- The appellant, Jaipal Kunbi, along with three others, of whom two are called Chhatris and the other as a Rajput, though all three seem to be of the same easte, has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Bhandara of voluntarily eausing grievous burt with a dangerous weapon, and each of the four has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for five years. The employer of all four of them, Dilan Singh Chhatri, a Malguear or Mokani of some substance, was tried along with them and acquitted. Jaipal Kunbi alone has appealed. It must be remembered, in the first place, that the appellant was the Zemindar's Diwanji or manager in the village in which the assault took place, and not one of his Rajput body guard of elub. men or "lathials". Also, he was not armed with a "lathi", as they were ; if he had a stick at all it was nothing more than what is ordinarily known as a walking-stick.

(2) Mangia, whose deposition as recorded by the Committing Magistrate was read in evidence in the Sessions Court as he died in the interval between the enquiry and the trial, gave no description of the sticks be saw used by the accused. He mentioned the lathi earried by Nandan Singh when he first saw him in the village and the lathi earried by deceased Mithia and, in saying where the various blows hit after giving other details of the assault, he said that Nandan Singh's lakri struck Mithia on the hand. Beyond this he is not recorded as having mentioned sticks at all, though the blows of which he speaks must have been struck with sticks. Kodia (P. W. No. 1) says each of the three Rajputs had a lathi of a man's height, but "Jaipal carried his stick of Dhaman wood 21 enbits in length". He also speaks of it later as a danda. Lakshia (P. W. No. 2) makes no difference between the four sticks, speaking of all of them as sticks or lathis. He was apparently not questioned about the matter, though for some reason he was asked to give a fairly exact. description of the length and thickness of the stick with which Mithia threatened the Zemindar, Bhikia (P. W. No. 3) says he was "at a distance of five or six bandhis", which would probably be something over a hundred yarde; though his own estimate is

sixty only, and "saw that Mithia was being beaten with lathis by the four accused, Nandan Singh, Bhagwan Singh, Jaipal and Dashrath Singh." It is clear then that Jaipal had only an ordinary walking stick, very little if at all over three feet in length.

3. The evidence of the actual incidents of the assault is to be found in the depositions of the same four witnesses. With the greatest difficulty, I have desiphered the following passage from the resord of Mangia's deposition: "Mokashi stood aside ... The four accused who were there assaulted and the first blow was dealt by Dashrath Singh, then the new Sipabi (accused No. 3) dealt a blow, then Bhagwan Singh, then the Kunbi Diwanji (accused No. 5) dealt a blow. The blows hit on the shoulder-blade on the ribs and on the arms. The new Sipahi's lakadi hit on the hand of Mithia. Mithia fell down and the four accused went on dealing blows to him. Bhagwan Singh and the Kunbi Diwanji each dealt one blow. Dashrath Singh and new Sipahi dealt two blows each". I do not guarantee the accuracy of this transcript but I believe it to be what the learned Magistrate meant to write.

(4). Kodia (P. W. No. 1), after saying that Dilan Singh called upon Dashrath Singh and Bhagwan Singh to lay Mithia out (suto sale ko), continued as follows: "On this Dashrath Singh hit Mithya with a lathi which fell on the fingers of the left band of my father as he raised his hand, Bhagwan cingh then ran and dealt a blow with a lathi on the left shoulder-blade of my father. Jaipal assused after this ran and dealt a blow with his dands on the head of my father. My father on receiving this blow stretch out his eyes. Then began to Nandan Singh, accused, who was keeping me under restraint same up and dealt a blow on the upper part of the arm near the elbow of my father's left arm. On reseiving this stroke my father whirled round and fell down on the ground. My father fell flat on his back. After he fell down all the four assused who had lathis dealt one or two blows each at my father." The words: "My father on receiving this blow began to stretch out his eyes" are probably a translation of an expression meaning that his eye balls protruded or, to use a sommon English phrase, his eyes started out of his head. It is to be noted that this witness speaks of four blows struck before Mithia fell down, and one or two by each of the four assailants after

(5) Lakshia (P. W. No.2) gives the following description of the insident : "The four persons Dashrath Singh, Nandan Singh, Bhagwan Singh and Jaipal, commenced beating Mithia with lathis which they had in their hands. As soon as Dashrath Singh received the blow he raised his lathi and gave a blow with it which fell on Mithia's back. Mithia got down the embankment after his lathi fell on Dashrath Singh. Nandan Singh then raised his tathi and gave a blow which fell on the hand of Mithia below the elbow. He again raised his lathi and dealt another blow which fell on Mithia's head on the left side. Bhagwan Singh than ran and gave a blow which fell on Mithia's left hand fingers. Jaipal then raised his lathi and gave a blow with it on Mithia's waist. Mithia did not fall down yet. Nandan Singh after this dealt a third blow on Mithia's rib which caused him to fall down. After Mithia fell down Nandan Singh gave two successive blows with his lathi." Bhikia (P. W. No. 3), as has already been observed. was at least sixty yards away, and he says: "I saw from the place where I stood that Mithia was being beaten with lathis by the four assused Nandan Singh. Bhagwan Singh, Jaipal and Dashrath Singh. I cannot narrate the details as to the number of blows given by each of the four assused above-named and as to the places on Mithia's body on which each strcke fell. Bat I observed that Mithia fell down, Dashrath Singh, acoused, gave two successive blows of his lathi. After Mithia fell down, no one except Dashrath Singh hit him."

(6) Now, it appears from the depositions of the Sab-Assistant Sargeon who examined Mithia on his admission to hospital on the same day, and of the Civil Surgeon who made a post mortem examination of his body when he died three days later. that he was not struck more than three times on the back of the left hand, on the left forearm and on the left side of the head. There may, of course, have been other blows which left no mark but they must, for that reason, have been very light and could not have been struck with a heavy lathi of the kind earried by the three Rajput accused, and also there cannot have been more than one or two of them in an attack of the kind described by the witnesses. If there was any blow of this kind it must have been dealt with the walking stick sarried by the appellant, Jaipal, as nobody else in all the company had a stick of any sort. The Civil Surgeon does not appear to have been asked if the extensive fracturing of the skull could have been due to more than one blow, though here, again, I have to speak with caution as an answer to such a question may appear in some of the more illegible parts of the record of his deposition. The nature of the fractures, however, are such as could be caused by a sinlge blow, though it would have to be a very heavy one, But the description given by both medical witnesses of the single contusion on the left side of the head makes it practically certain that one blow only was struck.

(7) It is, in the next place, perfectly elear that Mithia was not struck after be fell. In describing the attack up to that point Mangia and Kodia both say he received one blow from each of the four accused who were convicted, though they differ entirely as to the order in which the accused struck and the parts of Mithia's body on which their blows fell. Lakshia makes it six blows, and differs further from both Mangia and Kodia in the order in which they were struck and the parts they hit. Bhikia also makes it at least four blows but does not give details. The four witnesses are then agreed that he was struck at least four times before he fell, and by each of the four accused, one witness only assigning two extra blows to Nandan Singh. This accounts completely for the three contueions found on his body and a possible fourth lighter blow which made no mark. Some at least, if not all, of the blows struck after Mithia fell would be certain to be severe enough to leave a bruise; but there is no sign of anything of the sort. It is also a priori improbable that, in a andden attack made without any conscious desire to cause even grievous hurt, the assailants would not be frightened into desisting when their vietim fell senseless, That they did so here is further clear from the contradictory and vague character of the evidence in regard to the blows struck after Mithia fell. Mangia, Kodia and Lakshia tell us which of the accused struck each blow they saw before he fell and the order in which they did so, and Kodia and Lakshia tell us exactly on what part Mithia's body each of these blows alighted. But in describing what happened after he fell Mangia says, in a general sort of way, that Dashrath Singh and Nandan Singh gave him two blows each and Bhagwan Singh and Jaipal gave him one each, Kodia says, in a still more general manner, that all four gave him one or two each, Lakshia says that Nandan Singh alone hit him and he did so twice, and Bhikis, who gives no details of the blows struck while he was standing, says that as he lay nobody hit him but Dashrath Singh and he did so twise.

(8) The only possible finding on this evidence is, that after he fell nobody hit Mithia at all, and before he fell he was struck three times with a lathi and possibly also received one or more blows with a lighter weapon. Now, I do not think the fact that the four eye witnesses foolishly attempt to describe each blow, and naturally contradict each other, even suggests that there is any untruth in the statement of all of them that each of the four accused did take part in the attack on Mithia and did hit him with his stick at least once. Not one of them has any motive for dragging in the name of any member of the party whom he did not see actually using his stick on Mithia. If there had been an attempt to do this, the second Diwanji Nandlal would have been implieated as well, and the omission of his name is a very strong indication, indeed, that these witnesses are telling the truth when they say Jaipal also struck Mitbia. It would, indeed, be the natural thing for him to do in the circumstances. I find, therefore, that one of the three blows of which the marks were observed when was taken to the hospital was struck by each of the three Rajput assused, Bhagwan Singh, Nandan Singh and Dathrath bingh with his lathi, and that Jaipal Kunbi also struck him with his walking stick in the course of the same assault, but not hard enough to leave a mark on his body.

(9) As to the offenes constituted by the acts found proved, the learned Judge's decision seems to be as follows. It is not proved which of the accused struck the fatal blow on the head. Therefore, each of them must be treated as if he had not struck that blow but had merely taken part in the assault. For each of them we have then to find what was the intention common to him and the others, including that other who did strike the fatal blow. It sannot be said that any of them who did not hit Mithia on the head had any intention of killing him or any knowledge that one of the others would hit him on the head and kill him. But having regard to the nature of the weapons they used, reasonably infer that ean. all intended that grievous hurt should be saused to him. They are all, therefore, guilty of voluntarily sausing grievous burt with a dangerous weapon and punishable under section 326 of the Indian Penal Code.

(10) The learned Judge has mentioned the cases of Emperor v. Bhola Singh (1) and Chandan Singh v. Emperor (2). If there are any applicable principles there laid down which are not in consonance with the two very simple and, so it seems to me, incontrovertible principles enunciated by Ismay, J. C., in Jhagru Gond v. Emperor (3), the learned Judge was bound to disregard them, as I am. And, having regard to the great frequency with which a lathi, used in a melse, lights on the head even though not specially aimed at it, and the still higher percentage of eases in which a blow on the head with a lathi results in the death of the victim from a fractured skull, it seems to me contradistory to say that a person taking part in an assault with lathis does intend to break the vietim's arm or leg but does not intend to break his skull, an injury which is undoubtedly sufficient in the ordinary sourse of nature to sauce death.

(11) But these matters do not now require discussion. The two principles laid down in Jhagru Gond's case (3) are these.

 Every same person of the age of discretion is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his own

2. In deciding what are the natural and probable consequences of an act, we must presume that every actual consequence is a natural and probable consequence unless and until the contrary is affirmatively shown.

An actual consequence of the joint assault on Mithia was that a blow from a lathi fell on his head and broke his skull so that he died. That was, therefore, a natural and probable consequence of that joint attack, for the contrary has not been even suggested. Indeed, it seems to me that the frequency of this result by itself proves it to be the natural and probable consequence of belabouring a man with a latti anywhere above the waist so that there is imminent danger of a blow lighting on his head. We must presume, therefore, that every man who took part in that assault intended to sause the death of Mithia. The offense each of them committed was then primarily murder. Jaipal has not been shown to have struck Mithia with his lighter stick and then retired from the assault before the general assault began and the lathis of the others were flying round his head and shoulders, which is the only cireumstance I can imagine that would prove him to have had no part in the common intention of those others.

(12) But one of the most important points in the whole case has been left entirely out of consideration throughout, even in the argument of the appeal. That is the matter of the accused having acted in the exercise of the right of private defence, When Mithia aimed a blow at Dilan Singh which the latter avoided, his followers must have felt certain that he would hit him again with it unless they prevented him which he undoubtedly would have done. Now, if we presume that the accused knew that a blow with one of their own lathis would in all probability sause grievous hurt, we must presume that they knew that Mithia's lathi would have the same effect, Indeed, by applying the principles stated in Jhagru Gond's case (3) it has already been shown that the death of the vistim is a natural and probable result of anything like a careless hammering with a lathi, and there is no indication that Mithia was taking any particular care to avoid Dilan Singh's head. If Mithia's blow or any other blow that he was allowed to deliver had fallen on Dilan Singh's head and killed him as Mithia himself was killed, Mithia would certainly have been guilty of murder. The assault of Mithia on Dilan Singh was, therefore, such an assault as might reasonably, and in fact probably, did, cause an apprehension in himself and his followers that the death of Dilan Singh would be the consequence of it if it were not prevented.

(13) In these circumstances, under section 100 and section 96 of the Indian Penal Code the accused would have committed no offence in intentionally killing Mithia, if they had kept within the limits prescribed by section 99 of that Code, that is to say, if the assault could not be prevented by anything short of killing Mithia. It is, however, clear that the assault could have been prevented by a blow or two which would have caused no more than simple hart, if not indeed by threatening the man with lathic without actually striking him. In killing him the accused undoubtedly used much more force than was necessary for the purpose of defending the person of their master. But they were acting in the exercise of their right to defend their master against what was certainly a murderous assault, and, with such eare and attention as was humanly possible at the moment and in the circumstances, they did believe that they could not protest their master from that assault otherwise than by striking Mithia with their lathis, even at the imminent risk of hitting him on the head and eracking Their acts then amply satisfy the conditions required to bring them within the terms of the second Exception to the definition of murder in section 300 of the Indian Penal Code.

(14) There is also another matter which undoubtedly takes the intentional killing of Mithia out of section 302 of the Indian Penal Oode and makes the offence one punishable The assault by the under section 304. Mahar tenants on the Rajput Zemindar, not been likely if it bas aven result in anything worse than grieveus burt. undoubtedly would 6A18 grave provosation to the Zamindar's followers, quite sufficient to deprive ordinary men of their self-control. It was very sudden and the accused acted immediately, while still under the full influence of the passion engendered by that provocation. (15) It appears, therefore, that the appellant, Jaipal, is guilty of the offence of sulpable homicide not amounting to murder which is punishable under the first part of section 304 of the Indian Penl Code. But the maximum senteness allowed bу sestion 304 section 326 are exactly the same. is, therefore, no practical advantage in altering the conviction of Jaipal. He is also undoubtedly the least guilty of the party and it would searcely be fair to convict him of eulpable homicide while the others remain convicted of what is in some respects a less The sentence, however, Berious offense. requires examination. It is clear that Jaipal's offence is scarcely to be compared at all to that of the three other assailants in regard to its gravity. Indeed, if it had appeared that the blow he struck with his walking-stick was the first of all, he would have been entitled to an acquittal under section 96 of the Indian Penal Code as he sould not then have been said to have taken any part in the more serious assault with lathis, and a blow with a walking-stick not severe enough to cause a bruise is certainly not by itself in excess of what is sufficient to prevent an attack of the kind Mithia was making on Dilan Singh. But Jaipal appears to have joined in after the other accused had begun to use their lathis and is, for that reason only, guilty of the offence they committed. I consider that a short term of rigorous imprisonment is ample punishment for him, and he has already been in jail for more than three months, in addition to having spent nearly two months in the look-up. In the case of Jaipal the finding is maintained and the sentence is reduced to one of rigorous imprisonment for the period during which he has already been in jail.

(16) It appears to me necessary to mention the case of the first accused, Dilan Singh. He is ordinarily called Zemindar or Mokasi, a title implying a bigher status than that of an ordinary malgusar, and he is a Rajput. Walking in one of his own SABUP SONAR U. BAM SUNDAR THAKURAIN.

villages, followed by three armed elub men of his body-guard, he was accosted and reviled by an agad mahar filthily tenant, who aimed a blow at him with a lathi, which would certainly have been followed by others if the assailant had not been prevented. It seems to me to show complete ignorance of the ordinary course of human conduct and of human affairs to be able to believe, as the learned Judge says he does, that in these circumstances Dilan Singh merely avoided the blow and fled from the spot without saying anything to his followers beyond possibly salling their attention to the matter, not as one they should prevent or avenge but merely as one of interest. It is of course conelusively proved that when the Mahar tenant attacked the Rajput Zemindar, the latter immediately called upon his followers to beat him, that is to say, that he ineited them to cause simple burt at least. That, however, is no offence ascording to section 96 of the Indian Penal Code, by reason of his having acted in the exercise of the right stated in section 97 of the same Code. He was within the limits laid down in section 99 because it cannot even be suggested that he ordered his followers to use more force than was necessary for the purpose of defending him, whether the actual words he used were that they were to beat Mithia or to "lay him out " or to "settle him" or to "straighten him out" or to "see to him." The acquittal of Dilan Singh is, therefore, correct, but for a reason which was not in the mind of the learned Judge who acquitted him.

REFERRING ORDER. - This is an application to me to order further enquiry into the case of sertain assused who have been discharged by the learned Joint Magistrate of Gorakh. pur. The learned Magistrate has made a careful enquiry and I see no reason wby I should direct the matter be taken up again. There is, however, one point which I must deal with. The learned Magistrate has ordered, under section 250. that the complainant should pay compensation to the accused on account of having brought a frivolous and vexations charge. Now, under clause (1) of section 250, the procedure of the section applies only to offences triable by a Magistrate. In the present case, however, it appears from the Magistrate's order that the offence was triable as a dasoity by the Court of Session. I accordingly hereby call upon the Magistrate concerned to explain why the order awarding compensation should not be reported to the Hon'ble the High Court with a view to its being set aside illegal, inasmuch as the offence to which it related was not triable by a Magistrate. I shall be obliged if the Magistrate will be good enough to let me have his explanation within ten days, if possible.

JUDGMENT.—I have read the referring order of the learned Sessions Judge. The order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate is slearly an illegal one and must, therefore, he set aside as recommended by the learned Sessions Judge. I order assordingly.

ORIMINAL REFERENCE No. 126 of 1919. January 8, 1920.

Present: -Mr. Faweett, J. C., and Mr. Kineaid, A. J. O. EMPEROR-PROSECUTOR

MEHRALI BACHAL - ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1878), ss. 225, 233, 537-Charge, separate, for each offence-Omission to frame separate charge-Irregularity, whether material.

Although section 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code requires that for every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge, yet under sections 225 and 537, where this is not done, the irregularity is immaterial, unless the accused was misled by the error, and it has occasioned a failure of justice.

Reference made under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, by Mr. Kemp, A. J. C., of Sind.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor, for the Orown.

JUDGMENT.-This is a reference by Kemp, A. J. C., under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code.

The assused Mahrab was charged with having committed house-breaking by night and theft and culpable homicide not amountmurder under sections ing to 380 and 304 (ii), Indian Penal Code, and was found guilty by the Jury.

The Additional Judicial Commissioner has accepted the verdiet under section 301 (ii), but disagreed with the remainder of it. This disagreement is based not on any difference of opinion as to the culpability of the accused, but upon a technical point relating to the charge. The charge says that the accused committed house breaking and theft at the shop of Khemo and Dharamdas, whereas the evidence shows that there were two separate shops of Khemo and Dharamdas in respect of each of which the offences charged were committed. This fact, he says, was unfortunately not present to his mind when he charged the Jury, and he is of opinion that there should have been a separate charge in respect of the house-breaking and theft from each shop and that the conviction on the charges under sections 457 and 380 (as framed) cannot stand,

We, think, however, that this objection is not sound. No doubt, section 233, Oriminal Procedure Code, requires that for every distinct offence of which any person is assueed there shall be a separate charge. sections 225 and 537 of Bat under the Code an irregularity of this kind is immaterial, unless the accused was in fact misled by the error and it has occasioned a failure of justice. We agree with the veiw taken in Musai Singh v. Emperor (1) and by the majority of the Court in Ram Subhag Singh v. Emperor (2) that the error is one falling under these sections and does not necessarily vitiate the trial. In this case, it is elear that the assused has been in no way prejudiced, for the prosecution evidence showed the real facts and no objection was raised by him at the trial.

We accordingly think that the learned Judge should have accepted the verdist of the Jury and convicted the accused under sections 457 and 380, Indian Penal Code. Acting under the powers conferred on us by section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code, we now convict the assused, Mahrab son of Bashal, of the offences sharged under sections 304 (ii), 457 and 380, Indian Penal Oode. We sentence him to suffer rigorous imprisonment for eight years for the offence under section 304, and for two years for the offences under sections 457 and 380, Indian Penal Code, the sentences to be secutive. This makes the total imprisonment the same as inflieted on his companions in the erime.

Construction of judgment -- Foreclosure decree, final -Extension of time-Setting aside of decree - Benefit of doubt.

On an appeal from a decree final for foreclosure, the Appellate Court granted the judgment-debtors two weeks' time within which to pay the balance of the decretal money and directed that if the payment was made the mortgagors would be put in possession of the property mortgaged, but that if they failed to make the payment, their rights in the mortgaged property would be extinguished:

Held, that inasmuch as the judgment contained no provision that in case of failure to pay, the decree final for foreclosure would stand, the decree must be treated as granting an extension of time and setting aside the final decree and that, therefore, the judgment-debtors were entitled to pay the decretal money at any time before an order absolute was passed. following terms:-

"I, therefore, think that the judgmentdebtors should be allowed an opportunity to make good the deficiency in their payment. To make matters quite clear, I may lay it down that the total amount payable is Rs. 469 2.0 with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem from the 25th January 1919 to the date on which the deeree holder was put in possession of the property, as he appears to have been on some date since the order of 20th February 1920. The judgment-debtors are allowed two weeks' time for that purpose. If they make the necessary payment they will be put in possession of the property. If they fail to do so, their rights in it will be extinguished. The appeal susseeds to this extent." The date of this decision is the The judgment-debtors 3rd July 1920. should have paid the money on or before the 17th July 1920, but instead of doing so they tendered it on the 21st July 1920. The Court of first instance assepted the tender and directed that the money deposited should be paid to the decree holder and the property in question delivered bask to the judgment. debtors. That order has been upheld by the lower Appellate Court and forms the sabjest of the present appeal.

The judgment of the 3rd July 1920 is undoubtedly ambiguous. In case it meant that the decree final for foreslosure passed by the Court of first instance was to be set aside if the remainder of the decretal money was paid within 14 days, and be maintained, if it was not so paid, the judgment-debtors would undoubtedly be presluded from depositing that money beyond the extended period. The judgment does not expressly say so. All that it says is, that the judgmentdebtors will be allowed two weeks for paying the balance of the decretal money, that if they make the said payment, they will be put back in possession of the mortgaged property. but if they fail to do so, their rights in it will be extinguished. It does not say that in ease of failure the decree final for foreelesure shall stand. That judgment must, therefore, be treated as one granting an extension of time and setting aside the final BIPRADAS PAL CHOWDHULT D. KAMINI KUMAR LAHIRI.

The direction that in case of nonpayment the rights of the mortgagors in the disputed property shall be extinguished amounts to nothing more than the direction usually contained in preliminary decrees of that kind. In any event, where the language is doubtful, the benefit of the doubt ought to go to the judgment-debtors, who, as laid down in Vidyasagar v. Ratipal (1), are entitled to pay the decretal money at any time before an order absolute is passed. If the desree passed on appeal was conditional, a fresh deeree for foreelosure was necessary. If it was necessary, the judgment debtors had a right to stop the passing of such a decree by depositing the decretal money. A conditional decree for forcelosure is not a decree of the kind contemplated by Order XXXIV, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure; and the failure of the judgment-debtors to comply with the condition did not itself operate as a restoration of the decree final for foreelosure previously passed.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 167-Patni taluk-Rent-sale-Incumbrances, purchaser seeking to annul-Burden of proof-Presumption.

Where the purchaser of a patni taluk at a sale in execution of a decree for rent, is resisted in his attempt to obtain possession by certain tenants who claim to hold their lands as revenue-free or as lakhiraj, and he seeks to avail himself of the prosions of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and to annul these interests as incumbrances, it lies upon him to show an origin subsequent to the creation of the taluk, and, in the absence of any indication that these holdings had an origin either by creation or by the sufferance of the patnidar since the creation of the taluk, the proper presumption is that they date back to a period antecedent to the creation of the taluk. JUDGMENT.

LORD PRILLIMORE. - The plaintiff in the below, now represented by the Courts present appellants, was the purchaser at a public auction of the patni taluk Taraf Santipur, the property having been put up to sale in execution of a decree for rent. When he came to take possession he found that in thirty-eight villages, tenante, with some small exception, set up a claim to hold their lands as revenue free or as lakhiraj. He accordingly served notices under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 upon 103 occupiers, treating the interests which they claimed as insumbrances upon his purchase, which he had power under the various sections of the Act to avoid or annul. As they persisted in their claims, he instituted in the Court of the Munsif, 103 suits which were heard together.

During the somewhat protracted litigation which followed, fifteen of these suits were disposed of, and do not now come before their Lordships. The remaining eighty-eight are the subject of the first appeal, and there is a further batch of appeals represented in the second consolidated appeal also before their Lordships. The principles governing all these cases are the same, and the decision in one would cover the rect.

BIPBADAS PAL CHOWDHURT O. KIMINI RUMAR LABIRI.

The case made by the plaintiff is, that the patni taluk in question was created in 1807, that it was put up for sale on Ostober 2, 1899, and was bought by him free of incumbrances; that the lands in question were not registered as lakhiraj and were in fact mal lands, and that any right of the occupier to hold revenue free must be derived under some grant made by the talukdar, and that this would be an incumbrance upon the taluk which the plaintiff would be entitled to avoid or annul.

The defences in general form were that no Zemindar, patnidar or darpatnilar had been in possession of the land within twelve years, and the claims, therefore, were barred by limitation; that the lands never were mal lands; that they had in fact been registered as lakhiraj; and certain other objections not material to be discussed in the present judgment.

When the case came for trial before the Munsif he decided in favour of the defendants and dismissed the various suits, and on appeal the District Judge confirmed his decision. The matter was then taken to the High Court of Judicatura at Fort William in Bengal, which Court remanded the case to the District Judge for re-hearing the parties upon the evidence, and then addressing himself to the determination of the questions of law, intimating that the whole case would be open before him, and that every question of fact and law that arose for consideration upon the issues must be decided.

On this second hearing the District Judge, who was not the same as the first District Judge, went very sarefully into the evidence, and took the view that the burden of proving that the lands were mal lands lay upon the plaintiff, but that he had discharged it except in eight suits, in which he held that the defendants had proved that their lands were likhiraj. The ground on which he rested his view that the onus was in the first instance upon the plaintiff was that these suits were not suits "for the resumption of lathirai lands but for the evistion of the persons holding them, on the ground that they are trespassers, and, therefore, had no right or title to hold them,"

The materials put before him were partly dosumentary and partly oral. The plaintiff relied upon the Pargana register kept under Regulation VIII of 1800, the Kanungo register prepared and kept under Regulations of 1816 and 1819, the register kept the Land Registration Act of 1876 and sories of the Thak Maps and Thak Statements. In none of these were the in question shown to be lakhira; lands although there were instances in which other lands were mentioned as being lakhiraj. This was all the evidence which he gave. He did not show that any rent had ever been received in respect of the lands in suit. The way in which the learned District Judge accounted for this is as follows: "It must be remembered that the plaintiff is a new comer having purchased the paint at an auction cale only resently, and when it is borne in mind that some of the outgoing patnidars are at the back of the contending defendants, there is nothing extraordinary in the fact that plaintiff could not produce any Collection papers to show that any rents have ever been realized from the defendants for the lands in suit. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff by producing series of registers and Thakbast Maps and Thak statements, and showing that the lands in suit do not find any entry in any of these documents as lakhiraj succeeded in discharging the onus upon him, sufficiently to shift it on the defendants to prove that the lands they hold are lakhiraj lands."

The documentary evidence which the defendants relied upon was the Qainquennial register, the Terji statements and the Taidad registers. The learned District Judge thought that no useful assistance could be obtained from the two former; but with regard to the Taidad register, he gave it force wherever the lands could be identified. He thought that there was sufficient identification in eight—cases and he decided these in favour of the defendants. All the rest he decided in favour of the plaintiff.

The eighty-eight defendants who had been unsuccessful appealed to the High Court. The High Court first dealt with the application of Article 121 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, which provides that suits to avoid incumbrances in a pathi taluk sold for arrears of rent must be commenced within twelve years from the date when the sale becomes and ecnelusive, and, therefore, by final inference permits suits to be brought within that time. But the learned Judges observed that the adverse possession contemplated in these cases is possession which commenced after the creation of the patni tenure. They say truly that the principle is, that the purchaser of the patni taluk at such a sale as the present takes the taluk in the state in which it was initially created; and after assuming the correctness of some decisions to which they refer, they add : "The purchaser takes the property not free merely of all incumbrances that may have accorded upon the tenure by the act of the defaulting proprietor, his representatives or assignees but also free of the interest acquired by an adverse possessor who has been able to acquire such interest by the inaction of the defaulting propieter." But they add: "This doctrine is plainly limited in its application to eases where the adverse possession commenced after the ereation In a case in which the of the paini. proprietor of the estate is out of possession, he sannot, merely by the device of the ereation of a subordinate taluk, arrest the effect of the adverse possession which has already commenced to run against him, and such possession would be effective not only as against the enbordinate tenureholder, but also as against the superior proprietor. Consequently, if a plaintiff relies upon Artiele 121 of Schedule II of the Indian Limitation Act, he has to establish that the incumbrance which he seeks to annul is due to adverse possession which commenced after the creation of the paini." They then point out that: "The District Judge has not found that in the cases before us the adverse possession of the defendants and their predecessors commenced after the ereation of the patni. On the other hand, there is ample evidence that the adverse possession of the defendants and their predecessors sommeneed before the creation of the paini. There are traces on the record to show that there had been assertions of hostile title before the paint itself was created."

The High Court accordingly reversed the decision of the District Judge and dismissed all the suits.

The estate of the superior Zemindar was created in 1799, and, even assuming that there were no lakhira; lands at the time of the creation of that estate, there would be room for the growth of interests by adverse possession between 1759 and 1807; and, as the High Court observer, on the assumption that the possible interests acquired by the defendants by adverse possession constitute incumbrances which can be annulled, the defect of the plaintiff is that he has not established that the adverse possession of the defendants and their predecessors commenced after 1807.

It is here that the strong body of oral evidence, to which the learned District Judge apparently paid little attention, comes in. There is a mass of evidence to show that the defendants and their predecessors had occupied the lands in question revenue free for periods greatly exceeding twelve years, and there was no evidence of any suggestion in cross-examination to which their Lordships' attention could be drawn to show that this compation had begun at any particular period. Apparently, it went back as far as anything could be traced.

In the absence of any indication that there holdings as revenue free tenures had an origin either by ereation or by the sufferance of a rathidar since 1867, their Lordships think that the High Court was right in saying that the proper presump. tion was that they ran back to a period antecedent to the ereation of the taluk, or to put it in another way, that it lay upon the plaintiff to show an origin subrequent to the creation of the paini taluk if he were seeking to avail himself of section 167 of the Act, and to annul these interests as incumbrances. the judgment of the learned District Judge had given no weight to the evidene of possession. Whether this possession is to be attributed to the fact that the predecessors of the defendants were in by title lawfully created before the grant of the taluk in 1807, or to be attributed, as Counsel for the appellants insisted must be the case (if they were to prevail), to interests lawfully ereated before 1790, or is to be attributed to adverse possession

The principle upon which their Lord. ships should proceed has been wellexpressed in the ease of Hurryhur Mookho. padhya v. Madub Chunder (1): "Again their Lordships think that no just exception can be taken to the ruling of the High Court toushing the burden of proof which such eases the plaintiff has to support, this class of cases is taken out of the special and exceptional legislation concerning resumption suits, it follows that it lies upon the plaintiff to prove a prima facis ease. His case is, that his mal land has, since 1750, been converted into lakhiraj. He is surely bound to give some evidence that his land was once mal. The High Court, in the judgment already considered. has not laid down that he must do this in any particular way. He may do it by proving payment of rent at some time since 1790, or by documentary or other proof that the land in question formed part of the mal assets of the estate at the Desencial Settlement. His prima facie case once proved, the burden of proof is shifted on the defendant, who must make out that his tenure existed before December 17:0. It may be objected that the result of this ruling may be that plaintiffs will cometimes fail, where under the former and loceer practice they would have susseeded in assessing or resuming the land. But this can only bappen by reason of the inability of the plaintiff to give prima facie proof of the fact which is the foundation of his title; a circumstance not likely to ceeur unless the defendants, or those from whom they claim have been long in possession of the tenure impeashed, Nor is it, in their Lordships' opinion, to be regretted if, in such easer, effect is given to those presumptions arising from long and uninterrupted possession, which were heretofore excluded only by the exceptional procedure applied to resumption snits under the Regulations, which have now been decided to be inapplicable to suits of this nature, and by relieving defendants from the burden which every year made it more difficult to support."

It is right to add one observation. The case proceeded in the Courts below upon the footing that an interest not directly created by the talukdar, but allowed to grow up by his sufferance and negligenes is an insumbrance within the definition given to that word in section 161 of the Act. There is apparently a surrent of desisions in India to this effect, and their Lordships have, for the purpose of their jadgment, assumed, as the Judges in the High Court assumed for their judgment, that this is correct, must not be taken that their Lordships have expressed a final opinion upon the point, it being unnecessary that they should do 80.

One further point remains. In order to be in a position to use the powers of section 167, the purchaser must act "within one year from the date of the sale or the date on which he first has notice of the incumbrance, whichever is the later." The plaintiff here did not act within one year from the date of the sale; but it is suggested that he did act within one year of his having notice. No point to the contrary was made in the Courts below the High Court, and no issue was taken. In these eireumstances, the High Court thought itself entitled to act upon the probabilities and to hold that the plaintiff must have had notice more than a year before he acted, and to decide against him on this ground also. Their Lordships cannot agree with this source of action, and if the point were now of importance they would have asseded to the application of the appellants, and remitted the sase in order that an issue as to this point might have been stated and found. But as, for the reasons already given, they think the plaintiff has failed on the main point, it becomes immaterial to have this issue decided.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. There being no appearance for the respondents, there will be no question as to costs.

JUDGMENT.—The following gerealogical table will show the relationship between the parties:—

The plaintiff brought this suit against the defendants for possession of 12 bighas 19 biswas of land and for damages, or, in the alternative, for joint possession with the defendants of the land in suit. The plaintiff alleged that all the four sons of Bhawani Din obtained a decree for underproprietary rights in respect of 32 bighas 1 biswa 12 biswansis; that in 1888 the plaintiff's father Lashman denied the title of Thakur Din, defendant No. 1, and dispossessed him of his share in the property; that thereafter the defendant No. 1 filed a suit for profits in respect of his one. fourth share but the suit was dismissed; that in 1890 defendant No. 1 brought a suit for partition of his one fourth share but that suit also was dismissed; that in 1906 the defendant No. 1 again brought a suit for profits in respect of his one-fourth share but that suit also was dismissed: that whatever rights the defendant No. 1 had in the under-proprietary holding had been extinguished; that the plaintiff had purebased the rights of his uneles Ram Autar and Darga Din and that, therefore, he was the sole owner of the entire property, but in 1914 the defendants foreibly took possession of 12 bighas 17 biswas and denied the plaintiff's title; that thereupon Ram Newaz, the elder brother of the plaintiff, filed an application under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in the Court of a Deputy Magistrate but the Deputy Magistrate beld that the defendants were in possession and maintained their possession and directed Ram Newsz to seek his remedy in the Civil Court. On these allegations the plaintiff sued for possossicn of the 12 bights 19 bismes and, in the alternative, if it were held that the defendants' title to a one fourth share in this land had not been extinguished, he prayed for joint possession of a the share in the land in suit.

The defendants depied that the plaintiff had acquired title by adverse possession. They pleaded that they had never lost possession over their share and that the plaintiff's claim was barred by time.

The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff had failed to establish his title by adverse possession and that the suit was not barred by time and it gave the plaintiff a decree for joint possession of a sthe shere in the land in suit and for Rs. 25

as damages.

The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the plaintiff's elaim on the ground that it is barred by limitation under Article 47 of the Limitation Act. The lower Appellate Court has held that, as the order of the Magistrate in the proseedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was passed on the 9th of September 1914, the plaintiff was bound, under Article 47 of the Limitation Act, to bring his suit within three years of the date of that order, and has relied on the ruling in Jogendra Kishore Roy Chowdhry v. Brojendra Kishore Roy Chowdhry (1). The question for decision is, whether Article 47 of the Limitation Act is applicable in the circumstances of the present case.

The plaintiff was no party to the proceed. ings under sestion 145; but it is argued on behalf of the respondents that be was bound by the order passed in those proceedings and that, in any case, he is claiming under Ram Newsz who was bound by that order. Admittedly, Ram Newaz and Ram Lal were members of a joint Hindu family and Ram Newaz was the elder brother, but it seems to me that it is impossible to hold that Ram Lal was bound by the order. There is nothing to show that Ram Newsz made his application as the head and manager of the joint family. But even if he did so the order was the order of a Oriminal Court directed to him personally. Ram Lal was no party to the proceedings and had he, ignoring the order, foreibly ousted the defendants from their possession he would not have been liable to conviction for an offense under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code. Nor can it be held that Ram Lal is claiming under Ram Newsz. Ram Lal and Ram Newaz were members of a joint Hindu family and Ram Lal succeeded to whatever interest Ram Newaz held in the land by right of survivorship and did not acquire his title through Ram Newsz [Sundar Lal v. Ohhitar Mal (2)]. The ruling in Jogendra Kishore Roy Choudhry V. Brojendra Kishore Roy Ohowdhry (1) on which the lower Appellate Court relies is clearly inapplicable. In that case defendant No. 1 was the adopted son of defendant No. 2 and derived his title to the property through defendant No. 2. For these reasons, I must hold that the plaintiff appellant's suit was not barred by limitation.

I, therefore, allow the appeal, and as the appeal has been desided on a preliminary point I remand it to the lower Appellate Court with directions to readmit the appeal and to dispose of it according to law. Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 16 -"Transfer by assignment in writing or by operation of law," meaning of - Mortgage, whether included.

The words "transfer by assignment in writing or by operation of law" in Order XXI, rule 16 of the Civil Procedure Code mean a transfer of all the transferor's interests in the decree. Unless the interests of the transferor in the decree are exhausted, there is not a transfer as the rule contemplates. The words do not include the transfer of rights in a decree by means of a mortgage.

JUDGMENT .- The facts of the case out of which this appeal arises are stated clearly and sussinetly in the order of the Second Additional District Judge. The appellant has obtained a decree under Order XXXIV. rule 5, by which he is at liberty to bring to sale the decretal right of Musammat Umtan Nissa in a money decree for dower due to her against a third party, in satisfaction of the amount due on a mortgage executed by the lady in favour of the appellant. Under this mertgage the lady transferred to him her rights as a decree bolder. He has not yet executed his decree, and the decretal right of the lady has not so far been sold to any one. He maintains that he is entitled to execute the deeree for dower against the third party without taking further steps in the matter. The point for desision is, whether the deeree for dower has been transferred to him by an assignment in writing or by operation of law. We are of opinion that, so far, it has not been transferred to anybody by assignment in writing or by operation of law within the meaning of the words in Order XXI, rule 16. There is considerable distinction between the transfer of rights as a decreeholder by mortgage and a transfer by assignment in writing or by operation of law of the deeree itself. In these circumstances, we can only read the words "transfer by assignment in writing or by operation of law" in Order XXI, rule 16, to mean a transfer of all the transferor's interests in the decree. Unless the interests of the transferor in the decree are exhausted there is not, in our opinion, such a transfer as Order XXI, rule 16 contemplates.

For the above reasons, we dismiss this appeal with costs including in this Court-fees on the higher scale.

Application against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, sitting as a Small Cause Court Judge, dated the 16th July 19.0.

Mr. S. N. Sinha, for the Applicant.

Mr. Hardhian Chandra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Autar, filed a suit against the defendant, Ram Asre, for the recovery of money due on a hond said to have been executed by the latter in favour of the former on the 1st July 1912. The bond provided that the money borrowed shall be repaid on or before Baisakh Sudi Puranmashi 1327 Fasli, that is, the 3rd May 1920; that the ereditor would be given possession over 13 bighas of tenancy land in lieu of a portion of the interest, and that if the balance of the interest and the principal sum were not paid by the time fixed, the ereditor would be entitled to continue in possession. The amount borrowed was Rs. 136. The bond was not registered. The plaintiff wanted a simple money decree against the defendant but the Court below refused to grant the same on the ground that the tenancy over which possession was given was not transferable and that the mortgage was consequently void.

It appears, however, to have overlocked the fact that there was here no valid mortgage at all, because the bond was not registered and could not affect immoveable property. There was, at best, only an agreement to deliver possession of a certain tenancy land in lieu of a portion of interest due on the bond, but that agreement was not enforceable. In fact, the landlord ejected the tenant some time after this transaction and such possession as the plaintiff had over the tenancy or the rental

SAITID MUSAWARD O. PARSHOTAN SARAN.

The plaintiff is, however, entitled to enforce the transaction irrespective of the mortgage, because no mortgage in law exists. In Krishnan v. Sankara Varma (1) where the trustees of a sertain temple in consideration of an advance of money which they required to pay off debte insurred for the benefit of the temple, granted to the plaintiff a lease of the right to manage the temple lands and the plaintiff promised that he would re pay himself out of profits to be derived from the lands and that neither the defendants nor their family property should be made liable for the debt, it was held that the agreement to deliver possession which was found to be illegal was collateral to the primary contract to re-pay the loan and that the latter was, therefore, enforceable. The former is nothing more than a contract prescribing a particular mode in which the re-payment shall be made. If the contract prescribing that particular mode of re-payment faile, the primary obligation can still be enforced provided the transaction is not one in which the consideration was forbidden by law or opposed to public policy.

Here the arrangement made to re pay the debt fails partly from want of registration and partly on assount of non transferability of the tenancy and subsequent ejestment of the tenant therefrom. The envenant to re pay the money borrowed can still be enforced, because, denuded of the agreement prescribing the method in which the interest was to be paid, the agreement to re pay was there and could be enforced against the person who made it. The deei-Kuraishi Begam v. sions in Mirea (2) and Shiam Sundar v. Dilgan in Singh (3) do not apply, because the remedy which was contemplated in those cases for the satisfaction of the mortgage debts question was foreslosure of the mortgaged property and no other.

The application is, therefore, allowed and the suit remanded to the Court below with a direction to reinstate it under its original number and to dispose of it after the determination of the remaining points involved, in the manner provided by law. The costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

JUDGMENT .- This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent for the enforcement of a mortgage given to his father Durga Prasad on the 18th August 1913 by the defendant-appellant Muhammad. It appears that the latter gave the mortgage of two of his properties in lieu of Rs. 1,000. The two properties were (1) land at Mauza Gandupal, and (2) some land forming part of the compound of a bungalow in the Civil Lines at Moradabad. The mortwas registered at Moradabad. gage-deed Durga Prasad died prior to the institution of the suit. The plaintiff, as the legal representative of the original mortgagee. instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Moradabad on the 1st of August 1919 for the resovery of the mortgagemoney by sale of the two properties hypothe. eated in the deed. The claim was resisted on various pleas, but we are concerned with one of them only in this appeal. The said plea was that the land which formed a part of the compound of the bungalow situated in the Civil Lines at Moradabad did not belong to the mortgagor and hence the registartion at Moradabad was invalid inaumuch as it was a fraud on the law of registration and the registration being invalid the deed of the 18th August 1913 could not be enforced as The plea was based a mortgage deed. on the allegation that the land in question with some other property had been dedicated some charities by the mortgagor's grandfather under a deed of 1887. At the time of the execution of the mortgage-deed of the 18th August 1913, the mortgagor was not the owner and proprietor of the said land and he could not create a valid mort. gage in respect of it. Both the Courte below found that the deed of wagf of 1887 relied upon by the mortgagor was in itself invalid and never acted upon. The elaim of the mortgagee, i. e, the plaintiff-respondent was, therefore, decreed. The mortgagor has some up in second appeal before us and contends that the deed of waqf of 1887 was a valid and a binding deed and had been acted upon. and that the registration of the deed of mortgage of the 18th August 1913 Moradabad was a fraud on the law of registration. We think this appeal can be disposed of without our having to express an opinion upon the validity of the deed of waqf of 1887. The name of the mortgagor stood in the Manieipal registers in respect οf the that land forms 1 part the compound of a bungalow in the Civil Lines at Moradabad at the time that the mortgage in suit was given. The mortgagor represented to the mortgagee that he (the mortgagor) was the owner and proprietor of the said land. It is not proved that the mortgages knew at the time of taking the mortgage that the land in question was part of the waqf property. The mortgagor cannot, therefore, take advantage of his own fraud by pleading that the mortgage dead was not registered at the proper place. As the land in question was hypothecated and entered in the mortgage deed, the deed could be presented before the Registrar at Moradabad and could be properly registered. It was so registered. In our opinion there was a valid registration and the deed of mortgage is enforsible as such. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs inslading in this Court fess on the higher ssale.

The Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is not applicable to an agriculturist who earns his livelihood wholly and principally by agriculture at a place in the runjab, or at any place to which the Act has no application. [p. 683, col. 1.]

What is meant by the extension of an Act to a district is, the extension of a substantial portion of the Act and not merely the extension of a particular section or one or more sections. [p 683,

col. 2.]

Mr. Tolasing Khushalsing, for the Plaint-

Mr. Srikrishendas Lullu, for Defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. Kalumal Pahlumal, for Defendant No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—Defendants in this suit are described as the joint family firm of Rai Bodraj earrying on businesses at Shikarpur, in Tahsil Bajanpur, Zilla Dera Ghazi Khan, Punjab. The enit is on a commission agency account and plaintiffs allege that there is over a lakh of rupees due to them at the foot of this account. Defendant No. 1 Bodraj contends that the commission agency account was only between the plaintiffs and himself and that as he is an agriculturist this Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit.

The first two issues raised in this suit

(1) Is defendant No. 1 an agriculturist?

(2) If so, has the Court jurisdiction to try the suit?

By consent these have been tried as preliminary issues on the assumption that defendant No. 1 is an agriculturist.

The point for determination would be, whether the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, XVII of 1879, is applicable to an agriculturist who earns his livelihood wholly and principally by agriculture at Dera Ghazi

Khan, Punjab.

The Dekkhan Agrienturists' Relief Act is entitled an Act for the relief of indebted agriculturists in certain parts of the Dekkhan, clause (3) of section I declares that this section and sections 11, 56, 60 and 62 extend to the whole of British India. The rest of this Act extends only to the districts of Poona, Sholapur and Ahmednagar, but may, from time to time, be extended wholly or in part by the Local Government with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council to any other district or districts in the Presidency of Bombay. Mr. Lulla argues that, as section 11 has been made applicable to the whole of British India and the suit filed against defendant No. 1 falls within the description mentioned in section 3, clause (1), it is open to him to claim the privileges of this Act.

The term, agriculturist, is defined in clause (1) of section 2, as meaning a person who by himself or his servants earns his livelihood wholly or principally by agriculture earried on within the limits of a district or part of a district to which this Act may for the time being be extended, or who originally engages personally in agrieulture labour within these limits. The agriculture is, therefore, to be sarried on within the limits of a district to which this Ast may apply. The whole of this Ast is extended to the four districts specified in section I, some provisions of the Act apply to the districts and some apply to the whole of British India. The words "this Act may for the time being extend," can bardly be construed as including any portion of the Ast, for, on the basis of this interpretation, the Act may be made applicable to Calcutta or Madras. The extension of a few sections cannot be regarded as an extension of the Act. As was said in the case of Chanbasayya v. Chennapgavda (1): "What is meant by the extension of an Act to a district is, the extension of a substantial portion of the Act and not merely the particular extension of a section or more sections." And in the case of Purchotam Lalbhai v. Bhavanji Partab (2) it was held that, "the effect of the extension of sestion il by the first section of it, to all India is, simply to impose upon any person in any part of India who brings a suit, of a nature mentioned in the third section, against an agriculturist or agriculturists residing within the Districts of Poons, Satars, Sholapur and Ahmednagar, the necessity of instituting such suit, and having it tried, in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction he or they reside. The Court must necessarily be in some one of the said four districts. The word 'agriculturiet', as defined in section 2. elause (2), refers to an agriculturist residing within any one of the said four districts only, and not to one residing in any other district." The enumeration of the four districts in the ease is in accordance with the definition of the term 'agriculturist' as it then stood, and the Act has extended in whole or in part to other districts or places in the Presidency of Bombay. The judgment in this case was given on a reference from the Judge of the Small Cause Court at Ahmedabad, who placed on section 11 the same interpretation as Mr. Lulla seeks to do now. Mr. Lulla relied on the judgment in the case of Tulsidas Dhunies v. Virbussopa (3) in support of his argument. He apparently has misread the following passage in this judgment: "It follows that 'agriculturist' in section 11 means one according to the definition in section 2, although the latter section is not declared to extend to the whole of British India. Section 11 extends to the whole of British India as to suits brought against agriculturists of the description given in section 2." All that this passage means is, what has been stated in the judgment at page 360 that there is an obligation upon any person in any part of India who brings a suit of the nature mentioned in the third section against an agriculturist, to bring it within the four places mentioned in the Act.

There can be no doubt that the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is essentially a local measure and it could not have been contemplated by the Legislature to make it one of general application by the extension of sections 1 and 2 to the whole of British India.

My finding, therefore, on the preliminary issue will be, assuming defendant No. 1 to be an egriculturist, as he is a resident of the Ponjab, to which the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act has no application, this Court has jurisdiction to try the suit.

GIJADHAR PRASAD C. MANBARHAN.

The facts are as follows :- Musammot Dal Kuar while in possession as a Hindu widow of the property of her deceased husband, Baldeo Singb, executed a mortgage by sonditional sale in favour of one Jagannath. Jagannath brought a suit for forcelosure, obtained a final decree on 13th January 1910 and was put in possession of the prop-Musammat Dal Kuar died in March erty. 1916. Thereafter, Mangal Singh and certain other persons brought a suit against Jagannath on the ground that they were the nearest reversioners of Baldeo Singh and that the mortgage had been obtained by Jagannath without legal necessity. their pedigree they showed Thanna Singh and his brother, Badri Singh, (since deceas. ed) as being nearer in degree to Baldeo Singh than themselves but alleged that they were illegitimate. Among the defences plead. ed by Jagannath one was that Thanra Singh and his brother were not illegitimate ard that, on the plaintiffe' own case, they ard not the plaintiffs were the nearest reversioners. While this suit was pending Thanka Sirgh, on 18th January 1918, sold a two appas eight pies share in Manza Bardhai to Manrakhan for a sum of Rs. 350. The sale deed sets out that he is the owner of the property as heir of Baldeo Singh but that Mangal Singh and others had get mutation and brought a claim in the Civil Courts for the property and that Thanks Singh had not the means to fight the case. He, therefore, sold the property to his vendee Manrakhan. After the execution of this sale-deed, Manrakhan brought a suit against Jagannath for possession of the property. This suit and that previously instituted by Mangal Singh were tried together and by a judgment, dated 7th December 1918, the learned Subordinate Judge decreed the elaim of Manrakhan and dismissed the eross-suit. Shortly afterwards, on 18th January 1919, the present appellant, Gajadhar Prasad, filed a suit for pre-emption in respect of the sale deed of 19th January 1918 in favour of Manrakhan. Two other preemptors also filed suits but with these we are not now concerned.

The grounds on which the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived at the finding on which he has dismissed the suit are:

(1) that Thanna Singh was not in possession of the property;

(2) that the suscess of Thanna Singh's elaim, should be bring one, was doubtful;

(3) that the sale price was very much less than the real value of the property which is now valued at Rs. 2,000

In this connection it may be remarked that, however good Thanna Singh's title might be, no one would be likely to give anything like the full value for the purchase of property when he knew that a long and expensive law suit would be necessary before he could obtain possession of it.

The question for decision is, whether the considerations relied on by the learned Subordinate Judge are sufficient to bring the case within the principle of the rulings on which he has relied. In my opinion, the principle of those cases must be confined within very narrow limits. The facts of Abdul Wahid Khan v. Shaluka Bibi (1), were of an altogether exceptional nature. The defendant who was setting up the elaim to pre-emption was at the same time denying the title of the vendor, and alleging that he himself was the true owner of the property. The sale which he sought to pre-empt was executed for the purpose of raising funds to recover the property from the defendant himself, the very person who set up his right of pre-emption in defence. The costs to be incurred in the legal proceedings formed a part of the price agreed upon. Under these eirsum. stances, their Lordships held that the law of pre-emption laid down in the Oudh Laws Act was not applicable and added; "In truth, the transaction was a sale of a share in a law suit. The position taken up by the defendant was altogether inconsistent with claiming a right of preemption," In Mirea Mohammad Abbas Ali Khan Bahadur v. A. Quieros (2), Mr. Scott, who delivered the leading judgment, said that the facts were not very different from those of the Privy Council ease. In this ease not only had the vendor a very doubtful right under the Will, but the major portion of the sale consideration was made to depend on whether it was decided that he had any right to the property. Mr. Chamier, in concurring, said that this was not the kind of transaction to which RIJAH OF RAMESD U. EAMITH RAVOTHAN.

Chapter II of the Oudh Laws Act was ever intended to apply and that it would be impossible for a Court to ascertain the market value of what was being sold.

In my opinion, these rulings were never intended to lay down that no right of preemption arises in any case in which the vendor was out of possession and litigation would be necessary to recover possession of the property. The fact that the vendor had in truth a good title to the property is evident from the result of the litigation which afterwards took place. I have myself held in the case of Balwant Singh v. Lallu Ram (5), that the question whether a sale is a genuine sale or a mere sale of a share in a law suit is one to be determined on the facts of the case, and that it is certainly not correct to say that no sale can be the subject of pre-emption where legal proeeedings are necessary to obtain possession of the property. On the facts, that was a stronger case in favour of the pre emptor than the present, but the principles there laid down, to which I still adhere, are entirely applicable to the case before me. The sale-deed definitely purports to sell not a share in a law suit but a two-annas eight-pies share in Zemindari property to which the vendor definitely and clearly There is no reason on states his title. principle why a champertous purchase of this nature should be exempted from the liability to pre emption to which other purchases are subject. In my opinion, the suit has been wrongly dismissed on this preliminary ground and, setting aside the decrees of the Courts below. I remand the case through the lower Appellale Court to the Court of first instance for decision on the merits. The appellant will be entitled to his costs in this Court and in the Court below. As Bharat Singh had ceased before his death to have any interest in the suit it will not be necessary to make his heirs parties in the Court below. In fact, there appears to be now no necessity for determining the fourth issue originally framed by the learned Munsif.

ORDER.—These are petitions for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from an order passed under section 25 of Act IX of 1887 in exercise of the High Court's powers of revision over the judgment given by the District Mansif of Manamadura in certain Small Cause suits.

Those suits were brought by the Rajah of Ramnad in a Small Cause Court to recover damages for the cutting of trees in the defendants' holdings. The damages claimed amounted to no more than a few rupees in each case. It is now alleged in an affidavit sworn to by a subordinate of the Rajah that the effect of our order will be to deprive the plaintiff of tirva to the extent of Rs. 30,000 when the whole Zamindari is considered. There is no counter affidavit and this statement, therefore, is not challenged. It is, therefore, urged that the order involves, directly or indirectly, a claim or question of upwards of Rs. 10,000 in value.

The reference in the Civil Procedure Code is evidently to questions arising between the parties to the suit and not to questions affecting the title of one of the parties to the suit in suits that may hereafter be brought but are not now pending. Vide Hanuman Prasad v. Bhaguati Prasad (1) which follows a decision of the Privy Council in Moofti Mohummud Ubdoollah v. Baboo Mootichund (2) and must, therefore, be preferred to the decision of a Single Judge in Anarda Chandra

Bose v. Broughton (3).

As the value of the subject matter involved is less than Rs. 10,000 no appeal can lie from our final order unless we certify under clause 39 of the Letters Patent that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Privy Conneil.

We think it must be conceded that our decision, being one on the meaning of section 12 of the Madras Estates Land Act, involved a substantial question of law and that it is likely to have very serious and far-reaching consequences in the Ramnad Zemindari, seeing that other Courts in that District will follow it in dealing with disputes as to the rent payable for trees and as to the right of rangets to take the timber of growing trees. Looked at from this point of view, the right in dispute is not exactly measurable in money, but is of great private importance and, in such cases, leave to appeal has been granted in Joykishen Mookeree v. Collector of East Burdson (4) and by the Allahabad and Bombay High Courts respectively in Anant Ram v. Sheorai Singh (5) and Harribhai v. Jamshedni (6).

We, therefore, certify under clause 39 that these cases are fit cases for appeal. The appeals may be consolidated for purposes of security.

Where a mortgagee from some members of a Hindu joint family seeks only a simple money-decree in respect of the mortgage-debt, no question of legal necessity arises. In the absence of fraud, undue influence, or other circumstances which would invalidate the contract, the members who executed the mortgage are personally liable and the other members are liable to the extent of the assets of the executants who are dead which have come into their hands. MAHRAJ PRAG DIN C. BHAGWATI SAHAI,

Where a mortgage deed provides that the interest will be paid year by year and in case of default it will be added to the principal and compound interest will be charged; that the mortgagee might realise the interest every year by suit or might have it added to the principal, and that at the time of redemption or foreclosure the total interest due would be deemed to be a separate item which the mortgagee would be entitled to recover from the person and other property of the mortgagors, the mortgagee has an option either to sue for his interest year by year or to allow it to be compounded and to sue for it at the time of redemption or foreclosure and no part of the interest can become barred by time. [p 690, col. 2,]

In order to establish undue influence as defined by section 16 of the Contract Act, it must be shown that the lender took advantage of the necessity and of the position of the borrower and imposed unconscionable terms. The mere fact that the borrower was under urgent need to borrow is not of itself sufficient to raise the presumption that undue influence was exercised, nor does the existence of urgent need, accompanied by the fact that a high rate of interest is charged, establish such a presumption, [p. 689, col. 2; p. 690, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT .- Mahraj Prag Din brought a suit on the basis of two registered mortgage-deeds executed in his favour on the 3rd October 1899 by Nand Kishore, Girja Dayal, Bhagwan Das, Gur Prasad, Parbhu Dayal, Musammat Mul Kunwar, Sami Dayal, Behari Lal, Kanhaiya Lal and Bans Gopal. One of these deeds was a usufructuary mortgage for Rs. 900. It provided that the mortgagee should be put in possession of the mortgagor's share of 6 biswas and 13 biswansis of Bagipur and should take the profits of it in lieu of interest, that the mortgaged property would be redeemed after seven years and that, on failure to redeem, the mortgage-deed would be treated as a moregage by conditional sale. The other deed was a deed of further charge for Rs. 900. It provided that the principal sum should be paid along with the money due on the deed of usufrustuary mortgage at the stipulated time and in case of default it should be considered as a portion of the purchase money, and that the interest would be treated as an amount separate from the principal which the mortgages in oase of nonpayment at the time or redemption or absolute sale would be entitled to recover from the other moveable or immoveable property of the original mortgagors. Nand Kishore, Girja Dayal, Bhagwan Dar, Parbhu Dayal, Kanhaiya Lal and Bans Gopal are dead. The mortgagee brought his suit against their representatives and the other mortgagors for foreelosure in respect of the principal amounting to Rs. 1,800 and for a simple money decree for Re. 25.338 in respect of interest due on the deed of further charge. The learned Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff a decree for foreclosure in respect of the principal sum and a simple money-deeree for Rs. 3,318 in respect of interest due on the deed of further charge. The rate of interest entered in the deed was Re. 1.10.0 per cent. per month with yearly rests, but the learned Subordinate Judge bas allowed only simple interest at that rate. The defendants pleaded that the property mortgaged was joint family property, that there was no valid necessity for raising the money on such bard terms, and that undue influence had been exercised. The learned Subordinate Judge has not some to a very clear finding on these pleas. He seems to have held that, although the principal money was borrowed for legal necessity, there was no such necessity as would justify the high rate of interest at which money was borrowed. held that the terms of the deed were hard and unconscionable but he does not appear to have held that undue influence, as defined in section 16 of the Indian Contract Act, had been exercised. The defendants also pleaded that the suit for a simple money decree was either premature or barred by time, but this plea was not accepted by the lower Court. The deeree passed by the lower Court in respeet of the interest was a personal decree against Gur Prasad, Musammat Mul Kunwar, Sami Dayal, and Behari Lal. Against the other defendants the lower Court gave a decree only to the extent of the assets of the deceased mortgagors which had come into their hands or which were proved to have been received by them and not duly accounted for. The defendants have paid the principal sum of

MAHRAJ PRAG DIN U. BHAGWATI SAHAI.

Rs. 1,800. Against the decree for Rs. 3,318 in respect of interest they have filed an Appeal (No. 60 of 1919) and the grounds taken are that the rate of interest allowed by the Subordinate Judge was excessive and that a claim for a simple money-decree was either premature or time barred, plaintiff has also filed an Appeal (No. 48 of 1919) and he elaims that interest should have been allowed at the stipulated rate and that, in any case, compound interest should have been allowed against those persons who had executed the deed of farther charge. It will be noted that the plaintiff does not claim that a personal decree should have been passed against any of the defendants who were not parties to the deed. . In view of the decree which has been passed and of the grounds taken in appeal, it seems to us that the question of legal necessity does not arise. It is urged on behalf of the defendants, that as there was a morigage on the joint family property, and that as it was sought to enforce the mortgage against the members of the joint family, then each covenant in the mortgage should be scrutin'zad whether it affects the joint family property or not, and that even if any of the sovenants does not affect the joint family property it cannot be binding on the members of the joint family unless it be proved that there was legal necessity in respect of it, We find onreelyee unable to assept this view of the law. The learned Counsel for the defend. ants relies upon the rulings reported as Nawab Natir Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (1) and Sorab it Singh v. Gur Bakhsh Singh (2); but in both those cases it was sought to enforce the mortgage debt against the joint family property. In the present case it is not sought to enforce the covenant in the deed of further charge in respect of interest against the mortgaged property and only a simple money. deeree has been asked for in respect of it. In the absence of fraud, undue influence, or other eirenmetances which would invalidate the contract, the defendants who entered into the covenant are clearly personally liable and the other defendants are clearly liable to the extent of the assets of the executants who are dead which have come into their hands. Indeed, we think that a personal decree could have been passed against the sons and grandsons of the deseased executants who have been made defendants in the present ease as, in the view of the ruling in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (3), they are under a pious obligation to discharge the debt as there is no suggestion that it was insurred for immoral purposes.

The questions, then, that remain for decision in these two appeals are ;-

first, was any undue influence, as defined in section 16 of the Indian Contract Act, exercised, and, if sc, what rate of interest should be allowed? and secondly, was the claim in respect of interest barred by limitation or premature ?

With respect to the question of andue inflaence, we find that a forcelosure deeree for Rs. 709.12.0 had been obtained in respect of the property mortgaged by the defendants in a suit against the mortgagors and the 6th of October . 899 was the last day allowed for payment. The deeds in suit were executed on the 3rd of Ostober 1899 and the amount borrowed on them was Rs, 1,800. It is elear, therefore, that the mortgagors were in urgent need of obtaining money to pay off the foreelosure decree. But the mere fast that such urgent need existed is not of itself sufficient to raise the presumption that undue influence was exercised: Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (4), and Oharan v. Kanchan Kuar (5). Nor, indeed, does the existence of urgent need accompanied by the fact that a high rate of interest was charged establish such a presumption. In ordinary circumstances, the more pressing the necessity the higher the rate of interest is likely to be, for the borrowers have not time to make such inquiries as will ensure that they are borrowing at the cheapest rate obtainable. In order to establish undue influence, as defined by section 16 of the Contract Act, it must be shown that the lender too's advantage of the necessity and of the position of the borrower and imposed unconsciousble terms. [Kamla Prasad v. Ram Chantra Frasad Narain Singh (6).

In the present case the terms are by no means unusual. The interest charged was at the rate of Re. 1.10 0 per cent. with yearly restr. We find that the defendants had borrowed money previously on practically the same terms in order to purchase the property mortgaged by the deeds in suit and that the mortgages in respect of which the foreslosure decree was obtained earried interest at the same rate. And the fact that no less than nine adult male members of the family joined together in excenting the deed of further charge is in itself an indication that no undue is figence is likely to have been exercised. Furthermore, we find that the defendante, in paragraph 14 of their written statement, set out in definite terms the manner in which they alleged that undue influence had been exercised. They declared that they had negotiated a loan from Auseri Singh, resident of Taralia, on interest at Ro. 1 per cent. per mensem for the purpose of paying off the forselosure deeres; that when the plaintiff agreed to lend them the money at the same rate of interest they dropped the negotiations with Auseri Singh, and that when the time for foreclosure came very near and the parties went to Sitapur to exesute the deed, the plaintiff resiled from his agreement and insisted on taking compound interest on the deed of further charge at Re. 1.10 0 per cent. per mensem; and as the time was so short the defendants were compelled to assept the terms offered to them and took the loan in order to save the property from foreelosure. Had the defendants been able to prove these allegations we should not have besitated in holding that undue influence had been exercised, but there is no evidence whatsoever to support this story nor has it been accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge. Auseri Singh himself has not been examined as a witness. Not one of the defend. ants has gone into the witness-box and we have merely the statement of Jang Bahadur, the son of Auseri Singb, to the effect that twenty years ago Bhagwati Sahai, Nand

Kishore and Giria Dayal approached him and asked for a loan of about R: 2,000, but he does not remember what interest he asked or for what purpose the money was required; nor does he say that he agreed to lend the money. In all these circumstances, we must hold that the defendants have failed to prove that any undue influence was exercised. That being so, the plaintiff is entitled to enforce the terms of the bond and no reduction in the rate of interest can be allowed.

The deed of further charge provides that the interest will be paid year by year; in case of default it will be added to the principal and compound interest will be charged; that the mortgagee might realise the interest every year by suit or might have it added to the principal, and that at the time of redemption or foreelosure the total interest due would be deemed to be a separate item which the mortgages would be entitled to recover from the person and other property of the mortgagors. The deed, therefore, gives the plaintiff an option either to sue for his interest year by year or to allow it to be compounded and to sue for it at the time of redemption or foreelosure. In there eireum. stances, following a series of rulings of this Court, we hold that the claim for interest as brought was not barred by limitation. Durga v. Tota Ram (7), Ram Farshad v. Qadro (8), Mubarak Ali v. Gopt Nath (9), Basant Singh v. Rampal Singh (10), Kali Charan v. Ohhab Nath (11).

Finally, it is urged that the suit for interest is premature because under paragraph 6 of the deed of further charge the right to recover accreed only after redemption or fore-closure had taken place. We are of opinion that there is no force in this contention and that the plaintiff was under the terms of the deed entitled to bring his suit for the interest due along with his suit for forcelosure.

The result is, that we allow the plaintiff's appeal (No. 48 of 1919) and dismiss the defendant's appeal (No. 60 of 1919). The

The remaining defendants will be liable only to the extent of the assets of Nand Kishore, Girja Dayal, Bhagwan Dae, Parbhu Dayal, Kanbaiya Lal and Bans Gopal in their hands and proved to have been received by them and not duly assounted for. MESSES, SUKHAMAL BANSIDHAR-OPPOSITE PARTY.

Arbitration-Interpretation of arbitration clauses-Arbitrator's powers-Arbitrary interpretation-Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

Although generally the interpretation of arbitration clauses is for the arbitrator, yet when a Court is asked to file an award, it must determine whether the document propounded as such is the production of an arbitration tribunal duly constituted under the terms of a contract or agreement binding upon both parties. [p 692, col. 2.]

In a contract of sale there were two clauses, one providing that the parties would refer their disputes to arbitration the other that no claim or dispute of any sort was to be recognised unless made within a certain specified period. In course of time the sellers claiming damages for breach of contract referred the matter to arbitration, but did so after the period specified had expired. The buyers raised objection but the arbitrator gave the award holding that the second clause referred to disputes raised by the buyers only and had nothing to do with any claim for damages by the sellers. On an application to file the award the buyers contended that the award was without jurisdiction. The sellers replied that the Court had no jurisdiction to open the matter as the interpretation of the clause was for the arbitrator

Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to go into the matter, that the clause was applicable to both parties and that, therefore, the award was invalid. [p 632, col. 2.]

Per Walsh, J.—The interpretation of arbitration clauses is for the arbitrator but in the present case there is no question of interpretation. To hold that a plain and unambiguous clause applies against one party to the contract and not against the other is misconduct [p. 693, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Piggort, J .- This is an application to file an award, dated November 22nd, 1920, made in connection with a trade dispute between two firms upon a private submission and an arbitration conducted without the intervention of the Court. The defendant-firm is the same as in cases Nos. 1 and 2 to-day desided by us, and the fasts of the dispute are broadly similar. Here also, the award is that of an umpire appointed by the Committee of the Delhi Piece Goods Assoeiation after the arbitrators chosen by the parties had failed to agree. There are two points upon which the present case is distinguishable from those above referred to:-

(t) The order placed by the defendantfirm with the plaintiff firm was embodied in seven indents; the letters of acceptance in respect of two of these are not forthcoming, but in each of the remaining five letters the form of words employed is as follows:—

"We have to intimate that your indents have been assepted by wire and the same are subject to revision and confirmation by mail." The qualifying expression, "if required," to which I attached considerable weight in deciding the connected cases, is not to be found here; though we do not know for certain that it did not appear in the letter of acceptance which was undoubtedly written and delivered in respect of the first two indents. Mr. Tota Ram, Manager of the plaintiff firm, has made a very clear and (as I think) straightforward statement regarding the course of business batween the parties and the reasons why he did not think it necessary to make REDAR NATH MOTI LAL &. SUKHAMAL BANSIDHAR.

any further communication to the defendantfirm when the arrival of the mail from England showed that there had been no error of transmission in the cables which had passed between his firm and their Manchester correspondents. If this were the only point in the case I should be prepared to hold, though not without some hesitation, that the meaning of the reservation with which the plaintiff firm's acceptance was qualified was perfectly understood by both parties, that it had reference only to a contingency which never in fact arose, and that there was a completed contract between the parties.

(ii) There is, however, another difficulty in the way of the plaintiff-firm. According to clause (14) of the printed form of indent, which is the basis of the contract between the parties.—

"No elaim or dispute of any sort whatever can be recognized if not made in writing within sixty days from due date of payment."

The first letter written by the plaintiffafter the defendant firm had refused delivery and repudiated the contract, in which the former prefer any claim for damages is one dated April 13th, 1920, considerably more than sixty days after due date of payment in respect of the very latest of the indents concerned. The umpire has considered this point: he says, in effect, that the clause above quoted refers to elaims put forward or disputes raised by the buyers and has nothing to do with any claim by the sellers for damages for breach of contract. It must be remembered that elause (3) of the indent form provides the sellers with a prompt and effective remedy against failure on the part of the buyers to accept delivery: if the plaintiff. firm had shoren to avail themselves of this remedy we should have had a "elaim" on their part well within the prescribed period of limitation. Thay shore not to avail themselves of this remedy and to fall back on their rights under the ordinary law as the vendors under a contract of sale which the vendees had repudiated and refused to perform. The question is, whether the plaintiff firm, having done thie, can claim the benefit of the arbitration elause, which is No. 15 in the irdent form, without first fulfilling the obligation imposed upon them by clause 14; that is to say, without preferring a claim in writing within the prescribed period of sixty days. On the contract as it stands nothing could well be plainer than the expression: "No elaim or dispute of any sort whatever" used in clause 14. We were asked to consider the terms of the contract as a whole; and on doing this it seems to me impossible to avoid the inference that the condition laid down in this clause was intended as a condition precedent to the operation of elause 15. It was arged that the arbitrator was in a better position than this Court ean be to understand the ordinary course of business in this matter and the intention of the parties when entering into this contract. If this point is seriously pressed, it seems to me that we cannot altogether shut our eyes to the fact that the umpire represents the views of the Delbi Piece Goods Association, that is to say, of the importing firms, who are vitally interested in throwing the burden of the loss consequent on the slump in the Indian market after November 11th, 1918, as far as possible, on the "buyers in India" rather than on the importers. In any case, the duty is east upon this Court of interpreting the terms of the contract and I do not see how we can agree to twist the plain language of clause 14 into something wholly different. Finally, it was contended that the point was one for the decision of the arbitration tribuoal and that we are not sitting as a Court of Appeal from the arbitrators or umpire. This last proposition is correct, and I have endeavoured studionsly to bear it in mind throughout; but when the Court is asked to file an award it must determine whether the document propounded as such is the production of an arbitration tribunal duly constituted under the terms of a contract or agreement bind. ing upon both parties. In my opinion the plaintiff-firm was not entitled to elaim the benefit of the arbitration clause (No. 15 of the contract) unless and until the provisions of the previous clause had been complied with. If this view is correct, it follows that the award of the umpire is not the decision of a tribunal to which the defendant-firm was bound, under the terms of their contract, to submit.

I would, therefore, dismiss this applieation with costs, including fees on the higher seale.

WALSH, J .- I agree that the applicants in this ease are not entitled to an order filing the award. In my jadgment the arbitrator and umpire had no jurisdiction on the ground of the failure by the sellers to comply with clause 14 of the contract. The interpretation generally of clauses is for the arbitrators. But there is no question of interpretation in this case. To bold that a plain and unambiguous slause applies against one party to the contract and not against the other is misconduct. In this ease it is clear that it was so held in the interests of a class to which the arbitrator himself belonged. Au arbitrator cannot give himself jurisdiction by arriving at a conclusion which there is no evidence to support, and on the evidence it was plain that no elaim in writing was made within the sixty days, nor was there any evidence that this stipulation had been waived.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), a 152-Plaint, rectification of error in, after disposal of suit.

Under section 152, Civil Procedure Code, errors in judgments and decrees can be corrected at any moment; and if those errors follow from clerical or accidental mistakes committed in the plaint or other proceedings it is open to the Court to ascertain by enquiry whether any accidental slip has occurred and to rectify it if the real points at issue are not affected thereby. [p. 693, col, 2.]

Application against an order of the Munsif, Musafirkhana, dated the 28th August 1920.

Mr. H. K. Ghosh, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the correction of an accidental slip in the plaint filed in a suit which was decreed by the Munsif of Musafirkhaus on the 31st August 1917. Recently, the plaintiffs discovered that grove No. 1494 khasra was wrongly described in the decree and in the plaint as No. 11464 khasra. They applied to the Court below for the rectification of the error under section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure but the Court refused to entertain the application.

It appears that the grove in question was described in the plaint not only by the number but also by its area and by the number of trees which it contained. The allegation of the plaintiffs is, that the area and the number of trees given in the plaint are correct and apply to grove No. 1494 khasra but they do not apply to plot No. 146 & khasra which is cultivated land and not a grove and contains only 3 biswas of land. It might be argued that section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies only to a pending suit or appeal and that no amendment can be made in the plaint after the suit or appeal has been decided. But errors in judgments and decrees can be corrected at any moment; and if those errors follow from elerical mistakes committed in the plaint or other proceedings it is open to the Court to assertrain by enquiry whether any assidental slip has occurred and to restify it, if the real points at issue are not affected thereby. The suggestion is, that the descrip. tion given in the plaint is partly correct and partly incorrect and that effect should be given to the portion which is correct, and the incorrect portion rectified. In Sheo Balak Pathak v. Suchdei (1) a elerical error of this kind was allowed to be corrected and the whole record, beginning with the plaint, was allowed to be restified after the suit was desided. In Gang: Prasad v. Subhag Chand (2) it was held that where a deeree described the mortgaged property in more ways than one and one description applied to one set of existing facts and another to another set of existing facts it was the duty of the Court excenting the decree to ascertain by a reference to the reacid or other evidence to which description the decree was interded to apply. If this can be done in the course of excention, it can equally be done before execution takes place by an ameriment of the decree, provided the error is of a clerical nature or ascidental and the trial or result of the case is not prejudicially affected thereby.

The application is, therefore, allowed and the ease remanded to the Court below with a direction to re-admit it under its original number and to dispose of it in accordance with the directions above given after taking such evidence as the parties may adduce with regard to the identity and correctness of the description of the grove in question. As the plaintiffs are responsible for the mistake they shall not be allowed any costs here of this proceeding.

Mortgage suit - Mortgage, denial of, by mortgagor and stranger — Recital as to jayment of consideration—Burden of proof—Question of onus of proof, when immaterial—Consideration recited not paid in full—Validity of bond, if offected—Pardanashin lady, dealings with—Principles applicable—Alteration of document after execution, effect of—Material alteration, what is—Court's decision not to rest on mere suspicion—Execution purchaser—Property purchased subject to mortgage—Mortgage invalid—Benefit, by whom taken.

If an action to enforce a mortgage security is contested by the mortgagor and execution is admitted by or proved against him, the onus lies upon him to prove that the recital as to the payment of consideration for the deed which he executed is untrue. When, however, the claim is contested by a stranger who denies that the bond was executed and also asserts that there was no consideration for the mortgage, the onus is upon the mortgagee to prove his case [p. 695, col. 2; p. 6! 6, col. 1.]

The question of onus of proof arises only where there is no evidence one way or the other which will enable the Judge to come to a conclusion upon the question of fact to be determined; but where evidence has been adduced by both the parties and the relevant facts are before the Court, the question of burden of proof becomes immaterial and importance should not be attached to the question on whom the initial onus lay, in such circumstances, the question of the burden of proof is really not pertinent [p. 626, cols. 1 & 2.]

Though there may be ground for suspicion, though the conduct of the parties may engender doubt, the Court's decision must rest not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. [p. 698, col. 1.]

The validity of a bond is not affected by the fact that the consideration recited was not paid in full; the bond is operative to the extent of the sum actually advanced. [p. 699, cols. 1 & 2.]

The Court when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a parda-nashin lady must satisfy itself upon the evidence, first, that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorised by her, with a full understanding of what she was about to do: secondly, that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered, and, thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter. These principles fall broadly into two groups, namely, first, cases where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character or in some relation of personal confidence; and, secondly, cases where the person who seeks to enforce the deed was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arm's length. In the former class of cases, the Court will act with great caution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted; in the latter class of cases, the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsically. The Court must have regard to the intellectual attainments of the lady concerned and will naturally be disinclined to set aside the deed where she is proved to have been of business habits, to have been literate and to have possessed a capacity to judge for herself [p 699, col. 2; p. 700, col. 1: p. 701,

Either party to a document may show that there was in fact no consideration though consideration was recited therein or that the consideration was in reality different from what was stated in the deed.

The addition to a mortgage-bond after execution and attestation, of anything perfectly immaterial does not affect the liability of the parties, and where the alteration is an immaterial one, it does not vitiate the instrument, even though made by a party thereto [p. 70°, col. 2]

What alteration is immaterial must depend upon the nature of the instrument as also upon the nature of the charge. [p 703, col 2]

The insertion of a schedule to a mortgage-bond, tioned in the body of the bond does not constitute a material alteration as it does not vary the meaning of the instrument or change the rights or interests, duties or obligations of the parties in any essential particular. [p. 703, col. 2.]

If a mortgage notified at the time of an execution sale turns out to be invalid, the benefit is taken by the purchaser, and the judgment-debtor is not entitled to claim from him a refund of the amount alleged to have been due on the mortgage; and the purchaser is free to contest the reality or validity of the mortgage when he is attacked by the mortgagee, [p. 698, col. 2.]

MOOKERJEE, J .- This is an appeal by the seventh defendant in a suit on a mortgage. bond executed by the first six defendants in favour of the plaintiff on the 13th Fabruary 1915 to seeure a loan of Rs. 12,000 which was made re payable on the 12th April 1916 and was to earry interest at nine-and-a-half per cent. per annum with half yearly rests. The right, title and interest of the mortgagors in the hypothesated property was sold in execution of a deeree for money at the instance of one of their ereditors and was purchased by the seventh defendant on the 20th June 1916 in the name of his son inlaw, the eighth defendant, who excented a release in his favour on the 25th January 1917. The mortgages instituted the present suit on the 20th February 1918 for realisation of the mortgage dues and joined as defendants the mortgagors as also the purchasers of the equity of redemption.

The mortgagors did not enter appearance, and the claim was resisted by the seventh defendant alone who arged that the bond had not been executed in conformity with section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, and was not a bona fide document executed for concideration, but was in fact a colourable deed brought about with a view to defraud the unescured creditors of the mortgagors. It was further alleged that the stipulation as to payment of interest and compound interest was an unconscionable bargain. On these pleadings, five issues were raised in the following terms:

1. Was the mortgage bond in suit duly excepted and attested?

2. Was there any consideration for the bond in suit?

3. Is the plaintiff entitled to get compound interest as claimed?

4. Is the contract for payment of interest a hard and unconscionable bargain? Is the contract legally enforceable?

5. To what reliefe, if any, is the plaintiff.

entitled?

The Subordinate Judge has answered all the issues in favour of the plaintiff and has decreed the slaim in full. On the present appeal, the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been shallenged substantially on three grounds, namely, first, that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the consideration recited in the bond was paid either in whole or in part; secondly, that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the mortgage bond was operative against Saratkomari Debi, a pardanashin lady, who acted as gnardian of her infant sons, the fourth and fifth defendante; and thirdly, that the bond was void by reason of material alteration after execution and attestation.

As regards the first point, there has been some discussion at the Bar as to the onus of proof upon the question of payment of consideration, as the bond contains a recital that the money secured thereby had been received by the borrowers; there is, however, no room for controversy as to the true role on the subject. If an action to enforce a mortgage scentity is contested by the mortgagor and execution is admitted by or proved against him, the onus lies upon him to prove that the resital as to the payment of sonsideration for the deed which he executed is untrue. in accord with the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Kaleepershad Tewarres v. v. Chowdry Dowlut Singh (4). When, however, the claim is contested by a stranger who denies that the bond was executed and also asserts that there was no consideration for the mortgage, the onus is upon the mortgagee to prove his ease. This position may be fortified by reference to a long line of desisions, amongst others, to the cases of Brazeshware Peshakar v. Budhanuddi (5), Shib Narain v. Shankar Panigrahi (6), Ghurphekni v. Furmeshar Dayal Dubey (7), Bisheswar Dayal v. Harbans Sahoy (8), Rohimjan v. Imanjan (9), Manohar Singh v. Sumirta Kuar (10), Babbu v. Sita Ram (11). The rule recognised in these cases is also supported by the analogy of the principle explained by the Judicial Committee in Brij Lal v. Inda Kunwar (12) that recitals of legal necessity in mortgages or conveyances executed by Hindu widows are not of themselves evidence of such necessity, without substantiation by evidence aliunde as against reversioners who are strangers to the transaction: Maheshar Baksh Singh v. Ratan Singh (13), Deputy Commissioner of Kheri v. Khanjan Singh (14), Khub Lal v. A; odhya Misser (15). In the case before us, the reality of the mortgage transaction is impugned by the purchaser of the equity of redemption and the burden of proof lies, consequently, in the first instance, on the plaintiff to establish that the deed was duly excented and the consideration was paid. We may add, however, that the question of onus of proof arises only where there is no evidence one way or the other which will enable the Judge to come to a conclusion upon the question of fact to be determined; but where evidence has been adduced by both the parties and the relevant facts are before the Court, the question of burden of proof. pointed out by Viscount Haldane in Kundan Lal v. Begam-un-nissa (16), and by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Seturatnam Aiyar v. Venkatachala Goundan (17), besomes immaterial, and importance should not be attached to the question on whom the initial onus lay; in such eireumstances, the question of the burden of proof is really not pertinent. We shall now examine the evidence as to the execution and attestation of the mortgage deed and the payment of consideration.

The first three defendants, Khagendra. nath, Kumudindu and Mobanial, along with their brother Makhanlal (who was the father of the fourth and fifth defendants and has since died), were members of a family of Zemindars, the Mookerjees of Janai, in the District of Hughli. The family had got involved in financial troubles, and on the 12th June 1907 the four brothers executed a deed of trust in favour of the sixth defendant Rajanikanta Bhattacharya (the father. in-law of Makbanlal) for the better management of their properties and for the payment of their debts. The embarrassment, however, was so grave that plan, to save the family estates proved fruitless, and to. wards the end of the year 1914, the Mooker. jees were much harrassed by execution proeeedings instituted by at least two unsecared ereditors who held decrees for money against them, namely, Phanindranath Mitra and the present plaintiff, Nagendrabala Chaudhurani. The pressure was indeed so persistent that it became necessary to raise a loan by mortgage of portion of the estate. But a difficulty was created by the eircumstance that Makhanlal had died leaving a widow Saratkumari (the daughter of the trustee defendant Rajanikanta) and two infant sons. In 1910, after the death of ber husband, Saratkumari had obtained a certificate of guardianship of the person and properties of her infant children. On the 3rd September 1914 she obtained permission from the District Judge to raise a loan of Bs. 45,000 jointly with the uncles of the minors and the trustee, in order to pay off the debts due from the estate which, at the time, were alleged to amount to over a lakh of rupees. This permission was revoked on the 2nd December 1914 but liberty was reserved to renew the application when negotiations would be completed. On the 8th February 1915 Saratkumari applied again for sanction to join her brothers-inlaw and her father in raising a sum of Ra. 12,000, the loan to earry interest at nine. and-a-half per cent, per annum. It was stated that the money was required to pay the decretal debts due to Phanindranath Mitra and Nagendrabala Chaudhurani as also the accommodation loans which had been taken from time to time to avert threatened execution sales, and to avoid a sale under Regulation VIII of 1819 of a valuable patni held by the family under the Mabaraja of Burdwan. The security proposed to be offered to the ereditor was the paini which had been previously mortgaged to one Haridae Banerjee on the 30th August 1907. The District Judge heard the Pleader, Babu Grish Chandra Ghose, who appeared in support of the petition and has been examined as a witness in this case. The application was allowed and the petitioner was directed to file within one month the proofs (that is, the statement of the debts and payments). This was carried out and the accounts were duly filed on the 8th March 1915 showing that a sum of Rs. 12,000 had been raised on a mortgage to Nagendrabala Chaudhurani and had been applied in the discharge of numerous debts, large and small, which were due from the estate and were described in minute detail. These antesedent eireumstances lend strong support to the genuineness of the transaction which is set up by the plaintiff and is spoken to by her witnesses. Dharanidhar Ghose, who was her officer from 1908 to 1916 and is an attesting witness to the mortgage-bond, deposes to the fact of exeention and attestation and also proves the actual payment of the consideration. According to this witness, the execution and attestation took place in the house of Rajani Kanta where his daughter Saratkumari lived with her shildren. The document was then taken by Bhudar Chandra Dutt, the seribe (an officer of the plaintiff), to her house where the payment was to be made. The first defendant Khagendra Nath and the sixth defendant Rajani Kanta accompanied him and received the money in the presence of all the attesting witnesses. The story, as narrated by this witness, is corroborated by Murali Mohan Ray who was formerly an officer of the trust estate in the employ of Rejani Kanta. The astual payment was made by the witness Surendra Nath Bose who was at the time the manager of the estate of the mortgages. The testimony of these witnesses is pima facie trustworthy and has been shaken in no way by cross-examination. But we have in addition the evidence of the plaintiff herself who has pledged her oath that the sum of Rs. 12,000 was advanced from her own funds and under her direction by her manager Surendra Nath Bose. this mass of evidence, what have we on the other side? We have the testimony of Sashi Bhuean Mitra, an attesting witness, who asserts that at the request of the sixth defendant, he affixed his signature after the body of the document had been written out but before the executants had signed it. He adds that he did not see the passing of the consideration; obviously, this does not cast doubt upon the case of the plaint. iff, for the execution took place in the house of Rajani Kanta, while the payment was made in the house of the plaintiff, We have also the testimony of the seventh defendant, the appellant before us. He has admittedly no personal knowledge of the mortgage transaction and naturally presses the Court to sean with suspicion every incident connected therewith. We must bear in mind, however, that, as stated by Sir Lawrence Jenkine in Mina Rumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh (18) and Lord haw in Muhammad Mahbub Ali Khan v. Bharat Intu (19), recalling the dietum of Lord Westbury in Sreemanchunder Deu v.

Gopaulchunder Ohuckerbutty (20) and of Parshad v. Lord Hobbouse in Uman Gandharp Singh (21), though there may be ground for suspicion, though the conduct of the parties may engender doubt, the Court's decision must rest, not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. Such as it is, the legal proof here is all on the plaintiff's side, while if indirect signs are sought, the suggestions thrown out by the defendant turn out to be of the most un. substantial character, entirely unsupported by solid evidence. It has been insinuated against the plaintiff that she lent her name to enable the mortgagors to defrand their unsecured creditors But no theory has been propounded, no motive has even been hinted at, to make this hypothesis eredible. The evidence shows that the plaintiff is a wealthy parda nashin lady whose income from her personal estate is half a lakh a year; she is the wife of a wealthy landowner whose income from his own properties is one lakh a year. Mr. Mallik who has pressed the appeal with great zeal and earnestness could not suggest ever a plausible reason why a parda nashin lady in the position of the plaintiff should consent to lend her name to a fistitious transaction of this character, with the inevitable result that she would be involved in a litigation and be examined as a witness. But if it seems unlikely that she sould be prevailed upon to enter into such a transaction, it is no less improbable that her husband, who is shown by the evidence to have been present at the time of the payment, should have permitted his wife to get entangled in such a situation. But it is still more inexplicable that she should perjare herself in Court and conspire to divide the appils after success in a nefarious litigation. On the other hand, the course followed by the appellant is not ealenlated to inspire confidence in his case. He purchased the equity of redemption at an execution sale after it had been proclaimed that Nagendrabala Ohaudhurani elaimed to have a mortgage on the property about to be sold.

Indeed, it transpires that on the 16th February 1916 the Execution Court had recorded an order that as she had filed documents to substantiate her prayer under Order XXI, role 62, Civil Proceedure Code, her petition was to be read over by the Court Officer to the intending purchasers at the time of sale. No doubt, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Iteatunnica Begam v. Fertab Singh (22), if the mertgage notified turns out to be invalid, the benefit is taken by the purchaser, and the judgment-debtor is not entitled to elaim from bim a refund of the amount alleged to have been due on the mortgage; and the purebaser is free to contest the reality or validity of the mortgage when he is attacked by the mortgagee; Shib Kunwar Singh v. Shen Prasad Singh (23); Jairai Mal v. Radha Kishan (24', Ganesh v. Furshottam (25), Naroyan v. Umbar (26). But the fact, nevertheless, remains that the appellant, when he purchased the equity of redemption in the name of his son in law on the 20th June 1916, was apprised of the alleged mortgage. We have the further fact that after he had purchased the equity of redemption for R. 24,000, the judgment debtors applied to have the sale set seide under Order XXI, role 90, Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that there were irregularities in the execution proceed. irgs which had caused them substantial injury as the property had been sell at an inadequate prise. In that proceeding, the Coart held, on the objection of the appellant, that the property was worth at least Rs. (0,000, and that as it had been sold subject to two mortgages, namely, a first mortgage for Rs. 24,000 in favour of Sambhunath Kshetri, and a second mortgage for Rs. 12,000 in favour of Nagendrabala Chaud. burani, it could not be deemed to have been sold at an inadequate price. This order was made on the 16th December 1916 and the sale to the appellant was confirmed. We must take it, accordingly, that at the time of the purchase, as also at the time of the confirmation of the sale, the appellant believed in the reality of the mortgage. The question naturally arises when, how, and from whom did he receive information which made him change his faith and adopt the conclusion that the mortgage was fietitions. He admits in his deposition that he had known the Mookerjess for twenty years; he had also known their trustee Rajanikanta for seven or eight years. There had also been a proposal to sell the disputed property to him five or six months before the auctionsale. In such o'runmatances, and in view of the fact that he is not altogether a stranger to law (he is an experienced Solicitor of this Court), it might be expested that he would make enquiries and would also make a frank and full displosure to the Court as to the information he had gathered in respect of the title to this property, both before and after his purchase. Toere is a singular absence of such materials from the record and the appellant cannot make a legitimate grievance if the Court holds that the positive evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff cannot be summarily swept away by vague allagations of a conserted scheme to defraud the creditors of the borrowers, when there is no trace in the evidence of such a design or of a plan for its execution. We feel no doubt whatevar that the Sabordinate Judge was right in his conslusion that the mortgage was a geomine transaction, that the deed was executed and attested, and that the consideration was paid. We may add that, as a last resort, it has been faintly suggested that the whole of the consideration was not paid. There is, however, no foundation for this contentior, which is based on the endorsement on the bond made by the trustee on the 19th March 1315 to the effect that Rs. 2,000 had been paid on the 13th Februry 1915, that is, on the day the bond was executed. There is some discrepancy in the evidence as to whether this sum of Rs. 2,000 was re-paid on that date or subjequently; but we see no reason to doubt that the payment was in fact made and the plaintiff has aspord. ingly saed on the basis that the sam beenavia Was R. 10,000. Ag WAS printed out in Munshi Bajrangi Sahai v. Ulit Narsin Singh (27), the validity of a bond is not affected by the first that the en.

sideration resited was not paid in full; the bond is operative to the extent of the sum astually advanced. The first ground urged in support of the appeal cannot consequently be sustained.

As regards the second point, it has been urged that the mortgage should not be held operative in respect of the one-fourth share of the hypothesated property owned by the fourth and fifth defendants, inasmuch as there is no evidence to show that the deed was executed by their guardian Saratkumari Debi, a parda nashin lady, under eireum. stanses which would make the transaction binding upon her. Stress has been laid on the absence of specific evidence to establish that the document was read over and explained to her and that she had independent advise. In capport of this position, reliance has been placed upon the decisions in Bindubashini Dasi v. Giridhari Lal Boy (28), Alikjan Bibi v. Rambaran Shah (29) and Kali Bakhen Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh (30). In our opinion. there is no real force in this contention. The objection now put forward was not specifieally set cut in the written statement and is not covered by the isense. The evidence was consequently not directed to this point and the judgment of the Sabardinate Judge doss not indicate that this aspect of the matter was urged before him in the course of argument. Nor ean we discover the faintest trace of the point in the numerous grounds embodied in the memorandum of appeal presented to this Court. Not withstanding these circumstances, we have enter. tained the objection, inasmuch as the interest of infants represented by a parla nashin lady ssemed to be involved; but for reasons presently to be stated, we have arrived at the conclusion that there is no substance whatever in the objection urged by the appellant. It is well settled that the Court, when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a parda nashin lady, must satisfy itself upon the evidence, first, that the deed was astually executed by her or by some person duly authorised by her, with a full understanding of what she was about to do; scoondly, that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered; and, thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter. The leading judicial decisions which recognise these principles are collected in the judgment of this Court in Mariam Bibee v. Muhammad Ibrahim (31), and on examination they will be found to fall broadly into two groups, namely, first, cases where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character or in some relation of personal confidence; and, secondly, cases where the person who seeks to enforce the deed was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arm's length. In the former elass of eases, the Court will act with great eaution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted; in the latter class of eases, the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsieally. This is a fundamental distinction which does not appear to have been always kept in view, with the result that observations made in the one class of cases have been applied without serutiny to the other elass of eases. Illustrations of the confusion which has resulted from this failure to diseriminate between the two classes of cases, are furnished by the decisions in Rance Usmut Koowar v. Tayler (52), Tayler v. Rance Asmedh Koonwar (33), Scondur Koomaree v. Kishoree Lal (34), Ram Perchad v. Rance Phoolputtee (35), Kanai Lal v. Komini Debi (36), Roop Narain Singh v. Gugadhur Pershad (37), Latchemy Umma V. Bhuggobutty Debia (42). In the former ease, where the transaction was btween a hasband and a wife, their Lordships observed that the burden of proving the reality and bona fides of the purchases pleaded by her husband was properly thrown on him. In the latter case, which was one of a death-bed gift in favour of the donor's brothers in their wives' names to the exelusion of her husband's adopted son, their Lordships pointed out that the Judicial Committee and the Courts in India had always been eareful to see that deeds taken from pardah women had been fairly taken and that the party executing them had been a free agent and duly informed of what she was about. The substance of the matter then is that the fairness of the bargain is the erueial test. This principle runs through the later decisions of the Judicial Committee, though the rule is more specially enforced in cases where a fiduciary relation involving trust and confidence is shown to exist; Syud Fussul Hossein v. Amjud Ali Khan (43), Ashgar Ali v. Delroos Banoo Begum (44), Tacoordeen Tewary V. Nawab Syed Ali Hossein (45), Sudisht Lil v. Sheobarat Koer (46), Mahomed Butch Khan v. Kali Bakheh Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh (53). It may also be observed that the Court must have regard to the intellectual attainments of the lady concerned and will naturally be disinclined to set aside the deed where she is proved to have been of basiness habits, to have been literate and to have possessed a eapacity to judge for herself; Hodges v. Delhi and London Bank Limited (54), Bindu. Dasi v. Giridhari Lal Rou (28), Alikian Bibi v. Rambaran Shah (29). These are only general principles, and it eannot be too strongly emphasised that there is a grave risk of failure of justice, if they are moulded into inelastic formulas or erystalised into inflaxible rales, and treated as of universal application, regardless of the special facts and surrounding sireumstances of the concrete case which requires adjudication. Tested in the light of these principles, how does the case before us stand? Saratkumari, though a pards. nashin lady, was in no sense illiterate and was able to read the mortgage deed which had been written in her vernacular. The execution of the deed bad been preseded by an application on her behalf to the District Judge who had granted the requisite sanetion. The terms of the deed were of the simplest character imaginable, and the covenant for the payment of interest was in no way nousual. She lived with her infant children in the family of her father and had the benefit of his advise; indeed, it was at his instance that the loan was raised with a view to discharge the family debts and to save the estate from sale in execution of decrees obtained by unsecured ereditors, she was joined in the mortgage transaction by her three brothers in law who were the uneles and so sharers of her infant children and were equally interested in the protestion of the estate. The only persons whose advice she could have taken, either in the family in which she was born or in the family into which she had married, were her father and the brothers of her husband; they were present throughout the transaction and themselves joined as parties. It is also significant that neither she nor her father nor her brothers in law have entered appearance in this suit and contested the slaim, though their personal liability under the mortgage instrument has not been extinguished by the lapse of time. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the deed has been amply established to have been fairly taken from her, that she executed it as a free agent, and that she was duly informed of what she was about. Consequently, the deed cannot be successfully impeached, and the second objection urged by the appellant must be overruled.

As regards the third point, it has been contended that the mortgage deed has become void and inoperative by reason of a material alteration made therein, without the assent of all parties concerned, after execution and attestation. It appears that the mortgage deed as written out did not contain a schedule of the details of the consideration money. There was a statement in the first clause to the following effect:

"We borrow this day from your fund the sum of Rs. 12,000 as per details given below and asknowledge rescipt of the said money by this document." The details, however, sould not be inserted then, because it had been arranged that the document would be executed and attested in the house of Rajani Kanta where his daughter Sarat Kumari lived, but the actual payment would be made in the house of the plaintiff. A blank space was accordingly left on the final sheet, and when the payment was made in the house of the plaintiff, the scribe made the following entry in the blank space:

"Schedule of consideration money.

Currency Note No. P.B. 28,620, one piece Rs. 1,000
No. Do, 06918, one piece 1,000
Small notes, one thousand pieces at Rs. 10 10,000 each 12,000
Twelve thousand rupees only."

On these facts, it has been argued that there was a material alteration in the dosument which should have been re-execut. ed by the borrowers and re attested by the witnesses, in order that it might be operative in law as a m:rtgage instrument. The Subordinate Judge has overruled this contention in the Court below on the authority of the decision in Ananda Mohan Soha v. Ananda Chandra Saha (55), which shows that an alteration in a document after its execution and registration, made in good faith to earry out the original intention of the parties, does not vitiate the instrument. We are of opinion that there was in this ease no material altera. tion in the deed when the schedule setting out the details of the consideration money mentioned in the body of the document was inserted in the blank space and that peither re execution nor re-attestation was necessary to revive its vitality which had in no way been affected, much less suspended, by what had taken place. It was ruled by this Court in Gour Chandra Das v. Prasanna Eumar Chandra (56) and Achhuta. nand v. Rom Nath (57) that a material change or alteration of an instrument is one which causes it to speak a language different in legal effect from what it originally spoke. Accordingly, any which changes the legal effect of the instrument, that is, which changes the legal identity or character of the instrument, either in its terms or in the relation of the parties to it, is a material change or technically an alteration. It is the effect of the act upon the instrument and not the particular manner in which it is done, that is material, and hence an alteration to be material must be an actual alteration, whether by erasure, interlineation, addition or substitution of material matter affecting the identity of the instrument or contract; it must also be in a material part of the instrument and must affect the rights and obligations of the parties thereto. To constitute an alteration material, it is enough that, if the instrument were genuine, it would operate differently from the original. Such is the

of the rule that a material alteration in an instrument invalidates it against all parties not consenting to the alteration. Bat it would be a fruitless task to endeavour to reconsile or even to compare the numerous souflisting decisions, and often times fine. spun distinctions, of which the alteration of promissory-notes and other like instruments and the legal consequences flowing therefrom have been the prolife theme. Accordingly, the most advantageous course to follow is to test the fasts of the litigation before the Court in the light of the fundamental principle just enunciated. Now, in the case before us, the first clause of the document resites that R. 12,000 was the consideration for the mortgage and acknow. ladges receipt of the sum by the borrowers. The bond would be operative even though the details of the consideration money were not set out: its validity depends not upon the detailed enumeration but upon the actual payment of the consideration money: and it is well settled that either party to a document may show that there was in fact no consideration though consideration was recited therein or that the consideration was in reality different from what was stated in the deed: Hukumchand v. Hiralal (58), Vasudeva Bhatlu v. Narasamma (59), Kumara v. Srinivasa (60), Edityam Iyer v. Ramahrishna Iyer (61), Lala Himmat Sahai v. Llewehellen (02), Gopal Singh v. Lalso Singh (63), Indarit v. Lal Ohand (64). It has been urged, however, that though the alteration in the present case was not material in the cense that it varied the rights, liabilities or legal position of the parties as ascertained by the deed in its original state, or otherwise varied the legal effect of the instrumen; as originally fundamental principle which lies at the root

expressed [Gardner v. Walsh (65)], it was still a material alteration, sufficient to invalidate the instrument, as it reduced to certainty a provision which was originally unasser!ained. This argument is manifestly fallacious. The provision that the consider. ation was Rs. 12,000 was not open to the objection of uncertainty and the schedule did not make that certain which was previously unascertained. What was made certain by the schedule was the mode of payment of the money, but that was not material for the validity of the deed: Markham v. Gonzeton (66), Eigleton v. Gutteridge (67), Barned's Banking Co., In re. Contract Corporation, Ex parte (68). The distingtions which have been recognised in some of the eases as to the materiality of words inserted in blanks in a deed are of a refined character and some of the desisions are not easy to resonaile. in Sellin v. Frice (69) the addition of a schedule of creditors to a composition deed, after execution and registration, was held to be a material alteration which vitiated the deed; but in Wood v. Slack (70) the addition to the schedule of the names of two ereditors after execution and registration was held to be immaterial; see also French v. Patton (71), Weeks v. Maillardet (72), Daines v. Heath (73), Dyer v. Green (74), Batten, In re, Milne, Ex parte (75). The substance of the matter is, that the addition of anything perfectly immaterial does not affect the liability of the parties | Oatton v. Simpson (76)], and where the alteration is an immaterial one, the Queen's Beneb, deslining to be bound by the second resolution in Figot's case (17), decided in Aldius v. Cornwell (73) which was followed in Orediton v. Bishop of Exeter (19), that the alteration does not vitiate the instrument, even though made by a party thereto. What alteration is immaterial must plainly depend upon the nature of the instrument as also upon the nature of the change; reference may be made in this connection to Murkham v. Goniston (66) and Paget v. Paget (80) among earlier eases, and to Adsetts v. Hives (81) and Green v. Attenborough (82) among modern decisions. We hold, assordingly, for the reasons set out above, that the insertion of the schedule, setting out the details of the consideration mentioned in the body of the mortgage bond in this ease, did not constitute a material alteration; it did not vary the meaning of the instrument or change the rights or interests, duties or obligations of the parties in any essential particular. The third contention of the appellant sannot thus be possibly supported.

The result follows that the desree of the Subordinate Judge must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with sosts.

SHIB NARAIN-PLAINTIFF-

Mortgage with possession—Interest on part of mortgage-money to be paid by mortgagor—Interest on rest set off against rent of property mortgaged—Mortgage, divisibility of—Suit for redemption—Limitation,

A shop was mortgaged for Bs. 200 and possession of it was delivered to the mortgagee and it was agreed that the interest on Rs. 100 of the mortgage-money would be set off against the rent of the shop, and the interest on the remaining Bs 100 would be paid by the mortgagor at a certain rate from his own pocket. It was further agreed that the money would be re-paid within two years, and if not paid the mortgagee would have the right to realize the whole amount from the shop. The mortgagor sued for redemption on the payment of Rs. 100 only on the ground that Is 100 which was payable with interest had become time-barred:

Held, that the mortgage was one simple mortgage on the security of the shop, that the mortgagor could not treat it as being in fact two mortgages, and that he was bound to pay the mortgage-money which included the whole of the principal and interest due upon it at the time of the suit. [p. 704,

col. 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Aligarh, dated the 19th May 1920.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant. Mr. P. L. Banerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT,-In this case the suit was by the respondent, mortgagor, to redeem a mortgage of the lat of September 1876. This mortgage was for Rs. 200. He elaimed redemption on payment of Rs. 100 only on the ground that the balance of Re. 100 which was payable with interest at 18 per eent. per aunum had become time-barred because of a lapse of time. The mortgagee contended that the amount actually due to him was Rs. 678.8 0 the principal and interest under the terms of the mortgage and a further sum of Rs. 50 which he had spent out of his own posket in keeping the mortgaged property in repairs. The Munsif agreed with the contention of the defendantmortgages and allowed the amount of mortgage-money elaimed by him plus Rs. 20 on account of repairs. The plaintiff went up on appeal and the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has, purporting to follow the ease of Phul Kuar v. Murli Dhar (1). upheld the defendant's contention in part and allowed the mortgages the principal amount of mortgage-money together with interest on Rs. 100 for 12 years only, apparently on the ground that the suit for recovery of Rs. 100 and interest thereon was barred by time. In our opinion the learned Judge seems to have totally misunderstood the nature of the mortgage-deed which the plaintiff sought to redeam. The mortgage commences with the recital that the mort. gagor mortgages the shop in lieu of Rs. 200 to the mortgagee. It then goes on to say that he has removed his own possession and put the mortgagee in possession, the mort. gagee being at liberty to keep it in his own possession or to let it to tenants. Then the mortgage goes on to say that the interest on Ra. 100 out of the mortgage money is to be set off against the rent of the shop and as to the interest on the remaining amount he would pay it at the rate of Bs. 18 per cent. per annum from his own pocket. The mortgage deed further goes on that when the money is re paid within two years the shop will be redeemed, and in case the money is not paid within two years then the mortgagee will have a right to realise the money from this very shop by suit. It is clear from the above extract that the property was really mortgaged for Rs. 200 but the income of the mortgaged property, being insufficient to meet the interest agreed upon, the mortgagor promised to pay the balance of the interest, that is, interest on Rs. 100 from his own pocket at the stipulated rate. The mortgage being a usufrustuary one the mortgagee could not have, as such, brought a suit for sale. However, leaving this aspest of the question aside, there can be no doubt that the mortgagor is not warranted in treating this document as being in fact two mortgages. It was one simple mortgage of Rs. 200 on the security of the shop. He was bound to pay the mortgage money which included the whole of the principal and interest due upon it at the time of the suit. The ease referred to by the learned District Judge has absolutely no application to the fasts of the present ease, In our opinion the desree of the Trial Court was

HARI NARAIN SHAW-PLAINTIFF-

Hindu Law-Bengal School-Partition-Partial-Mother's share, incidents of-Compromise decree-Matters outside scope of suit dealt with-Res judicata.

In a partition in a joint Hindu family, it is quite competent for any members, who are so minded, to continue joint. [p, 707, col. 1.]

The share that a Hindu mother in Bengal takes on a partition among her sons is in lieu of the right of maintenance which is carved out of the son's shares and at her death goes back to and forms part of the shares out of which it came. [p 706, col. 1]

Where in a suit a compromise decree is passed dealing with marters that do not relate to the suit, the decree is without jurisdiction and does not operate as res judicata [p 7:0, col 1.]

In a partition among certain brothers of a Dayabhaga Hindu family and their mother, some of the brothers separated and the rest continued joint with their mather. Subsequently a partition suit was fought out among the latter. The suit was compromised and a consent decree passed according to which the brothers who had previously separated relinquished in favour of the brothers suing for partition any rights they might acquire in the share of the mother at her death. The mother died, and in the dispute over the share left by her the question was about the effect of the consent decree;

Held, that the decree, in so far as it dealt with the relinquishment of the rights of the previously separated brothers in the shares of the mother, was without jurisdiction, inasmuch as it dealt with matters with which the suit in which it was passed was in no way concerned, and that, therefore, it did not operate as res judicata. [p. 710, col. 1.]

Mr. H. C. Maiumdar (with him Mr. N. Goswami), for the Plaintiff.

Messre. I. B. Sen, S. N. Banerjee, S. N. Chatterjee, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT,-Ganesh Chandra Shaw, a Hindu, governed by the Bengal School of Law, died in 1885 leaving him surviving eight sons and his widow, Nittyakumari Dassi. The second son, Gour, brought a suit in this Court (No. 76 of 1885) for partition. The suit was referred to arbitration and resulted in an award which was confirmed by the Court on the 18th August 1887. By that award the arbitrator 'divided and partitioned the said estate into nine equal parts" and "allotted one of such parts or shares to each of the parties, as per schedule G hereto appexed, to be held and enjoyed by them absolutely separately, but as the defendants Hari Narain Shaw, Kanai Lal Shaw, Ranco Lal Shaw, Rashbehary Shaw and Panna Lal Shaw are infants and they have expressed desire by their mother and natural guardian, Srimati Nittyakumari Dassi, that they will continue to live together joint in food and estate, I have only declared their shares to be Rs. 9,890-5 10 each, but have not divided the same by metes and bounds (the said Srimati Nittyakumari Dassi being only entitled to a widow's estate in such shares)." The schedule to which reference is made in the passage just quoted shows that of the adult sons of Ganesb, Gour had already received more than his share and Sashi and Nangteswar were now being given certain specific properties and moveables to hold in severalty; whereas to the mother and her five infant sons, taking these six people as one collective whole, certain other assets were allotted without any distribution of such assets between the six so as to answer individual shares. Each of the infant's shares as well as each adult's share is defined by money value in an addendum described as "Explanation of schedule G," which shows the arithmetic SHABBI BHUSAN SHAW U. BARI NABAIN SHAW.

of the arbitration. It is not on the facts really contestable that Nittzakumari Dassi and her infant sons did in fact continue to live together as members of one family as contemplated by the award, nor that the three elder sons became separate therefrom and from each other in fact as well as in law. Nittyakumari having recently died intestate, two questions now arise upon this position.

The first question is as to the nature during her lifetime of the right of her sons to take her share among them at her decease. It is contended by the eldest son that until her death there was no more than a mere spes successionis as regarde her share, that no son of bers in her lifetime had an interest in the reversion of her share but only a chance or pcs. sibility within the meaning of section 6, sub clause A, of the Transfer of Property Act. On this point, Counsel for the younger sons tendered an issue whether the share allotted to Srimati Nittyakumari Dassi by the award of the 12th August 1887 was held by her as a Hindu widow or as a Hindu mother, but as Counsel for all parties were agreed that it was held by her as a Hindu mother it became unnesessary to frame this issue. In my opinion neither epithet is precise, but there is no room for dispute as to how and why she obtained her share; and the effect of authority binding upon me is, that the share in question is an interest in lieu of the right to maintenance which upon partition amongst sons is carved out of the son's shares and at the death of the mother goes back to and becomes part of the shares out of which it came. I accept as the law upon this question the desision in Sorolah Dossee v. Bhoobun Mohau Neoghy (1), and I think it inconsistent with the contention that is now put forward on behalf of the eldest son.

The second question is, whether the infant sone remained united and undivided in spite of the partition suit brought by Gour in 1885. In a case which was one of partition by agreement without reference to any Court, the Privy Council in Balabux v. Rukhmabai (2) said: "There is no presumption when one co-pareener separates from the others, that the latter remain united. In many cases it may be necessary, in order to accertain the share of the entgoing member, to fix the chares which the other co-parceners are or would be entitled to, and in this sense the separation of one may be said to be the of all. And their Lordships separation think that an agreement among the remaining members of a joint family to remain united or to re unite must be proved like any other fact." In the present ease the question is one of partition by authority. The mother and the infant sons wer) impleaded as defendants in a partition suit and when partition was sought against them the arbitrator purported to give effect to their desire, "that they will continue to live together joint in food and estate." He made no reference to worship ard nothing has been said about it to me either in evidence or in argument. Living together may certainly be consistent with severance of interest and a joint enjoyment of property may not mean a complete junction of estate, but in this care the evidence, in my opicion, thows an intention to remain joint. The defendants are resisting partition inter se; the Court refuses to thrust it upon them; and in the presence of the elder sons dcelares this position. The award states the full intent of jointness as theretofore and the conduct of the parties ie, in my judgment, consistent with that. It is true that the wording of parts of the award and also the wording of that part of the order confirming the award which appointed a Receiver of the shares of the infants ie, from this point of view, not absolutely accurate and precise. It does seem to me, however, that the part of the award which must be given effect to is that part in which the arbitrator expressly declares the intention which he has in making only partial partition and I find it very difficult to suppose that the phrase 'they will continue to live together joint in food and estate" could have been used save with the intention of stating that these parties were to remain undivided. I think, therefore, that that was the position ereated by the award which was confirmed, The elder sons by their Counsel object that the mere issue of a writ by one co-pareener elaiming partition effects a separation by itself and that a minor cannot make an agreement to re unite. This, if it ba sound, is a contention which carries with it very serious and far reaching consequences-consequences which I the find to be laid down as law in text books or decided eases. If the full logic of this contention be correct, then any single so pareener entitled to partition can always by issuing a writ compel the minor co-parceners into separation from others and all the other so. all the pareeners into separation from the minors. Farther, no adult so parsener in such eirenmetances can become divided even if he so desires save upon the terms bringing about such consequences between the minor and other parties, and the Court itself would have no way of preventing this.

Now, the obervation as to minors which was made in the Privy Council ease already sited is to be read in connestion with the assumptions of fact upon which it was made. These were that the minors' father had separated from brothers by agreement and died not long thereafter, whereupon his widow went to live with one of the brothers. This latter fact Was put forward as a basis for a case of union and it was with reference to that the observation that Was No made. ease, certainly no Bengal case, so far I can find, has pushed abstract logic to conclusions so wide and so cerions as I have indicated. The question here is, whether the infant sors remained undivided interse. What then is the position? As I understand it, any so parcener under the Bengal School has a right to partition. It is not necessary that there should be an agreement because it is a right capable of being exercised by any one of the parties who has the right to separate his share from the share of all the others; and in that sense the issue of a writ being an unequivocal deslaration of intention sarried out in conduct may be said to effect the partition by itself. But the elaim of one member to have a partition does not mean that the other copeseners are ipeo f cto divided as between themselves. On the centrary, the position of the minor in such cases is this; a partition is in general not in the interests of a minor;

when one co-parcener claims to separate, it is the duty of the guardian of the minor. who has not any right to object to such separation, to make as good and beneficial arrangement in the minor's interest as he possibly ean. If the arrangement be fair in method and result, the arrange. ment will bind the minor's estate. By arrangement the partition may be partial as regards the persons separating. Bycause the right of A to become separated from B and C is absolute, one would suppose prima facis as the mere converse of this, that if B and O being adults so desire they remain joint with each other, and if both are minors the Court in desresing partition may direct that they continue undivided inter st. If I am right in my sonstrus. tion of this award of the 12th August 13:7 and of the conduct of the parties thereafter, I see no reason to doubt that this matter having been submitted to arbitration, the question is a question not of agreement to re-unite on the supposition that all parties were divided, but of an arrangement made with proper sanstion under which separa. tion elaimed by the elder brother was partial as regards the persons interested in the family property. I think, therefore, that the infants remained in the position of undivided brothers and that the elder sons besame divided from the infants and in partioular from Rashbehary,

Apart from the transaction which is the main subject of contention and which took place in 1904, three things have happened sines the award of 1937 was emfirmed. First, Rashbahary, one of the five infant sons, died in that same year intestate leaving Nittyakumari, his mother, as his sole heiress for the estate of a Hindu mother. Secondly, Nangteswar, the third of the elder brothers, who had attained majority before the award of 1837 was confirmed, died before Nittyakumari, but after the transaction which I am about to consider. Thirdly, Nittyakumari herself died in 1919, I gather from the documents that Gour is also dead, but direct proof as to this is I think omitted from the evidence before

In 1899 Hari, the eldest of the five sona who in 1887 were infants, brought a partition suit in this Court (No. 85 of 1899)

against his mother and his four younger brothers. By his plaint he alleged against his mother that part of the corpus of the collective share left undistributed by the award of 1887 had been improperly paid to Nangteswar, the third of the separated sone, by way of loan to him; but the eldest son, Sashi, plaintiff in the present suit, is not charged as implicated in any matter of complaint. All parties joined in a petition asking for payment to Hari and Ranco (now of age) their one-sixth shares in the money and securities and for a direction that the mother should pay to Hari onesixth of the net rents of the immoveable estate with certain adjustments. This was referred to the Registrar for enquiry and report as to whether an order as asked be for the benefit of the infants. Before the Registrar, the terms were modified and before the Court thereafter they were modified again. Kanai had by now attained majority leaving Panna as the only minor. The consent decree of 3rd January 1902 directed payment to Hari and Ranco of their one sixth shares of the money and securities and also that the immoveable properties should after the death of the mother be divided between the parties in equal shares. This decree has of itself no force or effect whatsoever as regards the elder brothers who were not parties. the 27th August 1903 a petition in the same suit was presented by the mother and Panna who by this time apparently had come of age. From this it appears that Hari, Ranco and also Kanai had each been paid his one sixth share of the money and securities. Panna now asks for payment of his share likewise and the mother asks for payment to her of the corpus of her two one-sixth shares in the money and securities, the one-sixth she got in 1887, and the onesixth she inherited as beiress of Rashbehary. In addition, the Court was asked to confirm the provision in the previous consent decree as to the immoveable property, namely, that on the mother's death divided between "the parties to this suit only" in equal shares. These orders were sought on the strength of the consent of all the sons: and Soshi, Gour and Nangteswar, the divided elder sone, signed their "sonsent to the prayer of the foregoing patition."

On the 28th August 1903 the Court ordered Panna's share in the immoveable estate to be paid to him, but refused to make any further order until further and better grounds were shown.

The mother returned to the charge on the 26th January 1904. By affidavit of that date she says that she wants the money in order that she may keep it till her death and make a Will providing for two young grand-daughters who are to live upon the interest, and as each dies, one half is to go back to the estate of Ganesh and become divisible among his This remarkable proposal beire. thought to be in some danger of meeting with criticism or possibly with incredulity on the part of the Court and in any event affected in no way the immoveable estate. The affidavit states, however, "I have received the consent of all my sons for the withdrawal of the said several monies and also for the purpose of the modification of the decree mentioned in the pstition herein and they, my said sons, are alone interested in the said money." bashi, Gour and Nangeteswar, describing themselves as parties to the suit to 1835, swear a joint affidavit on the 12th Janu. ary 1904 "that we have understood the contents and meaning of the foregoing affidavit of our mother and we consent to her obtaining the order she prays for should it please this Hon'ble Court to grant the same." The order prayed for is that asked for by the pravious petitions.

given have Panna Now, Hari and Hari in before me. evidence evidence says that after he had instituted his suit in 1899 he got information that Sashi and Gour had after his father's misappropriated certain stock in trade belonging to his father's wine. shops; that he had some evidence, or at least some witness upon this; that he threatened to have the partition of 1885 re-opened; that this was a real and bona file claim on his part and that after many family discussions, the abandonment thereof was part of the consideration verbally arranged for the agreement by Sashi and Gour to give up all claims to the mother's two sixths share after her death. Another part of the arrangement was that Hari would sink his slaim pleaded in his suit in respect of Nangteswar's improper borrowing from the undivided estates. Hari's evidence in ne way suffices to establish the truth of the allegations which he says he made. As to his having made them and as to the verbal discussions and alleged verbal agreement, Hari's evidence is sadly lacking in precision and the evidence of his younger brother is very faint corroborstion. I view the evidence of both with great suspicion not merely because of the way in which it was given but besaure of the difficulty in making real or probable to myself the story as it is told. The dates in this case are very important, and when I come to consider the documents in connection with the suit of which I have just been speaking, I find that in no single document was it ever put forward to the Court that there slaims were being compromised as part of the agreement in connection with the reversion to the immoveable estate. This part of the story is no more than verbal evidence verbal bargain many years ago that these brothers would release their claims to the mother's share after her death.

On the 14th April 1914 the Court made the order asked for, prefacing the same by a recital of the consent of Sashi, Gour and Nangteswar to the petition and of their subsequent affidavit repeating their consent. It ordered that the rights conferred by the someent deeree of 3rd January 1902 as to the division of the immoveable property after the mother's death "between the parties to this suit only in equal shares" do stand.

The question for decision is restricted to the share which the mother took in 1885 on the partition amongst her sons, As to that shere, is the consent order of 14th April 1914 valid and binding as against the elder brothers or their representatives in favour of the yourger brothers ?

I have to consider the matter in the light of section 17, sub section (1), clause (b) and of section 49 of the Indian Registra tion Act (XVI of 1:08). The first question must be whether the consent order ops. rates as an estrppel by record or res Special reliance is placed judicata. Counsel for the elder brother upon the decisions in this Court where parties to a suit have compromised matters in issue in the guit together with other matters in difference between them. These authorities are said to show that even when both classes of matters are dealt with together as one compromise, so that the arrangement of the matters not in suit is part of the consideration for the arrangement of the matters that are in suit, and even when both classes are put before the Court to be dealt with by its order, the order when made is without jurisdiction and wholly ineffectual in so far as it deals with matters not comprised in the pleadings. There is a considerable body of judicial decision upon this branch of the law. Of eases technically binding upon me, there are two decisions of the Privy Council, but what is said on this matter is not in either case the actual basis of decision.

The two esses are Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (3), Pranal Anni v Lakshmi Anni These eases, however, have been interpreted in this Court in the light of a somewhat strict construction of section 375 of the Ocde of 1882 and of Order XXIII, rule 3 of the present Code. In particular, there are two sases of great importance: Birbhadra Rath v. Kalpataru Pania (5) and Gurdeo Singh v. Ohandrikah Singh (6). Somewhat difficult to reconcile with these last two eases are the cases which say that any arrangement as part of the consideration for the agreement as to matters in suit can be validly recorded and decreed as relating to the suit whether they other. wise relate to the suit or not. For this proposition there is the decision in Gobinda Ohandra Pai v. Ewarka Nath Pal (7) and the eases there eited. Now, in my opinion, the part of the decree which purported to deal with the rights in the mother's shares after her death is not, upon any fair construction of section 375, matters which relate to the suit. The suit was a partition suit for the purpose of dividing up a given collective share left undivided by the award. That suit was brought in the mother's lifetime, and the ascertainment of what would be rights of the sons or other persons after the mother's death was no part of its scope. So much so is this true, that when it was thought desirable to bring that question into the case, the parties necessary for so doing were not before the Court. At a time when none of the elder sons had been made a party, what happened was that in dealing with the question of payment by the Receivers to the mother of the corpus of the moveable estate, this other matter was put in as an entirely foreign matter introduced not by the consent of the parties jointly but by the consent of persons not parties at all. Unless decisions which say that compromise decree is to be confined to so much as is necessary in order to dispose of the corclusions of the suit, are to be abrogated altogether, I cannot bring this part of the compromice decree within the scope of section 375. There is no question bere of the Court granting a form of relief which has not been asked in connection with the subject matter of the suit. I think this is a bad case of the abuse of an existing legal process for the furtherance of ends with which the suit as a suit was in no way ecreerned. In some of the decisione, section 575 has been applied by making a distinction between property in suit and property extraneous to the litigation, Where a suit is merely for the recovery of specific properties, that distinction will be adequate and will be equal to the distinction between matters which relate to tle suit and matters which do not. tome carer, however, suits are not for the recovery of property but to establish particular rights and I certainly prefer the opinion expressed in the sace reported 88 Gobinda Chandra Pal v. Dwarka Nath Pal (7) to the effect that the facts have to be locked at as a whole in order to decide whether matters have been introduced into the suit that do not relate to the suit. In the view that I take of this matter, it seems to me that the conclusion according to the cases is that this part of the decree was without jurisdiction and dces not operate as res judicuta. The next question ie, wietter the infant cope can found upon the petition and affidavit, as being an agreement which operates in their favour, a release of the elder brothers' rights. According to the Calentta authorities, if such a petition and affidavit do purport to have that effect, they are not (?) valid as part of a judicial proceeding but invalid for lack of registration; it, therefore, seems to me that the position of the case becomes this. There is no evidence in the petition or in the affidavit of a family arrange. ment such as is spoken to by Hari; and his younger brother's evidence of that family arrangement is extremely weak, vague and unreliable. I do not hold and I do not think that the agreement pleaded was a sale or exchange within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act. Assuming it to be open to me to give effect, in the circumstances, to a verbal agreement if I find it to be proved, I have no hesita. tion in saying that in a case where one brother alleges against another that by a verbal agreement his rights in reversion to a share have been released I should require much better proof than I have here. would only act secundum allegata et probata; the evidence and the pleading here are very discrepant. In my view, there is no reason for thinking that anything more tappened, according to the documents, than that the brothers gave their consent to get a decree which I now think to be an invalid decree. I find that the younger brothers fail altogether in so far as they go outside the documents and endeavour to prove to my satisfaction a family arrangement alleged in the written statements of Hari, Kanai and Ganesh.

It appears to me that, in these sireumstances, in spite of the decree in the suit of 1289, the direct result upon the evidence and upon the law is this, that so far as regards one-sixth chere reserved to the mother by the award of 1297, all the brothers out of whose shares that share was carved out must be allowed in this suit to make their claim.

As a matter of fact, I think the contest has been occasioned by the acts to which the elder brothers were parties. I think they have done very well in getting out of the consent decree that they so carefully endeavoured to get into. I shall not interfere with the ordinary terms as to costs.

INDER CHAND BOTARA U. SCRENDRA NABAIN BIEGS.

I declare the shares as set forth on the piece of paper which I shall now sign for identification and I shall direct the Commissioner of Partition to take an enquiry and account against the defendant, Hari, as to the rents, profits or income of any part of the properties in the plaint mentioned which have some to his hands since the death of Srimati Nittyakun ari Dassi, as to what are the properties belonging to the undivided share referred to in the award and what now represents that collective share. Then, this division into shares will be of the estate as so ascertained.

I will give a direction to the Commissioner of Partition authorising bim in his discretion to earry out an immediate sale by public auction with liberty to the parties to bid at the sale.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J .- All the material fasts giving rice to this appeal are stated with precision in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge; and, when these fasts are properly understood, the point which we have to decide in this appeal arises free from all complications. The point is this, whether the appellant, who in 1-96 obtained a desree for rent against one Chatrapat Singh in respect of a paini metal known as lot Sabebgunj, situate within the ambit of the appellante' Zemindari, known as Pargana Havelie, is entitled to execute the deeree against the respondent, who in September 1902 purchased the right, title and interest of Chatrapat Singh in the patni metal notwithstanding the fact that prior to the institution of the proceedings which have given rise to this appeal, the paini mehal passed from the hand of the respondent into the hand of one Forbes. The learned Subordinate Judge has found against the appel. lants on the main question that was argued before him. In my opinion, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is right and ought to be affirmed.

Dhanpat Singh was the Zamindar of Pargara Havelie. As I have said before, Chatrapat Singh was the patnidar of lot Sahebgung, situate within Pargana Havelie. Mr. Fortes held a darpatni interest under Chatrapat Singh. Dhanpat Singh died on the 21st July 1593, and the appellants are the trustees of his estate under a deed of trust executed by Dhanpat prior to his death.

On the 27th June 1893 Dhanpat Singh sold Pargaus Havelie to Musammat Bhagwanbati. On the 21st September 1893 he instituted a suit against Chatrapat for recovery of rent that accrued due to him prior to the 27th June 1893. On the 10th July 1896, the Calcutta High Court passed a decree in favour of Dhanpat as against Chatrapat. In 19.0 Chatrapat failed to pay the painirent to the new landlord, Musammat Bhagwanbati; the lady took proceedings under the Paini Regulation, whereupon Mr. Forbes, for the protection of his darpaini interest deposited the rent in full and took possession of the pathi mehal under section 13 (4) of the Paini Regulation. In September 1902, the respondent purebased the pathi mehal in execution of a money decree against Chatrapat and became liable by such purchase to make good to Mr. Forbes the money deposited by him in the proceedings instituted by Musammat Bhagwanbati against Chatrapat. The position in September 1902 was, therefore, this: there was a decree for rent against Chatrapat Singl; but the patni mehal in respect of which the rent decree had been obtained was then the property of the respondent, though Mr. Forbes, the darpatridar, was actually in possession of the paini mehal under section 13 (4) of the Patni Regulation. It is obvious that both Mr. Forbes and the respondent were interested in resisting the execution proceedings which had been started by the appellants against Chatrapat Singh in 1897 and they resisted the excention proceedings on the ground that the decree that had been obtained by Dhappat against Chatrapat was a money. decree and not a rent decree. It will be necessary now to trace the history of the execution proceedings but, before doing sc, I should mention that Mr. Forbes irs'ituted a spit as against the respondent for recovery of the money which had been deposited by him in the proceedings taken by Musammat Bhagwanbati, under the Regulation, against Chatrapat, and that on the 15th May 1916, he got a decree as against the respondent for Rs. 57,166, the decree providing that, if the respondent failed to pay the decretal amount to Mr. Forbes, the patni itself should be sold. The respondent failed to satisfy Mr. forbes' deeree, and as a result of his failure, the paini was put up for sale on the 3rd July 1917 and was purchased by Mr. Forbes for Rs. 2,000. It is necessary to remember that the respondent was at no time in possession of the prini, and that the title to the pathi which had accrued to the respondent in September 1902 by virtue of his purchase in execution of a money decree against Chatrapat, passed away from him on the 3rd July 1917.

I now some to the execution proceedings, and it will appear that the question whether the decree that had been obtained by Dhangat against Chatrapat was a rent decree or a money decree was early raised and was long debated. The point arose on the admitted fact that Dhanpat brought his suit for arrears of rent against Chatrapat after be had parted with all his interest in the Zemindari in favour of Musammat Bhag. wanbati; and, as will presently be seen, it was contended, first, on behalf of Chatrapat, then on behalf of respondent, and lastly on behalf of Forbee, that the right to proceed for sale under section 65, Bengal Tenancy Act, was dependent on the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant at the time when the remedy provided by law was sought to be enforced, and that as the appellants were not the landlords at the time they started the execution proceedings they were not entitled to execute the decree as a rent-decree. In 1897, the appellants started execution proceedings against Uhat. rapat, and the objection put forward on behalf of Chatrapat to the execution of the decree as a rent decree was rejected by the Courts in India. The execution proecedings, however, for some reason which bas not been made clear to us, failed to produce any result, and in 1964, the appellants presented another application for execution. The respondent, who was now the painidar, objected that the decree was a money decree and not a rent-decree, and that the patni was not liable to be sold in execution of that decree. A similar objection was put forward on behalf of Mr. Forbes, who also insisted that having deposited the amount of the arrears under section 13 of the Regulation in the proceeding commenced by Musammat Bhagwanbati against Chatrapat, he had a first charge on the point for the sum so deposited by him. The objections were disallowed by the Courts in India, In 1905 the respondent instituted a suit for a declaration that Dhanpat's decree against Chatrapat was a money decree and that the pathi could not be sold in execution of that deeree. The Courts in India decided against the contention of the respondent, the date of the decision of the High Court being the 8th April 1908. The respondent then applied for, and obtained, leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, but that appeal subsequently failed for non-prosecution. Forbes also instituted a similar suit, and though the Courts in India decided against him, he carried his appeal to the Judicial Committee where his contention prevailed.

INCER CHAND BOTHEL E. SURENDEA NABAIN SINGH.

By its decision, which was pronounced on the 4th March 1914 and which is reported in Arthur Henry Forbes v. Maharas Bahailur Singh (1), the Judicial Committee held that the right to bring the tenora to sale under section 65, Bengal Tenancy Act, exists only so long as the relationship of landlord and tenant existe, and appertains exclusively to the landlord, and that a person, to whom rents are due and who obtains a decree to them after he has parted with the property on which the tenancy is situate has no such right. The position then is this: as between the appellants and Mr. Forbes, the decree must be regarded as money deeree and not as a rent decree; but as between the appellants and the respondent the decree must be re-regarded as a rent-decree. It is not necessary to follow the fortunes of the different execution proceedings that were from time to time commenced by the appellants. I come to the application of the 22nd January 1915 when the appellants applied to have the decree treated as a money decree and the respondent added as a judgment debtor. It will be remembered that the position then was that the respondent was the patnidar and Mr. Forbes was the darpainidar in actual possession of the patni mehal. On the 19th March 1915, the appellants presented another application to the Execution Court. They stated in their petition that the Judicial Committee has held that the decree obtained by them against Ohatrapat was a money-decree. They submited that it was not possible to resover the amount of the decree without proceeding against the properties other than that in respect of which the decree had been obtained and they applied for attachment and sale of sertain properties belonging to Chatrapat. This application was presented on the 19th March 1915; but it will be remembered that they had already, on the 22nd January 1915. applied to have the respondent added as a judgment debtor in the execution proceeding. On the 27th March 1915, the respondent objected to being added as a judgment debtor. He contended that, as he was neither the judgment debtor nor the legal representative of Chatrapat, the decree-holders could not proceed against the patni metal in his hands. (1) 28 Ind. Cas 682, 18 O. W. N. 747: (19 4) M. W. N. 897; 15 M. L. T. 880; 12 A. L. J. 658; 27 M. L. J. 4; 41 0, 926; 1 L. W. 1059; 41 L. A. 91; 25 0. L. J. 484 (P. C.),

Before this application was heard and disposed of, the patni metal passed into the hands of Mr. Forbes. The decree holders abandoned their application of the 19th March 1915, and on the 23rd November 1918 they presented an application for attachment and sale of certain properties belonging to the respondent. It is this application which has given rise to this appeal,

Mr. Manck on behalf of the deeree holders. appellants contends that the decree obtained by Dhanpat Singh against Chatrapat Singh must be regarded as a rent decree so fer as the respondent is ecneerned, and that it was open to him to proceed against the paini mehal in the hands of the respondent. I have no doubt whatever that, had the appellants proceeded against the respondent at any time between September 1502 and July 1917, during which period the title to the prini mehal was in the respondent, there sould be no answer to the elaim of the deeree holders. It having been held in proceedings between the appellants and the respondent that the decree obtained by Dhanpat was a rent decree, the appellants had a charge on the tenure so long as the tenure was in the hands of the respondent, and it was plainly impossible for the respondent to resist the claim of the appellants. But the tenure has now passed from the hands of the respondent to the hands of Mr. Forbes. Mr. Manuk contends that if the respondent allowed the tenure to go into the hands of a third party, he must be personally liable for the decree In my opinion, there is neither principle nor authority for this contention. It was, in my opinion, open to the decree holders to proceed against the tenure in the bands of Mr. Forbes. It was argued by Mr. Manuk that he could not take this course having regard to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the suit between the appellants and Mr. Forbes that the deares was a money-decree. That may be so; but Mr. Forbes, as the purchaser of the paini mehal from the respondent, was in an entire. ly different position, As the representative in interest of the respondent, Mr. Forbes would be bound by the decision in the suit as between the appellants and the respondent. By that decision the decree was held to be a rent decree and as involuntary alienations stand on the same footing as voluntary alienations, the appellants could, in my opinion, follow the patni mehal in the hands of whomscever it might be under a title derived from the respondent.

Mr. Manuk next contends that the respondent must be regarded as the representative in interest of Chatrapat Singh and is, therefore, personally liable to satisfy the decree obtained against Chatrapat Singh. In my opinion, there is no warrant for the proposition. The deeree was not obtained against the respondent. It may be that, as the result of the litigation between the appellants and the respondent, it must now be held that, so long as the putni mehal was in the hands of the respondent, there was a charge upon the paini mehal for the decretal claim of the appellants against Chatrapat Singh. But it has been held that a transferee of a tenure is not personally liable for sent which accrued due prior to the trans. fer. See Sreemutty Jegemaya Dassi v. Girindra Noth Mukherjee (2). The recent desision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Nanku Pra. and Singh v. Kamta Prasad Singh (unreported) pronounced on the 19th January supports this contention. That was a case in which it was sought to make the purchasers of mortgaged properties personally liable for the mortgage debt. The Judieial Committee in a very short judgment said as follows : -

"Their Lordships have considered this case, and they think it is clear that no personal liability was incurred by the purchasers of the equity of redemption, who, their Lordships understand, are defend ants Nos. 2 to 11, of whom only five are respondents here. Their Lordships, therefore, think that the decree of the High Court was right and that the point made by the

The position occupied by the respondent is in no way different from the position which a purchaser of the equity of redemption occupies. The utmost that can be said in favour of the appellants is, that they had a charge upon the tenure in the hands of the respondent. The respondent was the purchaser of the tenure which was already subject to a charge in favour of the appellants. He is in the same position as the purchaser of an equity of redemption, and, in my opinion, no personal liability was incurred by him by such purchase.

In my opinion, the desision of the learne Sabordinate Judge is right and must be affirmed. I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

SEC IND CIVIL APPEAL No. 967 OF 1920.
March 3, 1922

Present: - Mr. Justice Stuart.
SARABJIT MAL-PLAINT PR - APPEL'ANT

RAM KHELAWAN MAL AND OTHERS-

Res judicata—Decree of Revenue Court—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss 59, 189—Ejectment suit — Question of proprietary title referred to Civil Court —Question already determined by Revenue Court— Jurisdiction of Civil Court.

The decision of a Revenue Court does not operate as res judicata in a civil suit unless the case comes within the purview of sections 199 to 201 of the

Therefore, in matters outside the purview of those sections, when a decree of a Revenue Court is pleaded as bar to a civil suit, there is no question of res judicata, but simply whether the point before the Civil Court has been decided by a Rent Court under its exclusive jurisdiction in such a manner as prevents the Civil Court having jurisdiction to decide it and if it is not so decided it is not open to a Civil Court to refuse to determine the point. [p. 715, col. 2.]

The defendant sued plaintiff for declaration that he was the proprietor of the plot in question and that the latter was his tenant. The plaintiff asserted his own proprietary title. The suit was decreed. Subsequently the defendant sued to eject the plaintiff. The plaintiff again asserted proprietary title, and was referred to a Civil Court under section 199 of the Agia Tenancy Act. He brought this suit accordingly but the Civil Court considering it barred under the provisions of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code refused to entertain it:

Held, that the issue as to the question of proprietary title was not res judicata, and that it was not open to the Civil Court to refuse to determine it. [p. 715, col. 2.]

of the present defendant, Ram Khelawau Mal, instituted a suit against the plaintiffs in 1915 asserting that he was one of the proprietors in the plot in question and that Sarabjit Mal, one of the plaintiffs, was a tenant. Sarabjit Mal in that suit asserted proprietary title. The suit was decreed against him for six annas, arrears of rent, The suit was in the Court of an Assistant Collector of the Second Class. In 1917 the defendant, Ram Khelawan Mal, appears to have obtained an ex parts deerse for rent in respect of the same plot in the Court of an Assistant Collector of the Second Class against the plaintiffs. In 1919 the defendant then saed to eject the plaintiffs from this plot under sestion 53 of the Tenancy Ast. The plaintiffs asserting their proprietary title, the Assistant Collector of the First Class who was trying the suit referred them to a Civil Court under the provisions of section 199 of the Tenancy Act. They instituted a suit within three months assording to that order. The Civil Courts have refused to adjudicate upon their title, holding that the suit is barred under section 11 of the Code of Civil Prosedure on the principle of res judicata. They appeal here.

No question of res judicata properly arises. In such esses the qrestion is not whether the suit is barred on the principles of res judicata, for a Revenue Court decision cannot operate as res judicata in a Civil Court unless the case comes within the purview of sections 199 to 201 of the Tenancy Act, but whether the point before the Civil Court has been decided by a Rent Court under its exclosive jurisdiction in such a manner as prevents the Civil Court having jurisdiction to decide it. The ratto decidendi is given in Ram Sing's v. Girraj Singh (1).

Now, it is clear enough that as against the actual defendants and as between parties the relationship of landlord and tenant in respect of this plot was beld to exist in so far as the Courts of the Assistant Collectors of the Second Class are concerned. The 1915 and 1917 desisions sertainly of the Assistant Collectors of the Second operated as res judicata binding the Coorts Class in suits for arrears of rent until the matter was decided by a higher Court, but when the matter of the plaintiff's ejectment under section 58 of the Tenancy Act same before an Assistant Collector of the First Class he was in no way bound by the deeisions of the Assistant Collector of the Second Class to find that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties, and it was open to him either to determine himself when the plaintiffs set up proprietary right, that the relationship of landlord and tenant did or did not exist, or to refer the plaintiffs under section 19 of the Tenancy Act to the Civil Court for a desision as to whether they had proprietary right in plot No. 187 /2. He took the latter course. It is not open to the Civil Courts to refuse to determine the point. The point as far as they are conserned is not determined by res judicata and the point under the Tenancy Act itself is within their jurisdiction. I, therefore, set aside the desisions of both the Courts below and send the case back to be restored to its original number and determined on its merits by the Mansif of Mahammadabad Gobna, Azımgarh District. Costs here and hereafter will follow the result.

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 7th January 1921.

JUDGMENT.

Sandreson C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother, Mr. Justice Greaves, whereby he refused an application made on behalf of one Rai Sukhlal Karnani Bahadur in the insolvency of one Albert Felix Seldana.

The application consisted of a prayer (1) for an order that the order of the 29th of November 1920, should be set aside, (2) alternatively, for an order that the proceedings thereunder should be set aside, (3) alternatively, for directions as to the scope of the enquiry before the Registrar.

The matter arcse in this way: Seldana was adjudicated an insolvent on the 2nd of July 1920, and, on the 8th August 1920, a complaint against Seldana was filed by the Munitions Board, charging him with certain offences under certain sections of the Indian Penal Code which may be shortly described as cheating, conspiracy to cheat and forgery. On the 26th of August 1920, a complaint was made against Sukhlal Karnani, the appellant in this appeal, charging him with conspiracy to cheat, The Official Assignee made an application: before the Registrar in insolvency, in respeet of which an order was made on the 29th of November 1920. In that application, after stating that Seldana had been adjudicated insolvent on the 2nd of July 1920, the Official Assignee went on to allege that Sukhlal Karnani was capable of giving information regarding the dealings and properties of the above named insolvent, and the Official Assignee applied that Karnani should be summoned and examined by the Court on a day and hour to be fixed there. for and to produce all books, papers, correspondence, accounts relative to trans. actions had between him and the insolvent in connection with their partnership and dealings with the Munitions Board from the 16th of March 1918. That application was made ex parte, and the order of the 29th of November was to this effect, viz., that "Sukhlal Karnani being served with a sealed sopy of the order should, on Wed. nesday, the 8th of December, at the hour of 11 o'elock in the forencon, attend before the Registrar to be examined regarding the dealings and properties of the insolvent and that he should bring with him and produce at the time and place aforesaid all books, papers, correspondence, and accounts relating to transactions had between him and the said insolvent in connection with their partnership and dealings with the Manitions Board from the 16th of March 1918." On the 15th and 17th of December 1920 Karnani appeared before the Registrar in insolvency and was examined by learned Counsel on behalf of the Official Assignes. was alleged by the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the appellant that, although the learned Counsel nominally appeared for the Official Assignee, he was really instructed by the insolvent Seldana, who was represented by the Attorney who was appearing for the Official Assignee: and, it was alleged, that the real object of the examination of Karpani was to obtain information which might be useful to the prosecution instituted by the Munitions Board. Karnani was represented by learned Counsel who took objections to certain questions, and it is stated that the Official Assignee had alleged that the object of the examination was to ascertain whether or not Karrani was indebted to Seldana in a sum of Rs. 2,64,000. A petition was then presented by Karnani to the learned Judge, on the 4th of January 1921, applying for the reliefs to which I have already referred.

The main ground of the argument in this appeal was, that the further examination of Karnani ought to be stayed until after the criminal prosecution has been finished, for, it was alleged that, although the answers which might be given by Karnani in his examination might not be used against him, still it might be that those who were conducting the prosecution might obtain information from the answers which might be useful in the criminal proceedings.

The learned Judge stated in his judgment three grounds on which the matter was argued before him: SURBLAL KERNANI U. OFFICIAL ABSIGNEE OF CALCUTTA.

First, it was said that under the Incolvancy Rules of this Court such an application must be verified by affiliavit and that the verification was insufficient as it only related to the information and belief of the Offisial

Assignee.

Secondly, it was said that the application was insufficient, in that it only referred to information regarding the dealings and properties of the insolvent, that it contained no reference to any indebtedness of Sukhlal Karnani to the insolvent and that being so the insolvent had wrongly been questioned with regard to his indebtedness, especially having regard to the terms of an agreement between the insolvent and Sukhlal Karpani dated the 22nd of August 1918; and lastly. it was said that with regard to the Police Court proceedings pending against the insolvent and against Karnani the examination was being used for an improper purpose and, amongst other thinge, to displace clause 7 of the said agreement. The learned Judge deelined to accept any of those argumente, and said that there was ample material before him to show that Sukhlal Karnani was in a rosition to give some information with regard to the dealings and property. He made an order that the examination should proceed. Then he added as follows: "This being se, I think it is difficult to say that questions were incompetent with regard to any question of the indebtedness of Sukhlal to Seldana, if they arose in the course of the examination, although I think that if it had been desired to establish this, the application should have so specifically stated but I am not prepared to interfere under the eirsumstances on the ground that such questions have been put. Then, lastly, with regard to the alleged improper purpose of the examination, it seems to me that it is for the witness to object to such questions as he considers are put for an improper purpose and, if necessary, I think he would be justified on the advice of Counsel in refusing to answer such questions even if directed to do so. Under these circumstances, it would be for the Registrar in Insolveney, if he thought the refusal was ill-founded, to report to the Court the refusal, in order that the Court might consider the nature of the question and of the objection and I think that if this course is followed the witness will be amply protected with regard to the putting of any question which may be improper; and I only desire to add that I think the Official Assignee in future, when he makes similar applications, should place the Court in possession of further materials for considering if any application under section 36 is well-founded or not."

The first two grounds which are referred to in the learned Judge's judgment were not seriously argued in this Court. new point was taken, namely, that the order of the Registrar was made without jurisdiction, or, at any rate, that it ought not to have been made ex parte.

The learned Counsel who appeared for the Official Assignee assured us that it is the practice of this Court that such applications as this by the Official Assignee are always made ex parte before the Registrar; and that practice was not disputed by the learned Counsel who appeared for the appellant. But the learned Counsel for the appellant urged that the practice was wrong and was not justified by the rules of this Court. Since the argument, of this ease the officer of the Court has drawn my attention to a ease, Kissory Mohan Roy Shaha, In re (1), in which the very point was decided by my learned brother, Mr. Justice Greaves. Neither of the learned Counsel drew our attention to it. It is a decision directly in point and authorizes the practice to which I have referred. The learned Judge based his judgment upon the grounds which were suggested by my learned brother, Justice Richardson, during the course of the argument, and I assume that since this judgment, which was in 1916, the practies has never been questioned until the hearing of this appeal. The application was made under section 26 (1) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, which runs as follows: "The Court may, on the application of the Official Assignee or of any ereditor who has proved his debt, at any time after an order of adjudication has been made, summon before it in such manner as may be prescribed the insolvent or any person known or suspected to have in his possession any property belong. ing to the insolvent,....or any person whom the Court may deem capable of giving information respecting the incolvent, his dealings or property; and the Court may require any such person to produce any documents in bis enstody or power relating to the insolvent, his dealings or property." There is nothing in the section which goes to show that notice of the application has to ba served upon the person who it is desired should be examined. But it is said that the Insolverog Rules of this Court make it obligatory that notice of the application should be given; and reliance was placed upon rules 17 and 18 of the Insolvency Rules of 1914. Those rules are to be found in the portion of the rules which deals with "Motions and Practice," and there is another rule, No. 30, (which is under the heading "Discovery of Dobtor's Property") which is elearly applicable to an application under scotion 36, and it is as follows: "Every application to the Court under section 36 of the Act shall be in writing and shall state shortly the grounds upon which the application is made". It appeared to us in the course of the argument that that rule showed that it was not intended that rules 17 and 18 should apply to an application under section 36 by the Official Assignee for an order that a person should be examined. I now refer to the case which was decided in 1916 by my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves; The head note is, "Applications under section 36 (1) of the Presidency Towns Inscluency Act for examination of persons thereunder are intended to be made ex parts under the rules framed by the Oaleutta High Court under section 112 of the Act. To such applications rule 30 applies and not rules 17, 18 and 19, and this view is supported by the English Bankruptey Act (1914), 4 and 5 George V, Ch. 59 and the rules thereunder". The portion of the learned Judge's judgment which I desire to read is this: After referring to the section (36) and rules 17 and 18, he goes on to say, 'If these rules govern applications under restion 36 of the Act, then the ex parte order was clearly wrong unless the Registrar thought that any delay would entail serious mischief. But I was referred to another rule by Counsel who opposed the application, that is to say, to rule 30 which is as follows:" (then he reads the rule). 'This rule to my mind elearly sontemplates a procedure other than that laid down under rules 18 and 19 and it contains no provision for service of the application upon the person sought to be examined such as is contained in rule 19. Under these circumstances, the inference to my mind is irresistible, that applications under section 35 are intended to be made exparts and that this is the manner presented by the rules framed under section 112 of the Act." Speaking for myself, I entirely agree with the learned Judge. I only regret that the learned Counsel did not draw our attention to that case, which would have eaved considerable argument and time of the Court.

Consequently, the first point which was relied upon, namely, that this order should not have been made expirte, is without any foundation.

The other ground, namely, that the examination has been used for an improper purpose, in my judgment, equally fails. I am not satisfied that this examination was used for any ulterior purpose. The learned Counsel for the appellant did not draw our attention to any passages in the evidence or any questions which were put during the examination to justify this allegation. the other hand, the learned Counsel for the Official Assignee drew our attention to some of the questions and some of the answers which were given by the witness, and such answers led me to think that they were by no means satisfastory and that the attitude of the witness was obstructive. Farther, this was a matter for the discretion of the learned Judge, and I am not prepared to interfere with that discretion, especially having regard to the fact that in the order which I have read, in my julgment, the learned Judge has provided a safeguard which will protect the witness from improper questions being put to him during the course of his examination.

For these reasons in my judgment the appeal fails.

There is one other matter to which I must refer. The learned Counsel for the Official Assignee took the point that the application before Mr. Justice Greaves was in fact an appeal from the order of the Registrar in Insolvency, and if it were an appeal he argued that it was out of time.

In my judgment this was not an appeal, it was, as I have already said, a petition to set aside the order of the Registrar in

BURALAL KARNANI U. OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE CF CALCUTTA.

Insolvency, and it then proceeded to ask in the alternative for a stay of the examination of the appellant or for direction; as to the scope of the examination and, in my judg. ment, in a case of this kind where an ex parte order is made for the examination of a witness by the Registrar in Insolvensy, if there are any grounds justifying an application to the Court, the proper source is to move the Court to set aside the order which has been made by the Registrar in Insolvency and that is what was done in this case. In my judgment it was not an appeal, and, consequently there is nothing in the point, which the learned Counsel for the Official Assignee raised with regard to the so called appeal being out of time.

The learned Conneel for the Official Assignee raised a further point that there was no appeal to this Court from the judgment of my learned brother, Mr. Justice Greaves. Having regard to the fast that I have come to the conclusion that this appeal should be dismissed, it is really not necessary to decide that point but, as at present advised, I am inclined to the opinion that the order of Mr. Justice Greaves was an appealable order, because it involved not only a decision that there should be no stay of the examination but also a refueal of the application of the appellant that the order of the 29th November 1920 should be set aside.

For the foregoing reasons, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J .- I agree. The preliminary question whether this appeal is somps. tent involves two points. The first is, whether the application to Mr. Justice Greaves to set aside the order made under sestion 36 to examine the appellant was an appeal under clause (2) of sestion 8 or an applies. tion under elause (1). If it was an appeal it was out of time under esstion 101 and the appeal before as ought to be dismissed in limins on that ground. But I think it should be regarded, for reasons which have just been stated by my Lord, as an application under the first clause for the review of an ex parts order. The second point is, whether the order of Mr. Justice Greaves from which this appeal has been taken, is a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent. I should be disposed to say, if it were necessary to deside this question, which it is not, that the order is a "julg.

ment," because it assumes, if it does not decide, that the Register had jurisdiction to make the order, and because, at any rate, it decides that on the merite the appellant had shown no cause sufficient to justify the order being set aside, that is to say, it rejects the claim made on the appellant's behalf that no order for his examination should ever have been made and that the whole proceedings should be quashed.

The next question relates to the jurisdiction of the Registrar. I agree that the Registrar had power under section 6 (d) and (e) to deal with an application made exparts on behalf of the Official Assignes that the appellant should be examined under section 36, and, further, that under section 35 and rule 30 of the Rales of the High Court, the Registrar had also power to make the order for the appellants' examination exparts, without notice to the appellant. On this part of the case I have nothing to add to what my Lord has said.

Listly, on the merits, I can see no reason why we should disturb the order made by Mr. Jastise Grazves. The appellant is entitled to the protection afforded by section 132 of the Evidence Act. Mr. Justice Greaves had been eareful to couple his order with a safeguard against improper questions being put to the appellant. appellant undoubtedly comes within description of a person capable of giving information regarding the insolvent, his dealings, or property. In the interest of the general body of the creditors the Official Assignee is entitled to have him examined and I feel confident in my own mind that if the appellant is au honest man be will lose nothing by being frank. I hesitate to suggest any other hypothesis, but, if any other hypothesis be suggested, I can see no reason why we should go further than Mr. Justice Greaves has already done to relieve the appellant from the situation in which he finds himself,

For these reasons, I agree with my Lord that this appeal should be dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Chellaram died leaving a widow called Premibai and a daughter named Devibai. During the lifetime of Chellaram, Devibai had become a widow of one Lokcomal and had one son. Subsequent to the death of Chellaram but before the death of Premibai, Devibai died having re married and given birth to three sone, the father being one Jassomal. This is a suit by one of the sone of Devibai by Jassomal against Tirathmal, a son of Devibai by Lokcomal and the other sone of Jassomal (formal defendants) to partition certain family property.

This property was originally the property of Chellaram, Lut the distribution of it does not depend upon the ordinary law of succession, but has to be settled according to the provisions of two Wills. Premibai by her Will, excented on the 5th April 1909, left half the property to Tirathmal and the remaining half to the three sons of Jassomal. But it is necessary to refer to the Will of Chellaram from which Premibai purports to derive her interest in the estate which she bequeathed to the parties to the present litigation. That Will is da'ed 1853 and seems to have been executed about seventeen years before the death of Chellaraw, at a time, as I have said, when Devibai was still the widow of Lokoomal, and had only this son Tirathmal, and had not contracted a marriage with Jassomal and it would appear that no such marriage with Jassomal was at that time contemplated. The question, of course, is what interest did Premibai take under the Will of Chellaram, because the Will of Premibai purports to dispose off properties which she took under that Will as if the were the complete owner. On the side of Tirathmal it is set up that all she took by reason of the Will of Chellaram was a life. interest and that the Will by implication gave to Tirithmal the reversion after the death of Premibai, which he, in any case, would have had, had there been no Will and had his mother remained unmarried at the death of Devibai as they stood at the time of the Will of Chellarum. On the other hand, it was set up that the Will of Chellaram gave complete ownership to Premibai without reserving any interest to Tirathmal and that the interests of the parties are dependent on the Will of Premibai.

Both the Courts below have interpreted this Will in a sense which gives complete ownership to Premibai and we concur with them in this. The words used by the testator are such as in the ordinary interpretation convey the meaning of complete ownership. He used the expression 'malik' and "varis." He did not use the words usual enjoyment or management." But the words which he does use, tit, 'malik' and connote absolute ownership. such eases it has been held, vide ease quoted in Motilal Mithalal v. Advocate General of Bomb y (1), where the word "malik" is used and where there was nothing in the text or eirenmstances of the Will which indicated an intention on the part of the testator to ent down the absolute estate clearly or upmistakeably that the absolute estate should be taken to have been bequeathed. In the present case there is no clause which clearly or unmistakeably cuts down the estate. There is estainly a negative clause in which the testator cays that during the lifetime of his wife, Tiriathmal should not have any interest but it does not seem correst to deduse from that, that his intentions were that if Tirithmal survived Pramibai he should have the absolute estate. He probably meant to emphasise (1) 1! Ind, Cas. 547; 35 B. 279; 13 Bom L R. 471.

CHANDAR SEEHAB C. AMIR BEGAM,

his desire to prevent any interference in the property by Tirithmal, during the lifetime of Premibai, and reading the clause which follows that statement it seems to us that that really was the intention of the testator.

It is not proper for us to make a Will for the testator and we may have to interpret the Will as it stands, in the light of the eireumstanses, but in any ease there does not appear to be any strong reason for thinking that the testator probably meant to give the wife a life-interest merely and his grandson a reversionary estate because in that case there does not seem any necessity for him to make any Will at all, Moreover, the Will was made in 1883 and this widow was then 40 and Tira hmal was then quite a young shild and we do not think it is at all unlikely that a Hindu having a family of that sort to deal with (a middle-aged wife, a young widow daughter and a shildish grandson) would leave the ultimate destination of his property in the hands of his wife to dispose of essording to the cirsum. stances which might exist after she had stopped needing it. We think, therefore, that the interpretation put on this dosament by the lower Court is erreet and wi dismiss this appeal with easts.

In the case of an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council where a portion of the decree is in favour of the applicant and the other portion, which is adverse to him and against which he seeks to appeal, is in confirmance of the decree of the Court of first instance, he is not, as a matter of right, entitled to prefer the appeal.

Application for leave to Appeal to His Majesty in Conneil.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellants. Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council on the ground that this Court did not affirm the decision of the Court below, and as the value of the subject matter exceeded Rs. 10,000 the applicants were entitled as of right under section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure to appeal to His Majesty in Counsil.

The suit was one to enforce a mortgage the amount elaimed far Rs. 10,000. The present applicants for leave to appeal were some of the defendants to the suit, they being the grandsons of the mortgagor. In the Court below it was contended that the property comprised in the mortgage was ancestral property, that the debt was not incurred for family neeessity, and that, therefore, the portion of the debt which was not for family necessity could not be recovered from the ansestral property. There were other pleas also, anch as a depial of the fact of the mortgage, and also as to other portions of the mortgaged property being or not being The Court of first ansestral property. instance found in favour of the plaintiffs and held that the whole of the mortgage debt had been incurred for family necessity and desreed the claim in full. The defendants, the present applicants, appealed to this Court and this Court held that a portion of the properly comprised in the mortgage was ancestral property and that two of the items which formed the consideration mortgage for the BIBW not which for the family property BAW legally liable. 'As to these two items, the total amount of which was over Rs. 13,000 interest. including this High held that the present applicants and the ancestral property were not liable. of the elaim it was a deeree in affirmance of the decision of the lower Court. The applicants defendants, now seek to appeal to His Majesty in Council against that portion of the decree which is adverse to them, that is to say, in regard to that portion of the decree of this Court which affirmed the decision and the decree of the Court of first instance. We are of opinion that they are not entitled to appeal to His Majesty in Council as regards this part of the claim and to re open that part of the ease which was decided adversely to them by the lower Court as well as by this Court. As observed by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Roja S-es Noth Roy v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1), the Court has to look to the substance of the matter. It is true that this Court varied the decision of the Court below but that modification was in favour of the present applicants and did not afford them a right to appeal because the decision was in their favour. As regards the portion of the claim which was decided against them there was in substance an adverse consurrent decision of both the Courts, the decision of this Coart being a concurrent decision with that of the Court of first instance and in affirmance of that decision. In this view, the present application cannot be granted. No question of law is involved in the ease.

A similar view was held by this Court in Kamal Nath v. Bithal Das (2).

We accordingly reject the application with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Transfer pendente lite - Decree, ejectment against transferor-Transfer pursuant to prior agreement, validity of-Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 97—Decree in ejectment-Resistance to possession by purchaser pendente lite-Order of removal-Appeal-Limitation-Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art 167, application of-Application against second obstruction

A transfer pendente lite, even though made in pursuance of a registered agreement to sell executed prior to suit, is inoperative against the holder of a decree in ejectment, where there is nothing to show that the seller had, at the date of the agreement, any better title to the property than at the time of the suit. [p. 724, col. z.]

T. 240; (1910) M. W. N. 574; 20 M. L. J. 961, distinguished.

Orders of removal of obstruction are appealable if passed under Order XXI, rule 98, Civil Procedure Code, against the judgment-debtor or an obstructor at his instigation. The latter description does not necessarily apply to a person who merely relies on a title derived from the judgment-debtor. Such a person can prefer an appeal only if he is authorised to do so under section 47 of the Code, i. e., if he can show that he was a party, or the representative of a party, to the decree, [p. 723, cols. 1 & 2.]

A decree-holder in ejectment was resisted in getting possession of the property in execution by a person who had purchased the property in suit pendente lite. On an application under Order XXI, rule 97, the obstruction was ordered to be removed.

The purchaser appealed:

Held, (by Cldfield, J., Ramesam, J., centra) that as the seller had no title to the property, his transferee could not be considered to be a representative of a party to the suit to enable him to prefer the appeal under section 47 of the Civil Irocedure Code. [p. 725, cols. 1 & 2.]

Order XXI, rule 97 is permissive and merely affords a summary procedure which an obstructed person has the option to use or forego. Failure to avail of it does not deprive a person entitled to possession of any further right to obtain it in execution. [p. 725, col 1.]

An application for removal of a second obstruction thoughmade more than 80 days after an acquioscence in an earlier one, is not barred by Article 167 of the Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, dated the 16th November 1920, in Execution Application No. 462 of 1919, in Execution Petition Revieion No. 555 of 1919 (Original Suit No. 2 of 1908 on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Madura). Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. Narasimha Iyengar and K. V.

Ra agopalan, for Respondent No. 1.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 30th and 31st of March 1921 and having been posted to be spoken to on the 5th and 7th of April 1921 and the case having stood over for consideration till this day the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

Outrieur, J.—The order under appeal was passed on an application under Order XXI, rale 97, Uivil Procedure Code, by respondent, assignee of a decree in a suit in ejectment, for removal of the obstruction to delivery in execution, raised by appellant, second respondent in the lower Court, and his son, third respondent, now deceased, whom he rapresents. Appellant claimed the property in virtue of a purchase, valid, as he contends, against respondent, nothwithstanding that it was pendente life. We have to decide whether an appeal lies against the lower Court's order removing his obstruction and, if so, whether that order was right on the merits.

Orders of removal are appealable, if passed under Order XXI, rule 98, against the judgment debtor or an obstructor at his instigation. But the latter description does not necessarily apply to a person, who, like appellant, merely relies on a title derived from the debtor. Such a person will, if his good faith is established, be maintained in possession under rule 99 unless, with reference to rule 102, the transfer to him was after the institution of the suit in which the decree was passed. Rule 103 deals with the further remedy open to the unsuccessful party by suit or appeal, but not exhaustive. ly. For it has been held in Meyvappa Obetty

v. Chidambara Chetty (1) and Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nadan (2) that this rule does not exclude an appeal, if one is authorised by section 47. These decisions were no doubt given in cases of delivery to the purchaser in execution, not to the holder of a degree in ejectment like respondent; and in the second, the obstructor relied on a purchase at Court-sale, in execution of a different decree, not, as here, on a private conveyance. But, although these facts may be material in connection with the merits of the appellant's claim, they justify no distinction against the application of these authorities; and in fact in the penultimate paragraph of my judgment in Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nalan (3), when it was before a Fall Bench, the positions of a decree-holder purchaser in execution of another decree and of a stranger purchaser, whether in execution or private sale, were expressly treated as the same.

But, whilst these authorities justify an obstructor pleading a conveyance from the judgment-debtor in proseeding after an order removing his obstruction by appeal under section 47 and not by suit, that only means that in order to have his appeal beard on its merits and to have an adjudication on his paramount right to possession against the purchaser he must first eatisfy the Appellate Court that he is a party or the representative of a party to the decres; and not the less so, because in many cases, of which this is one, that adjudication and the decision whether he is entitled to proceed under sestion 47 will rest on the same In the present esse it no foundation. doubt appears that appellant was for a short time on the record of the suit in which the decree was passed as 105th defendant. But he was impleaded without notice and his name was removed without his participating in the proceedings. His ease, therefore, resembles Gudicherla Ohina v. Gadicherla Seetayy 1(4) not Ramas vani Sastrulu v. Kameswaramma (5) and we must, therefore, decide whether he is a proper party to proeeedings under section 7 in the other charas. ter on which he relies as the representative of a party to the decree. That is, whether his conveyance of the suit property is for the present purpose valid. His connection with the property is alleged as originating in Exhibit I, a sale by 5Cth defendant on 4th September 1901 to the sons of Nainar Mahomed, of whom one is 71st defendant, and Exhibit II, a sale by them to him on 3rd Ostober 1901. These sales were, it is not disputed, pendente lite, the plaint in respondent's suit having been presented on 2nd August 1901 and registered on 3rd September 1901, the day before the former document. The lower Court has, however, found, and these findings are not disputed, that 50th defendant had already on 2nd December 1896 given Nainar Mobamed. who died before the suit, a registered agreement to sell, Exhibit 111, although possession did not pass to the latter or sons, but only later to appellant. bis The contention is that appellant's title relates back to the date of Exhibit III and is, therefore, unaffected by the dostrine of lis pendens.

This has been supported only by reference to cases, in which an agreement to sell or mortgage made before attachment, but merged later in an actual transfer, was held enforceable against the subsequent purchaser at Court-sale, Savithri Ammal v. Ramasimi (6), Bazineedu v. Venkayya (7), Rebala Venkata Reddi v. Mangadu Yellappa Chetty (8) and Madan Mohan De Sarkar v. Rebiti Mohan Poddar (9), the two last mentioned being referred to with approval by Seshagiri Aiyar, J. in Chamiyappa Tharakan v. Rama Iyer (10). These decisions, it should be observed, were given in suits and accordingly were also referred to as direct authorities against the admissibility of this appeal and as, so far, inconsistent with Kuppana Kaun. dan v. Kumara Kavundan (11) on which appellant originally relied in that connce. Bat it is a sufficient answer to this that there was no question, except in Bapineedu v. Ventayya (7) of any order in claim or obstruction proceedings; and in it the order on the plaintiff's claim was passed before he had completed his title by taking a ecnyeyance. To return, however, to the main argument, it derives no assistance from these cases. For, if they were in point, their tenor, and in particular the reference in Ecbala Venkata Reddi v. Mangadu Yellappa Ohetty (8) to section 40 of the Transfer of Property Act, suggest that the enforcement of prior agreements to purchase is contemplated only against subsequent purchasers, who have notice of them; and appellant, who in fact did not refer to Exhibit IV in his counterpetition at all, has not proved that respondent or his assignor had notice of it either during the suit or before the latter's pur- base. And next, a fundamental ground of distinction, there is no analogy in this respect between deliveries after attachment and Court-sale and those made under an ejestment decree. For in the former the original title of the judgment debtor is common ground for all concerned and, in the words used in Rebala Venkata Reddi v. Mangadu Yellappa Chetty (8), the decreeholder can be regarded as selling the property subject to an obligation attached to its ownership, whereas in the latter that ownership is ordinarily, as it is here, precisely the matter in dispute and has been negatived by the deeres under execution. No suggestion has been made that the title of 50th defendant as against respondent was any better at the date of Exhibit III than it was when the suit began or the subsequent conveyances were giver; and further 71st defendant, one of appellant's transferors and a party throughout to the suit, failed equally with 50th defendant to establish his claim. To allow the validity of that claim to be agitated by appellant in the present proceedings would involve not only an infringement of the dostrine of lie pendens, but the authorisation of an attack in execution on the correstness of the decree, to which principle are opposed; and it is end convenience spits of its being inmaterial that, in pandente lite, appellant's conveyance may, as my learned brother points out, have some legal consequences against 50th defendant, when it has none against respondent, who alone is engaged in this dispute.

This entails that appellant's conveyance must for the present purpose be regarded as invalid against respondent and, therefore. that the former bas not established his right either to retain possession on the merits or, as the representative of a party, to appeal under section 47. The two remaining points raised may, therefore, be dealt with shortly. The first is that the respondent is now debarred from applying for removal of appellant's obstruction, because the decreeholder did not apply under Order XXI, rule 97, when he was obstructed in a previous attempt to obtain delivery on 23rd March 1919, This is argued alternatively on the grounds that an application for removal of a second obstruction made, as this is, more than thirly days after acquiessence in a previous one is barred by Article 167, Schedale I of the Limitation Act, and that such acquiescence deprives the person entitled to possession of any farther right to obtain it in execution and, therefore, of the right to removal of obstruction to his doing so. As regards limitation, the obstruction referred to in the third solumn of the Article must, as this Court held in Rama. sekara Pillai v. Dharmaraya Goundan (12), be that referred to as somplained of in the first and it would not be in accordance with fast or the ordinary use of words to treat the two obstructions which are in question, as continuous and to refuse to distinguish between them. As regards the more general contention it is material that the Code nowhere supports it explicitly and that Order XXI, rule 97 is worded as merely permissive and as affording a summary procedure, which the obstructed person has an option to use or forego. That is one ground taken in the judgment in Muttia v. Appasami (13) and is the basis of the exhaustive discussion of the matter in Raghunandan Protad Misra v. Ramcharan Manda (14). Respondent would distinguish the former case on the ground that the parties concerned were the decree-holder purebaser and judgment debtor, relying on Vinayakrar Amrit v. Devrao Givind (15) and the judgment of Aikman, J., in Kesri Naruin v. Abul Hasan (16). But, whatever the signifisance of this distinction might be, if the question were still of the right of appeal against an actual order under rule 98 or rale 99, the facts in the first of these desisions and the reasoning in both are too obscure to support it for the present purpose; and in the second, Knox, J., held that the principle contained in the roling in Muttia v. Appasami (13) governed the ease. That principle, which was applied by the Patna High Court between the judgmentdebtor and a stranger purchaser. enunciated by it and in Multia v. Appasami (13) generally and as founded on the comprehensive language of rule 97 and the corresponding language of the earlier Code; and the references in the later decisions to the position of those concerned can be justified on the ground that the argument before the Court was conserned mainly with the question whether, with reference to the then section 244, an appeal would lie. In these circumstances, this objection must be disallowed.

Lastly, appellant demurs to the lower Court's refusal to award him compensation for the building, which he has erected on the property during his possession. That can be shortly dealt with. No such claim is countenanced by the decree; and the question, whether it is sustainable and against whom, respondent, who is alleged to have acquiesced in the expenditure, or the 50th or 71st defendant, who gave appellant a bad title, would (even if the present proceedings could be regarded as under section 47) not be one arising in execution which could be dealt with in them. The appeal fails and is dismised with costs.

Rawssam, J.—The facts are fully stated in the judgment of my learned brother and need not be repeated.

The first question that arises is, whether the order of the Court below was passed under section 47 and is, therefore, appealable. Whether the purchase by the appellant is affected by the rule of lis pendent or not it is certainly not void. A transfer pendentalite is inoperative only to affect the opposite party's rights under the decree; it is certainly operative to transfer such rights of the vendor as may exist in the light of the findings in the suit. It is an assident that it was found that the vendor had no title in this ease. It is also operative to enable the transferee to maintain a suit for damages for breach of covenant for title. In this case it also operated to pass the vendor's possession to the transferee. In my opinion there is a valid contract of sale, as between the appellant and his vendor and whatever its effect may be on the respondent's rights, the appellant is the representative of the 50th defend. ant. The order of the Court below is a deeree and can be questioned only by way of appeal.

Coming to the merits, I agree with my learned brother in holding that the purchase by the appellant is inoperative against the respondent by reason of the rule of lis pendens and cannot be relied on for the purpose of resisting delivery to the respondent or for claiming compensation. As to the cases relied on by the appellant, Savithri Ammal v. Ramasami (6), Bapineedu v. Venkayya (7) and Madan Mohan De Sarkar v. Rebati Mohan Poddar (9), I do not think they are relevant as there is no more than an apparent analogy between the question arising in these eases, vie, the validity of the purchase of property attached in execution of a decree after the attachment and that of a purchase pendente lite of property the subject of the suit. It may be that where A agreed to sell property to B, and O then purchased it with notice of the agreement, B has an equitable interest in the property [Thiruvenkata Chariar v. Seshadri Iyengar (17) distinguisbing Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (18) vide also section 91 of the Trusts Act and the definition of "Trustee" in restion 3 of the Specific Relief Act and illustration (j)]. But where we have merely an agreement by A to B and no more, B has no interest in the land [Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (18), Ramanathan Chetty v. Ranganathan Chetty (19), Maung Shue Goh v.

(17) 34 Ind. Cas. 488; 30 M. L. J. £59; 3 L. W. 457; 19 M. L. T. 389.

Maung Inn (20)]. The passage at page 277 of Bennett on Lis Pendens relied on for the appellant is perhaps based on the fact that in England and America B would be regarded as an equitable owner of the property [See Rebala Venkata Reddi v. Mangadu Yellappa Ohetty (8) and Maung Shue Goh v. Maung Inn (23).] To allow the appellant's contention is to allow the rights of the respondent under the deeree to be affected-the very result sought to be avoided by section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. The appeal, there. fore, fails on the merits.

The only other question in the case is the question of limitation. As to this, I have nothing to add to the reasons in my learned brother's judgment. It follows that we do not agree with the remark in Ramasekara Pillai v. Dharmaraya Goundan (12) that a Court ought not to issue a second warrant for delivery of possession.

In the result the appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT—The plaintiff is a partner in the firm of Allans, Sons & Co. Up to 19th January 1921 Ebrahim Fezzl, Bogs, and Anvery were earrying on business in partnership in the old Bombay Share Market as Share and Stock Brokers. Ebrahim Fezzl was a member of the Native Stock and Share Brokers' Association and the eard issued by the said Association stood in the name of Ebrahim Fezzl. In October 1920 the plaintiff employed the said firm of brokers, whom I shall 'the brokers' to hereafter refer to as for his firm of transact share business The plaintiff in Allana, Dossa & Co. Ostober 1920 through the brokers bought twenty-five Central India Mills shares for October 1:20 settlement at Bs. 4,800 per share and sold twenty five Central India Mills shares for Moorat (November) settle. ment at Rs. 4,860 per share according to the rules and regulations of the Native Stock and Share Brokers' Association for his firm of Allane, Dossa & Co. The twenty. five shares bought for Ostober settlement were for the sake of convenience transferred to the plaintiff's name in the books of the Central India Mills Co., and the firm of Allana, Dosea & Co., paid to the brokers Rs. 1, 20,000, being the price of the said shares.

At the time of the November settle. ment, plaintiff delivered five out of the said twenty-five shares and received from the brokers payment of the price at which the said five shares were sold. At the same time, the plaintiff through the brokers earried over the remaining twenty shares to the next settlement, i, c., he bought twenty shares for the Moorat (November) settlement at Bs. 4,600 and sold the same number of shares for Desember 1920 settlement at Ra, 4,646 according to the rules and regulations of the Share Stock Brokers' Association bca Erhibit H).

In the month of December 1920, the plaintiff through the brokers budlied nine-teen shares of the Central India Mills, t. e, he bought nineteen shares for December 1920 settlement and sold the same number of shares for January 1921 settlement according to the rules and regulations of the Native Stock and Share Brokers' Association.

As there was no further budley business done in respect of the said nineteen shares the plaintiff had to deliver the

of transactions of January settlement). Defendant No. 1. in the middle of Deeember 1920, employed V.C. Sbrcff, a certified broker, of the Native Share and Stock Brokers' Association, as his broker to buy for him one Central India Mills share, for Jarnery 1921 delivery. Shroff bought one share for and on account of the defendant from Shiv Narian Nemani, certified brokers at Rs. 4,215 for January 1921 delivery. Defendant No. 1 told Shroff in December 1920 that he would take delivery of the one share bought by him. According to the rules and custom of the said Association, Shroff, who had to take delivery of one share on the January settle. ment, issued on or about 6th January 1921 a kapli (Exhibit No. 4) and sent the same to Chimanlal Hiralal with whom an outstanding contract for one be had Central India Mills chare. That kapli was eirenlated amongst the certified brokers between whom contracts in respect of one Central India Mills share were outstanding, and ultimately that kaple came into the hands of Ebrahim Fazal (the brokers), brokers retained the kapli because they deliver ene bad Central India Mills share and informed Shroff on cr before the 11th January that they had retained the kapli. The brokers, before January, gave the transfer forms for the said nineteen shares sold by the plaintiff for January settlement to Esmail, a cousin of the plaintiff, for the plaintiff's signature in performance of the plaintiff's transaction of December 1929, Esmail handed over the said transfer forms to the plaintiff for his signature. On the 9th January 1921 (Sunday), the plaintiff signed the said transfer forms and gave the same to Esmail for being handed over to the brokers and left for Pcona. On 10th January Esmail delivered the said transfer forms signed by the plaintiff to J. J. Trivedi, an employee of the brokers. According to the rules and peages of the said Assceiation, the brokers delivered the transfer form for one share duly signed by the plaintiff to Shroff on the 11th January Shroff sent the said transfer form 1921. defendant No. 1 for his signature.

Defendrat No. 1 signed the transfer forms and returned the same to Shroff.

According to the rules and usages of the Association the brokers had to deliver the share certificate or certificate in respect of the one share to Shroff on 17th January 1921 and Shroff had to pay the price of the same to the brokers on the same day, an bour or two after the share certificates were delivered to him. The brokers who have to deliver shares in the market on the payment day, according to the usages of the market, receive the share certificate from their constituent before the payment day and make payments to their constituents on the payment day or a day thereafter. So, on 15th January 1921, Anveri saw the plaintiff's cousin, Esmail, and demanded from him the share certificates.

According to the evidence of Esmail be asked for moneys when Anveri demanded from him share certificates. Account of the price was then made up. The price of nineteen shares at the rate of Re, 4,600 per share was Rs. 87,400. The firm of Allane, Dossa & Co., had given a lean to the brokers of Rs. 4,000. Balance due in respect of that lcan was Rs. 2,775 and interest on Re. 2,775 amounted to Rs. 85.60. The total amount was Re. 21,134 6.0. Anveri gave a post-dated cheque (Exhibit B) for Rs, 91,134 6 0 tut Esmail refused to take it. Thereupon, Anveri told Esmail that he had no money then in the Bank but he would get moneys on the 18th or 19th January from the purchasers of pineteen shares and would pay the moneys into his current account with the Bank and the cheques would be honoured on the 20th January. Esmail further says that, relying on the said representations of Anveri, he gave to Apperi the share certificates. Esmail forgot to calculate in the account that was made up interest on the niceteen shares for one month from November 1920 to December 1920 which interest amounted to Rs. 874. So on the same day he, through his servant, demanded Rs. 874 from the brokers and the brokers on the same day sent to him another chaque for Rs 874 post-dated the 20th January 1921 (Exhibit C).

On the 16th January, the plaintiff returned to Bembay from Poona and his cousin Esmail showed to him the said post-dated sheque and informed him of what had happened on the 15th January.

On the 17th January, at about 12 o'clock, the brokers delivered share certificates in respect of two half shares of the Central India Mills to Shroff, who compared the transfer forms and the share certificates and found them in order and at 5-30 P.M. on the same day made payments to the brokers in respect of the said half shares. He had at that time the moneys of the defendant in his bands. He had sold five Indore Malwa and five Currimbhoy Mill shares of defendant No. 1 in the market, and, according to his evidence, had received the sale proceeds of these shares before be paid the brokers. The brokers absconded on the 19th January without paying the moneys in respect of the said nineteen shares to the plaintiff. The plaintiff presented the chaques to the Central Bank on 20th January and 21st January, but the same were dishonoured. Plaintiff gave a public notice in the Times of India of the 21st January to the effect that the brokers had fraudulently received nineteen shares from the plaintiff and had absconded and that no one should deal with the said nineteen shares,

On the 19th or 20th January 192', defendant No. I sent the transfer form and two half shares to Shroff, asking him to get the same transferred to the name of defendant No. I in the Company's books. Shroff lodged the transfer form and two half shares with the Company on 20th January and the Company gave him a temporary receipt (Exhibit No. 10).

On 20th January 1921, the plaintiff wrote a letter to the Central India Spinning and Weaving Co. asking the Company not to transfer the shares standing in the name of the plaintiff to the name of any person. The Company, by their letter dated 22nd January 1921, etated that the transfer deeds in respect of thirteen shares standing in the plaintiff's name had been properly executed and called upon the plaintiff to obtain an injunction restraining the Company from transferring the shares. On the 25th January the plaintiff wrote to the first defendant asking him to return the two half shares, Nos. 12234 A and 1272 A, which the first defendant had lodged with the Company for getting the same transferred to his name.

The plaintiff in February 1921 filed this suit against defendant No. 1 and against the Central India Spinning and Weaving Co., defendant No. 2, praying that it might be declared that he was entitled to the said two-half shares and that the first defendant might be ordered to deliver to him the share certificates and the transfer forms in respect of the said half shares.

1921, the plaintiff On 3rd February obtained an interim injunction and by a consent order, dated 24th February 1921, the said interim injunction was dissolved on defendant No. 1 undertaking to pay the value of the shares mentioned in the plaint as of 26th January 1921 in the event of a decreebeing passed against him. The said consent order was without prejudice to the rights and contentions of the parties. Subsequently, the shares were transferred to the name of the first defendant in the books of the Company. By the said consent order it was agreed that the suit was to be decided as if the shares had not been transferred to the first defendant's rame. The plaintiff also filed similar suits against the purchasers of the remaining eighteen shares, consent orders were passed in the said suits also on the application of the plaintiff for an injunction against the purchasers of shares and the Company. Six suits filed by the plaintiff were tried by me. The parties to this suit and to the other five suits tried by me are agreed that evidence given in all the six suits filed by the plaintiff should be treated as evidence given in each of the six suits. In the plaint as originally drafted plaintiff's ease was that in Desember 1920 he agreed to sell nineteen shares for eash payment in January 1921 through Ebra. him Fazal, Boga and Anveri and that, according to the usage of the Bombay market, the brokers were liable to the plaintiff for the performance of the said contract. On 15th January 1921 Esmail handed over share certificates for nineteen shares to Anveri on the representation of Anveri that on 17th or 18th of January, the blokers would reseive moneys from the purchaser and that the moneys would be paid into the brokers' surrent assount with the Bank and the post-dated cheques which Anveri gave to Esmail would be honoured, When Anveri made the said representations. the brokers had no intention to make avail. able at the Bank sufficient moneys to meet the cheques and the share certificates and FAZAL D. transfer forms were obtained from Esmail by means of an offence and fraud and the plaintiffs were entitled to the two half shares.

After the issues were raised Counsel for the plaintiff applied for amendment of the plaint and the same was granted.

The plaintiff's ease as amended is as follows:—

The plaintiff dealt with the brokers as principal with principals and not as principal with agents, that the contracts of the plaintiff with the brokers in October. November and Desember 1920 were voidable on the ground that the brokers had at the time of the said contracts formed the fraudulent intent of not paying for the said shares and had no intent of performing their promise to pay each for the said shares and that the original contracts entered into in October 1920 and the subsequent contracts in November and December 1920 were each of them voidable by the plaintiff. In the month of January the brokers had the said fraudulent intention and they had no intent of performing their promise that the cheques given by them would be eashed on presentation and that the contract then made was also voidable by the plaintiff, and further, that plaintiff was also entitled to avoid the contract under section 39 of the Indian Contract Act even if the contract or contracts to sell were not voidable ab initio. The brokers were the purchasers of the shares from the plaintiff and the brokers dealt with the purchasers in the market (the brokers of defendant No. 1 in this suit and defendants in other suits) as principals with principals and that the brokers' title being bad, they could not give to the purchaser, defendant No. 1, a better title to the shares than they them. selves had (section 108, Indian Contract Act) and that none of the Exceptions to section 108 of the Indian Contract Act applied, and so the plaintiff was entitled to the half shares in this suit and to the shares in the other suits filed by him.

It was contended on behalf of defendant No. I that the plaintiff dealt with the brokers as principal with agents and not as principal with principals, and that the plaintiff did not sell the shares to the brokers but sold the same in the market through the brokers and the brokers gave the share certificates in the market in performance of the contract which the brokers had entered into for and on behalf of the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff being the seller of shares the plaintiff's title to the shares was transmitted to the first defendant. It was further contended that even if the plaintiff dealt with the brokers as principal with principals and the shares were purchased by the brokers from the plaintiff, the brokers were in possession of the shares under a valid contract with the plaintiff and the properly in the shares passed to the brokers and the brokers could give a good title to the shares to defendant No. 1 who was a bona file purchaser for value without notice of the two half shares of the Central India Spinning and Weaving Company.

It was also contended on behalf of defendant No. I that the plaintiff having delivered transfer forms duly signed by him and the share certificates to the brokers who handed over the same to the broker of the first defendant and received the price of the shares from the broker of the first defendant was estopped from questioning the title of the first defendant, who was a purchaser for value without notice, to the said two half shares.

All the three partners, Ebrahim F.z.l, Boga and Anveri, absconded on 19th January 1921 and their whereabouts are not known. The cheques given by them to the plaintiff on 15th January were dishonoured. From the current account of Messre. Bogs and Anveri with the Central Bark of India (Eshibit F) it appears that from lat January 1921 up to 19th January 1921 there was a debit balance of Rs. 1,115.6 ic against Messrs. Boga and Anveri. From the current account of Ebrahim Fazal Vieram with the National Bank of India (Exhibit Q) it appears that on 31st December 1920 there was a cradit balance of Rs. 8 15 2, and on 31st January 1921 a credit balance Thirty-three certified brokers of Rs. 5-13-2 of the Native Share and Stock Brokers' Association have sent in their claims against the brokers to the Secretary of the Association in respect of the share certificates delivered by them to the brokers at the time According to of the January settlement. the said claims the debts due by the brokers amount to R. 4 or 5 lakhs.

PAZAT. D. ALLANA U. MANGALDAS M. PARVASA,

Thirty certified brokers have sent in their claims to the said Secretary against the brokers in respect of differences due to them for the January settlement. The total amount of elaim in respect of such differences is Rs. 40,000. Haji Bashu Ali, the fatherin law of Boga, says in his evidence that he had entered into large budley transactions through the brokers, and the brokers bad to pay to him on the 17th or 18th January 1941 a sum of Rs. 1,89,000 in respect of budley transactions; that the brokers, on 17th January 192!, took away from him share sertificates of 6,500 shares of various sompanies and transfer forms signed by him in respect of the said shares and the brokers gave him on 18th January 1921 twenty three cheques all payable to Ebrahim Fozal or bearer of the value of Rs. 1,27,000 and stated that they would send to him the balance of Rs. 62,500 the next day. Out of the said twenty three sheques, twenty-two were erossed and one was not erossed. On 19th January the one cheque that was not crossed was cashed by Aladin, an employee of Haji Bachu Ali. Haji Bachu Ali further says that as his son was not in Bombay and that as he did not know how to read or write, he gave fifteen sheques to Visram, Esmail & Co. and six sheques to Mahomedali Visram, Visram, Esmail & Co. paid the said fifteen cheques into their current assount with the Bank of India and gave to Haji Bachu Ali the each amount of the fifteen chaques. Mahomedali Visram paid the said cheques into his current ascount with the Central Bank of India and gave to Haji Bachu Ali the eash amount of the said six sheques. One crossed cheque was cashed by Shariff Hasham by paying the same into his account with the Imperial Bank of Persia. Haji Basha Ali reseived the moneys in respect of all the said twentythree cheques on 18th or 19th January. According to his evidence he has a claim of Rs. 62,612.5.0 against the brokers.

On the evidence before me, it is quite elear that the first defendant (and defendants in the other suits filed by the plaintiff) acted with perfect good faith and purchased the shares for value. Except where a shareholder is estopped from denying the title of some particular transferes the general rule of English Law is that a purchaser of shares acquires no better title than his vendor himself has [Colonial Bank v. Cady (1); and that shares in this respect are like other goods and shattels: see Cole v. North Western Bank (2), and Lindley on Companies, Vol. I, p. 568.

The expression 'goods' in section 108 of the Indian Contract Act includes all moveable property. See section 76 of the Indian Contract Act. The General Clauses Act No. 1 of 1868, section 2, sab section (6), defines moveable property as meaning property of every description except immoveable property and sub section (5) defines immove. able property as including land, benefits to arise out of land and things attached to the earth or permenently fastened to anything attached to the earth. It is enacted by section 25 of the Irdian Companies Act that shares in a Company shall be moveable property. Share certificates are moveable property and are, therefore, goods' within the meaning of section 108 of the Indian Contract Act. See ill. (a) to section 83 of the Indian Contract Act and Hatarimul Shohanlal v. Satish Chandra Ghoth '3). Counsel for the plaintiff, as well as for the defendant, admitted that Chapter VII of the Indian Contract Act applied to share certificates. Under section 108 of the Indien Contract Act no seller can give to the boyer of goods a better title than he himself has except in cases falling within the exceptions to that section.

Assuming that the plaintiff dealt with the brokers as principal with principals, the question is, whether the first defendant is entitled to the two half shares mentioned in the plaint?

It was argued for the plaintiff that the Court must infer that the brokers in October. November and, at all events, in December 1920 conspired together to purchase a lot of shares without any intent of paying for them, and that they had, at the time they entered into the transactions with the plaintiff in October, November and December 1920, formed the fraudulent intent of not paying for the said shares and had no intent of performing their promise to pay for the said shares sold, from the following fac's, namely:

(a) the brokers bought a large number of shares. The plaintiff had filed eight suits against ultimate purchasers in respect of the nineteen Central India Mills shares sold to and through the brokers. The brokers had bought from others also;

(b) the brokers took from the plaintiff share certificates and gave to him bogus cheques on Banks where they had no credit and that they gave cheques to others also

which were dishonoured;

(c) the debts due to other brokers from the brokers in respect of the shares delivered to them in the market amounted to four or five lass. The debts due to others brokers from the brokers in respect of differences amounted to about Rs. 30,000;

(d) all the three partners Ebrahim Fazal,

Boga and Anveri absended;

(e) Exhbit F shows that between 1st January and 19th January in the current account of the brokers with the Central Bank of India, there was a debit balance of Rs. 11,000 against them.

I do not think the Court can infer any such fraudulent intent in Ostober, November or December 1920. In October the plaintiff bought through the brokers twenty-five shares of Central India Mills for Ostober and sold the same number of shares for (November). The brokers brought to the plaintiff twenty five share certificates and transfer forms. The brokers must have got transferred twenty four shares to the plaintiff's name in the books of the Company in Ostober. The plaintiff kept with him the share certificate and transfer form in respect of one share with the name of the transferee in blank. If the brokers had any such fraudulent intent as is contended for, in Ostober, they would not have given the share certificates and transfer forms to the plaintiff. In November 1920, at the time of the Moorat settlement, the plaintiff delivered five shares in the market and budlied twenty shares. brokers paid to the plaintiff the price of the five shares delivered to the plaintiff. In December, according to the plaintiff, the brokers told him that the purchasers of twenty-five shares were willing to budley (earry over) the transaction for January settlement and the plaintiff instructed the brokers to budley nineteen chares of the Central India Mills and accordingly the brokers sold nineteen shares for December and bought the same number of chares for January 1921. Some difference was due to the plaintiff in respect of December settlement. That was not paid to the plaintiff by the brokers then. The brokers promised to pay to the plaintiff the difference in January. There is no evidence before me that in October, November and December the brokers had not entered into bona fide transactions and it is too much to ack the Court to infer that in October, Novem. ber and December 1920, the brokers who were carrying on business in the share market had not the intention of paying for the charce bought by them and of performing their promise because on 19th January they abscorded with a heavy liability and gave post-dated cheques to their constituents which were dishonoured.

I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff has not proved that the brokers at the time they entered into the transactions in Ostober, November and December 1920 formed the fraudulent intent of not paying for the shares sold by the plaintiff and had no intent of performing their promise to pay for the said shares. The result is, that if the plaintiff dealt with the brokers as principals and not as agents and if the November and transactions of October, December were contracts between plaintiff and brokers as between principal and principals as contended for by the plaintiff and not as between principal and agents, the said contracts were not voidable, as consent to the same was not caused by fraud or misrepresentation. The said contracts, in my opinion, were, when they were entered into, bona fide contracte.

Then, it was contended for the plaintiff that in January the brokers formed the fraudulent intent of not paying for the said shares and had no intention of performing their promise that the cheques given by them would be cashed on representation and that the contract then made was also voidable by the plaintiff. The plaintiff has given his evidence in a very etraightforward manner and I accept his evidence in its entirety. Now it is clear from the evidence of the plaintiff and Esmail that on the 15th January the brokers gave to the plaintiff two cheques post-dated the 2 th January 1921. Anveri told Esmail on the 15th of January that he would get moneys from the purchasers on 17th or 18th January and would pay the amount he reseived from the purchasers into his our. rent eccount with the Bank and so he would be able to meet the cheques. From what transpired subsequently, it might eafely be inferred that when Anveri made these statements neither he nor his partners had the intention of making available at the Central Bank of India sufficient money to meet the said cheques. The said statements were false. If Anveri induced Esmail to deliver to him the said share certificates by tendering the post-dated cheques drawn on the Central Bank where he had no money and by which Bank he expected the cheque would be dishonoured, he made the plaintiff perform his part of the contract by cheating Esmail, but the question is, whether Esmail was induced by the said fraud and disbonest statements to deliver the said ebare eertificates to Anveri.

Esmail in his evidence says that he would not have delivered the share certificates but for the representations made to him by Anveri. But both Fazal and Esmail admitted that according to the usage they were bound to deliver the share certificates before payment was made to them. Esmail in his evidence stated that he had no reason to distrust the brokers on 15th of January. He also at first stated that the plaintiff did not tell him anything about the share certificates. When asked why be demanded payment and refused to part with the share sertificates without payment, he stated that the plaintiff had told him not to part with the share esrtificates without receiving payment and that he did not like to part with the chare certificates without asking the plaintiff about it. Plaintiff says he expected Esmail to hand over the share certificates to the brokers in the regular epurse of business and that he was bound to deliver the share certificates before the payment day without receiving any payment from the brokers, and that if he had been in Bombay and the brokers had asked for the chare certificates he would have delivered the same to the brokers.

It seems to me, therefore, that there is no reason wby Esmail should refuse to part with the share certificates without money, and when he says he demanded money when Esmail asked for the share certificator, J. think he believed that to be the sace after the frauds of the brokers were discovered. It seems to me that the brokers, who had by that time formed the fraudulent intent of not paying for the shares in order that there might be no suspicions against themselves, volunteered to give a post-dated cheque and when Esmail asked wby the sheque was postdated told him that the purchase money would be put into the Bank and the sheque would be honoured. I am of opinion that Esmail would have parted with the share certificates even though no cheque or money had been paid to him and no representations made to him, though now he honestly believes that he would not have done so without being paid.

I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff handed over the transfer forms and delivered the share certificates in performance of the contract of December 1920 and that Esmail was not induced to deliver the share certificates by reason of the fraudulent representation of Anveri and that the share certificates and transfer forms were not obtained from the plaintiff's cousin, Esmail, by means of an offence and fraud. The nineteen shares were appropriated by the plaintiff for the purpose of the contract of December 1920 with the brokers and that propriation was assented to by Anveri who took the share certificates, and the plaintiff's title both legal and equitable in the shares passed to the brokers and the brokers transmitted their title to the shares both legal and equitable to the fendant and the other purchasers.

But, in my opinion, the result would be the same if Esmail was induced to perform his part of the contract of Desember 1920 and to deliver the nineteen share certificates on the fraudulent representation of Anveri that he would get the purchasemoney of the nineteen shares from the purchasers in the market and would pay the amount of purchase money into his account with the Bank and the post dated sheques would be honoured. The contract of December

FAZAL D. ALLANA O. MANGALDAS M. PAEVASA.

1920 was valid when made. In performance of that contract the plaintiff had to deliver to the brokers and did deliver to the brokers transfer forms duly signed by him about six days before the payment day. The plaintiff had also to deliver the nineteen sertificates before the payment day (17th January). The brokers had to pay the price to the plaintiff on the payment day or on the day following the payment day. Now, I assume that the brokers indused the plaintiff to perferm his part of the contract by representing to him that the brokers would perform their part of the contract of 20th January, and the plaintiff performed his part of the contract because he was descived into believing that the brokers would perform their part of the contract. If contract is obtained by frand or cheating, it is voidable at the instance of the party defrauded or cheated; but if the performance of contract is obtained by fraud or obeating, there is no authority for saying that the contract can be avoided. It was held in Jamsetji Nassar. wan i v. Hir ibhai Navro i (4) that fraud in the performance of a contract, apart from its making, is no ground for reseission and restoration of the parties to the position in which they were before the contract was entered into. From section 103 (3) of the Indian Contract Act, it appears that if the contract is rendered voidable because it was obtained by cheating or any other offence, no property passes to the buyer. But there is no authority for extending that proposition and saying that where performance of the contract is obtained by fraud or cheating, the property in the goods delivered in perform. ance of the contract does not pass to the buyer. In my opinion where a seller is induced to perform his part of a valid contract of sale and to deliver the goods to the buyer in performance of that contract by fraud or cheating on the part of the buyer, the property in the goods delivered to the buyer passes to the buyer and if the buyer sells and delivers the goods to a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, such a purshaser gets a good title to the goods and the seller cannot recover the goods from such a purchaser. The seller has his remedies against the buyer under the sontrast and san sue him for the price of goods. When goods sold have been delivered to the buyer and the price of the goods is not paid by the buyer, the seller can only sue the buyer for the price of goods except in the following cases:—

- (a) A seller is entitled to reseind the contract and retake possession of the goods delivered to the buyer on failure of the buyer to pay price at the time fixed where it is stipulated by the contract that he should be so entitled: section 121 of the Indian Contract Act.
- (b) Where the contract is voidable or terminable by the seller, the seller may disaffirm the contract and re-take possession of the goods which have been delivered under the contract.
- (c) The seller may also reseind the contract and re-take possession of the goods where the contract is unlawful for causes not apparent on its face, and the defendant is more to blame than the plaintiff. In such a case if the parties are in pari delict, the seller cannot reseind the contract and re-take possession of the goods from the buyer.

Even in eases (a), (b) and (c) the seller eannot re-take possession of the goods which have been delivered to the buyer under the contract where the ownership of the goods is transferred by the buyer to a third person who before the contract is reseinded buys them in good faith of the buyer who is in possession of the goods unless the circumstances which render the contract voidable amount to an offence committed by the buyer or those whom he represents: see section 103, Exception 3, Indian Contract Act.

I hold, therefore, that even if E-mail was induced to part with the share certificates on the fraudulent representations of Anveriwhich amounted to cheating, the plaintiff's title both legal and equitable in the shares passed to the brokers and the brokers passed their title in the two half shares to defendant No. I who is entitled to retain the two half shares.

Then it was contended that the plaintiff was entitled to avoid the contract under section 39 of the Indian Contract Act. Section 39 deals with discharge of contract by breach. The Indian Law on the subject of discharge of contract by breach is contained in sections 39, 51, 53, 54 and 55 of the Indian Contract Act. Section 39 deals with the two cases in which a party to a contract before or at the time fixed for its performance (a) refuses to perform his promise, and (b) disables himself from performing his promise. In either case the promisee may put an end to the contract unless he has signified by his words or conduct his acquiescence in its continuance. Where a party to a contract refuses to perform or disables himself from performing his promise before the contractual time for performance has arrived, the promisee may put an end to the contract, and if he does so, an anticipatory breach of the contract occurs. When B to a contract refuses to perform or disables bimself from performing his promise at the time fixed for its performance, be commits a breach of the contract unless, by agreement between the parties, further time is given and the contrast is kept alive. In this case the time for performance of the contract on the part of the brokers was 17th or 18th January. The plaintiff took the post dated sheque and gave time to the brokers till 20th January. The cheques were dishonoured on 10th Jacuary and so the brokers failed to perform their part of the contract committed a breach of the contract on 20th January 1921. If on 15th January when the brokers gave the bogus sheques they are to be deemed to have refused to perform or disabled themselves from performing their promise, the refusal or inability to perform was before the contractual time had arrived, and as the plaintiff did not accept the brokers' repudiation of the contrast that day no enticipatory breach occurred. In my opinion, therefore, section 39 of the Indian Contract Act does not help the plaintiff.

(4) 19 Ind, Cas. 403; 37 B. 158; 15 Bom, L. R. 192,

Then it was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the plaintiff's signature as seller in the transfer forms was not attested and the transfer deeds were not stamped at the time the plaintiff and defendant No. I signed the same. It was further contended that by delivery of transfer forms in blank signed by the seller and the share certificates property in the shares does not pass to the purchaser.

Section 28 of the Indian Companies Act enacts that shares shall be transferable in manner provided by the articles of the Company. Article 33 of the Articles of Association of the Central India Mills provides that shares will be transferred by an instrument in writing. It gives a transfer form. Article 34 provides that every instrument of transfer shall be executed both by the transferor and transferee. The Articles do not require any attestation. So there is nothing in the contention that the plaintiff's eignature was not attested when the plaintiff signed the transfer forms. Under the Indian Stamp Act if the transfer forms are not duly stamped on payment of the penalty required by law, the defect is sured.

It is a common practice for a seller of shares to sign an instrument of transfer with the name of the transferee in blank. The buyer then inserts his own name or without doing so resells and hands the blank transfer to the new purchaser who again either inserts his own name as the transferee or resells and delivers the transfer still in black to the purebaser from him and so on. Delivery of the share sertificates with the transfers executed in blank does not invest the holder of the certificates and the transfer forms with the ownership of the shares in the sense that no further act is required in order to perfect his right. The transferor continues to be the share holder recognised by the Company. As pointed out by Lord Watson in Colonial Bank v. Oady (1), delivery of the share certificates with the transfers executed in blank passes not the property in the shares but a title legal and equitable which will enable the holder to vest himself with the shares without the risk of his right being defeated by the registered owner or any other person deriving title from the registered OWDER.

In my opinion, therefore, assuming that the shares were purchased by the brokers from the plaintiff as contended by the plaintiff, the first defendant is entitled to retain the shares and to fill in the blanks in the transfer forms and get the shares registered in his name in the books of the Company. If I am right in holding that even if the brokers dealt with the plaintiff as principals with principal, the first defend. ant is entitled to retain the shares and the plaintiff has no elaim to the same it is unnecessary to determine the question whether the brokers asted as the plaintiff's agents and if so whether the plaintiff is liable for the fraud of the brokers and has no claim to the shares and the question of estoppel raised by the first defendant's Counsel. But as this case may go further, I shall express my opinion on the abovementioned questions.

Mr. Inversity has contended that the plaintiff dealt with the brokers as principal with principals and not as principal with agents. He further contended that the contracts of share-brokers with their constituents in Bombay are contracts on pakki adat terms. The incidents of a contracts entered into on pakki adat terms are given in Bhogwandas v. Kanji (5). No evidence has been called to show that the relations between the plaintiff and the brokers were governed by the usages of the Bombay market known as the pakki edat eystem. No attempt has been made up to now in any case between a share-broker and his constituents in these Courts to show that transactions between a share broker and his constituents are entered into on pakki adat terms. The evidence clearly shows that the broker is bound to sell the shares in the market at the proper rate and eannot buy for his constituents his own shares nor sell to himself the shares of his constituents. I, therefore, hold that the contracts of the plaintiff with the brokers were not on pakki adat terms.

The next question is, whether transactions between the plaintiff and the brokers were between principal and principals, in other words, between buyers and sellere? In the plaint as originally drafted it is stated that the plaintiff sold nineteen shares through the brokers who were earrying on business as share-brokers on the old Stock Exchange and that according to the usage of the Bombay Share Market the brokers were liable to the plaintiff for the performance of the contract. Ebrahim Fazal was a member of the Native Share and Stock Brokers' Association and the brokers' eard stood in his name. The plaintiff has produced the contract note dated 22nd November 1920 sent to the plaintiff by the brokers. According to the contract note, Exhibit H, twenty shares were bought for Moorat (November) settlement at Rs. 4,500 and sold for December settlement at Re. 4,646 by the brokers plaintiff's orders and on plaintiff's account subject to the rules and regulations of the Native Share and Stock Brokers' Association. The plaintiff has admitted that all his transactions with the brokers were subject to the rules and regulations of the Native Share and Stock Brokers' Association. It is argued that as by the rules and usages of the Bombsy Share Market brokers are personally liable to the brokers with whom they transact business and are also personally liable to their constituents they deal with their constituents as principals and not as agents. According to the rules and regulations of the Native Share and Stock Brokers' Association, between the brokers all business is done on the footing that they are acting as principals. Brokers can enter into transactions on their own account, Brokers when they enter into transactions on behalf of a principal do not disclose the name of the principal for whom they are acting. According to the rules of the English Stock Exchange, business is done between members of the Stock Exchange on the footing that they are acting as principals but it has never been decided that a broker on the English Stock Exchange deals with his constituents as principal with principals. It does not follow that because brokers are personally liable to the brokers with whom they transact business in the market they deal with their constituents as principals. Every agent who contracts personally though on behalf of his principal is personally liable and may be sued in his. own name on the contract: see section 230 of the Indian Contract Act. Further, it appears that by the rules and usages of the Stock Exchange, stock brokers аге responsible to their elients in the event of the person with whom they have made bargains for their elients failing to earry An agent, by express contract them out. with his principal or by the usages and rules of the partieular place, market or business in which he is employed, may become personally liable to the prinsipal. Such an agent is called a del credere agent. Further it is in evidence that the broker is bound to sell the shares of his client in the market at the proper rate. He is FAZAL D. ALCANA U. not entitled to bay his elient's securities from his elient nor can be sell his own securities to his elient without full diselogure and is bound to account for all profits made by him in the course of agency beyond his ordinary remuneration. Mr. Inverarity, in his concluding address, contended that the brokers were the plaintiff's agent to sell and buy shares but that after they had bought and sold the shares they were not agents but principals. He argued that it appeared from what bappened at the time of the settlement that the brokers did not keep the contracts, which they entered into for their clients, alive and they were allowed to do so by the usage of the Stock Exchange and, therefore, they were not agente, but principals. Now it appears that a broker who enters into a contract for sale of a certain number of shares of a certain Company on behalf of his constituent X with brokers M does enter into a contract with the same broker M for the purchase of the same number of shares in the same Company on behalf of another constituent F before the settlement day. The broker, it is contended, thereby cancels the contract of his constituent X with the broker M because at the time of the settlement the brokers who have bought and sold equal number of shares of the same Company pay differences only. During each settlement there are in the ordinary course numerous dealings in the same kind of sesurities and on the settling day there are many brokers who have bargains to complete and some of these brokers may have both bought and sold the same securities. It would sause great delay, inconvenience and expense, if every seller bad to deliver securities to his immediate purchaser and astually transfer to him and receive payment from him when both may have had other dealings in the securities and have bought from or sold to other members who also may have re-sold or re-purchased. To avoid this, the following method is adopted by the brokers who are members of the Native Stock and Share Brokers' Association. The brokers who have bought and sale equal number of shares in the same Companies pay differences only. A broker who wants to take delivery on the settlement day, on behalf of his constituent, calls upon a broker with whom he has an outstanding contract for purchase of the shares of which he wants to take delivery, even though the broker did not buy from him the shares of his particular constitutent on whose behalf he wants to take delivery. The broker who has to take delivery issues a kapli (known as ticket on the London Stock Exchange) on the first day of the settlement month to the broker with whom he has an ontstanding contract in respect of the shares of which delivery is to be taken. On the kapli the purchasing broker writes the number given to him by the elerk of the Association who gives the printed form of the kapli. The purchasing broker also writes on the kapli the name of the shares, the date, his own name, and the name of broker with whom he has an outstand. ing contract and to whom he passes the kapli. That broker sends that kapli to the broker who has an outstanding contract with him and so on. The kapli is thus eirenlated amongst certified broker with whom there are oustanding contracts till it comes into the hands of the broker who has to deliver shares on behalf of his constituent. The selling broker retains the kapli and informs the purchasing broker about the retention of the kapli. Transfer forms are signed by the constituent of the selling broker a week before the payment day. The selling broker then gives the transfer forms duly signed by his constituent to the purchasing broker who sends the same to his (purchasing broker's) con-The transfer forms are then stituent. signed by the constituent of the purchasing broker. The constituent of the selling broker delivers to the selling broker the share certificates before the payment day or on the morning of the payment day. The selling broker gives to the purchasing broker the share certificates on the payment day. An hour or two thereafter on the same day the purchasing broker pays the selling broker for the shares according to the rate fixed by the Association. Each intermediate broker in the kapli pays or receives from the broker in the kapli with whom he has an outstanding contract the difference betwen the rate fixed by the Association and the rate in the contract between them as the case may be. When the transfer forms are signed by the seller and the buyer, they are not stamped. The purchasing broker, after FIZEL D. ALLANA D. MANGALDAS M. PARVASA.

the share certificates are received by him from the selling broker and after he makes payment, puts the requisite stamp on the shares and lodges the transfer forms and shares with the Company for getting the shares transferred to the name of his constituent. The purchasing broker gets temporary receipts from the Company and hands them over to the purchaser. Under this practice, the ultimate purchaser, i. e., the issuer of the kapli, is substituted as the broker with whom the ultimate seller is to complete the transaction.

I am of opinion that certified brokers of the Bombay Native Share and Stock Brokers' Association are del credere agents of their They are in a fiduciary relation. constituents. ship to their constituents. Their duties are strictly to adhere to the position of agents, to act diligently for their principals, to earry out the instructions of their principals and to make enforceable bargains for them and keep those bargains open. If A, a broker, has bought from B, another broker, a certain number of shares and B has bought from A the same number of shares in the same Company for a certain settlement, they may on the settlement day agree to set off one bargain against the other and so save the necessity of completing both bargains.

I think, on the whole, that in the plaintiff's transactions for Ostober, November, and December 1920, the brokers acted as the plaintiff's agents, and did not deal with the plaintiff as principals with principals.

The next question that arises is, whether if the brokers acted as plaintiff's agents the right, legal and equitable, of the plaintiff in the shares passed to defendant No. 1 (and to defendant No. 1 in other suits) enabling him to get the shares registered in his name in the books of the Company.

The plaintiff authorised the brokers to sell the shares and the brokers sold them for and on account of the plaintiff in the market. The plaintiff gave to the brokers the transfer forms and the share certificates in order that the same might be delivered by the brokers in the market. When the plaintiff delivered the transfer forms and the share certificates to the brokers, he intended to part with his interest in the shares to the transferse. A broker in the Stock Exchange has authority, which arises from his employment, both to make and take payments on behalf of his

The brokers in this case as principals. plaintiff's agents delivered the transfer forms and share certificates in the market and received as the plaintiff's agent the purchase money of the shares. Instead of paying the money to their principal, the plaintiff, the brokers appropriated the same to their own use. It was contended that if the brokers were plaintiff's agents they obtained the share certificates from the plaintiff by cheating, and, therefore, the first defendant acquired no title to the shares. But the principal and not the third party is responsible for the fraud of the agent. Every ast done by an agent on the principal's behalf and within tha scope of his actual authority is binding on the principal with respect to persons dealing with the agent in good faith. The plaintiff having put forward the brokers as their agents in the market to make representations to innocent third parties to the effect that the brokers were authorised to transfer the plaintiff's title in the shares and to receive the purchase price of the shares cannot be heard to say, if those representations have been acted on by the innocent third parties, that the brokers obtained the share certificates by cheating the plaintiff.

Lastly, I have to consider the question of estoppel. When the blank transfer forms and share certificates are delivered under a contract by a registered holder of shares and the boyer sells the shares and delivers the blank transfer forms and shares to a bona fide purchaser for value or where blank transfer forms and the share certificates are delivered by a registered holder of shares to his broker for sale in the market and the broker sells the same as the agent of the registered holder to a bona fide purchaser for value, the bona fide purchaser gets a good title to the shares and can insert his own name in the transfer form and procure himself to be registered as owner. In such eases the question of estoppel does rot arise.

Mr. Taraporevalla has argued that even if there was no valid contract between the plaintiff and the brokers and even if the brokers were not acting as the plaintiff's agents, if the plaintiff signed the transfer forms and delivered the same and the share certificates to the brokers, by that act of his he placed the brokers in a position to give a good title to defendant No. 1, who was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice.

and that the plaintiff was estopped by the said act of his from asserting any right to the shares. Mr. Inversity for the plaintiff contended that there is no estoppel and has relied on France v. Olark (6). Tayler v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co. (7) Hutchison v. Colorado United Mining Company and Hamill v. Lilley (8) and Fox v. Martin (9).

In France v. Olark (6), the registered holder of shares deposited share certificates and blank transfers with O as security for £150. C deposited the certificates and the same transfers etill in blank with Q as security for £250. It was decided that Q could only hold them as against the registered owner as security for £150.

In Taylor v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co. (7), the plaintiff who was entitled to some £ 20 shares and some £ 2 shares in a Company directed his broker to sell the latter. The broker obtained forms of transfers stamped sufficiently to pass the £ 20 shares. The plaintiff executed these forms leaving the blanks to be filled in by the broker The broker inserted the deseription of £ 20 shares but left the name of the transferee still in blank and sold the £ 20 shares in fraud of the registered holder. The names of the purchasers were ultimately filled in, they knowing that the transfers had been previously executed in blank. It was held that the registered holder was entitled to the sbares.

In Hutchison v. Colorado United Mining Company and Hamill v. Lilley (8. Hamil, who was the owner of shares, delivered to his son the transfer forms signed in blank and the share certificates to deliver the same to S, an intending purchaser. The son borrowed moneys by pledging the share certificates and the transfer forms in blank. It was held that Hamill was entitled to the shares.

In Fox v. Martin (9), a registered holder of shares instructed a broker to sell them for each and signed a blank transfer which he handed with the share certificates to the broker. The broker desposited the share certificates and the blank transfer with his banker as security for an advance to him.

According to the articles of the Company, the shares in France v. Clark (6), Tayler v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co (7), and Hutchison v. Colorado United Mining Company and Hamill v. Lilley (8) were transferable only by deed. Where the constitution of the Company requires transfers to be by deed, transfers in blank are void and give no title to the transferse, nor has the transferse any authority to fill up the blank: see Tayler v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co. (7).

No doubt these cases are, therefore, distinguishab'e from the present case, where the articles of the Company do not require a deed for transfer of shares but it appears from the jadgments in the above cited cases and from For v. Martin (9), where the articles of the Company did not require a deed, that the registered holders of shares were not estopped, because the resaipt of the blank transfers signed by third parties affected the mortgagess and the purchasers with notice. Assorting to these cases, a person who takes from another blank transfers of nessed done to stdep ent to teedeer of seads is bound to look to the authority of the person to use such blank transfer forms as his own.

It may be observed that the authority of France v. Clark (6) and Hutchison v. Colorador United Mining Co and Humill v. Lilley (8) is considerably chaken by the speeches of Lorde Watson and Lord Herschell in Colonial Banks v. Caly (1). The House of Lorde in that case decided that there was no estoppole because the acts of the executors of the deciased registered owner in signing and delivering the blank transfers did not a mount to an estoppal, but both Lorde Watson and Herschell said that the same acts on the part of the registered owner himself would have amounted to an estoppal. Lord Watson said (p. 278):

"Had the transfers been executed by John Michael Williams, and the estimates thereafter sent by him to Thomas, Sona and Co, for safe enstody, I should not have hesitated to hold that Blakeway, though acting fraudulently, was neverthelone placed by his act in a position to give a title to an honest purchaser which his employer could not dispute. But that is not the case with which we have to deal."

Lord Herschell said (p. 285):

If in the present ease the transfer had been signed by the registered owner and delivered by him to the brokers, I should have come to the conclusion that the banks had obtained a good title as against him, and that he was estopped by his act from asserting any right to them."

At page 286 he said:

"The case seems to me to differ essentially from that of a transfer signed by the registered owner. He must, presumably, have signed it with the intention at some time or other of effecting a transfer. No other reasonable construction can be put on his act. And if he entrusts it in that condition to a third party, I think those dealing with such third party have a right to assume that he has authority to complete a transfer."

These obiter dicta were not followed in Fox v Martin (9) on the ground that France v. Olark (6) was not expressly overruled by the ease of Colonial Bank v. Cad y (1). France v. Clark (6) was followed by Bigham, J., in Samuel Montague and Co. v. Weston, Olevedon and Portishead Light Railways Company (10), where a sub mortgages of Lloyd's bond with blank transfer from Chick and Co. who had only a limited authority to deal with the security was held not entitled to recover amount of the bonds which issued by the defendant Company. It was observed by Bigham, J., in that case that the dictum of Lord Herschell in Colonial Bank v. Oady (1) must be used in connection with the facts of that case and was not intended to conflict in any way with the decision in in France v. Olars (6). The learned Judge further observed that it might be that if a bond with a blank transfer on its back such as an American Railway Bond were handed to any one with the transfer executed by the owner, the owner would be estopped from denying the authority of the person so entrusted to deal with it but that would only be because of the inference in favour to such an authority which would be drawn from the deposit of bonds in that particular form.

The dicta of Lords Watson and Hersehell were followed in the Irish case of Waterhouse v. Bank of Ireland (11), where some Pennsyl. vania Rail Road Company shares were hand. ed by the plaintiffs, who were the registered owners, to a broker as margin to cover a loan with which the broker was to purchase chares in certain other companies for the plaintiffs. The broker pledged the shares for his general loan account at his bankers. He did not purchase any share for the plaintiffs but sent the contract notes purporting to have done so. The broker absended and the plaintiffs gave notice to the bankers that they were the of the shares. Thereafter the ereawo bankers having filled up the transfers were duly registered in the books of the Company. The bankers claimed to hold the shares as security for the amount advanced by them to the broker. It was held that the plaintiffs, having delivered to the brokers share certifieates with transfer forms signed by them, were estopped from asserting their owner. ship against the defendants who had taken them bona fide for value without notice.

above mentioned obiter dicta were also followed by Pickford, J., now Lord Sterndale, M. R., in Fuller v. Glyn, Mills, Ourrie & Co. (12), where the owner of shares after purchasing them through a broker allowed the certificates, on which were endorsed forms of transfer which were executed by the registered holder of shares, to remain in the hands of the broker and the broker deposited the same with his bankers as security for his account with the bankers, it was held that the owner was estopped from setting up his title against the bankers. See also Hone v. Boyle (13), and the observations of

The obiter dicta of Lords Watson and Herschell are, in my opinion, at variance Clark (6). Brokers or with France v. bankers dealing with brokers are not put upon enquiry by the mere facts that the share certificates and transfer forms are not in the names of the brokers bringing them but are in the names of third parties. According to English Law, where the owner of shares either signs the transfer forms and delivers the same with the certificates to a broker, or where, never having had possession of the blank transfer forms and share certificates but knowing them to be in such condition that a broker can deal with them, he allows them to remain in the broker's posses. sion and thereby enables the broker to part with them to another who takes them upon the faith of the apparent authority of the broker to deal with them, then the true owner is estopped from questioning the title of the person taking upon the faith of the apparent authority of the broker to deal with them.

The law of estoppel is contained in section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act, which is in these terms:—

"When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing."

It was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Conneil in Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Liha (14), that the terms of the Indian Evidence Act did not enest as law in India anything different from the law of England on the subject of estoppel.

I have held that the plaintiff delivered the transfer forms and share certificates to the broker.

In my opinion, even if there was no contract between the plaintiff and the brokers and even if the brokers were not transmitting the plaintiff's title to the shares as the plaintiff's agents, the plaintiff by signing the transfer forms and delivering the same and the share certificates to the brokers placed them in a position to give a title to defendant No. 1, who was a bona file purchaser for value without notice, and is estopped by his act from asserting any right to the shares. The result is that this suit and the —Action not relating to matters submitted to arbitration.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 19—Stay of suit

Before an order can be made to stay a suit under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act, it must be established that the suit has been instituted in respect of a matter agreed to be referred to arbitrarion [p. 74°, col. 2.]

A Court will refuse a stay, where the action commenced relates to matters outside the submission. [p. 743, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of Mr. Justice Buskland, dated the 3rd April 1920.

FACTS appear from the following judg.

BUCKLAND, J .- On the 3rd July 1919, the parties to this application entered into a contract, whereby Messre. J. K. Bose & Co. sold to Messrs. Sinelair Murray & Co., 500 bales of jute upon certain terms which are not material to this application with the exception of the arbitration clause in the emtract. This clause is one with the terms of which this Court is familiar, and provides for disputes arising out of the contract to be referred to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, J. K. Bose who earried on business under the name of J. K. Bose & Oo., has filed a suit against the applicants, Mesers, Sinclair Marray & Co., for a decree for Rs. 1,500 by way of damages for breach of the contract, for a declaration that it is a nullity, and that it should be eancelled, and for an injune. JNANEHDRA ERISHPA BOSE U. SINCIALE MURRAY & CO.

tion restraining the defendant firm from proceeding with a reference to the arbitration of the Bengel Chamber of Commerce. This application has been made on behalf of Mesers Sinclair Murray & Co., under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act to stay that suit. The matters in issue in the suit are matters which the arbitrators are competent to decide, and under section 19 of the Act, I must be satisfied that there is a sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred and secondly, that the applicants at the time when the proceedings were commenced were and still are ready and willing to proceed to arbitration,

It is urged that I should not exercise my discretion in favour of the applicants in the circumstances of this case. There are two ways of regarding this application: there is the rarrow view, strictly in accordance with the section under which I should see whether or not the matter in isene in the suit is one which is within the arbitration elause, and whether the terms of the scotion are otherwise complied with. That view takes no account of the elaim which the applicants desire to refer. The other is the broad view which takes account of the real point of substance, which is the same both in the suit and in the arbitration proceedings, which Messrs. Sinclair Murray & Co, desire should take place with reference to their claim against J. K. Bore. I think that I am entitled to take the latter, because this is not the normal ease for which the section primarily provides. where a party to a submission files a suit and the sole question is whether that slaim should be referred to arbitration or desided by the Court in the suit.

The circumstances of the matter are as follows: On the 3rd July a contrast similar to that between the applicants and J. K. Been was entered into between Messrs. Sinclair Marray & Co., and Messrs. D. L. Miller & Co. The latter were the buyers thereunder. Mesers. D. J. Millar & Co., made a claim in respect of the goods which the applicants received from J. K. Been under their contract with J. K. Been and delivered under their contract with Messre. D. L. Millar & Oo., and an arbitration was held by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. In that arbitration Messrs, Sinclar Marray & Oo., put forward a number of contentions which are to be found in an exhibit annexed to the affidavit of J. K. Bose filed on this application, among which were that the goods were delivered in time: that they were of contract quality, and that the Bengal Chamber of Commerce had no jurisdiction. Primarily these contentions were put forward by J. K. Bore in response to Mesers. Sinelair Murray & Co., but the latter adopted them and made them their own. J. K. Bose did so, though he had taken rp the position that he was not a party to the contract under which that arbitration was held and had nothing to do with it, An award was made on the 27th November 1919 in favour of Messrs D, L. Millar & Co, by which Messrs. Sinclair Murray & Co., were directed to pay Rs. 9,625 and costs. Messrs. Sinclair Murray & Co. elaimed that amount from J. K. Bose, and at the end of January last took steps to refer their claim to arbitration. The suit was filed on the 2nd February this year, and I hold, therefore, that at the time when the suit was commenced, Messre. Sinelair Murray & Co. were, and still remain, ready and willing to do all things necessary for the proper senduet of the arbitration. It bas been urged that the order now asked for should not be made in the applicants' favour in view of their attitude, first, because they now suggest that they were merely brokers though the two contracts were entirely distinct. Mr. Bleunt in his affidavit treats his firm's claim as if it were almost a matter of course by reason of Messre. Sinclair Murray & Co. being merely brokers in the transactions. This view I do not agree with. The two contracts are entirely distinct, and Mecere. Sirelair Murray & Co. are camed as principals in each. Another ground urged is that Messre, Sinelair Murray & Co. are bound by what they put forward at the arbitration between Mesers. D. L. Millar & Co. and themselves and they cannot now resile from what they then said. That is a matter which J. K. Bose can urge before the arbitrators and one which the arbitrators should consider. Were this all that I had to emaider, I might have been disposed to refuse this order, but I cannot ignore the plaintiff's attitude. In view of the fact that J. K. Base was ready enough to make submission for Mesere, Sinelair Murray & Co. to place. JNAMENDRA KRISHNA BOSE U, SINCLAIR MURRAY & CO.

hefore the arbitrators when he was not directly involved, while as soon as he was faced with a reference he filed a suit to avoid it, I do not think he is entitled to a very great deal of consideration. This suit, moreover, is one of those which have become more frequent of late in this Court and are filed in order to stiffs arbitration proceedings. The conduct of a plaintiff to such suit is, therefore, a material factor in considering whether or not he should be allowed to proceed with it.

Having regard to all the sireumstances to the fact that the applicant has complied with the section, an order to stay the suit will be made in terms of the prayer of the petition with sosts.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, Acro. C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Buckland on an application under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, for stay of a suit.

. It appears that on the 3rd July 1919, the appellant, J. K. Bose, sold certain goods to the respondents, Sinclair Murray & Co. On the same date, there was a sale of the identical goods by Sinelair Murray & Co. to D. L. Millar & Co. Subsequently, disputes arose between Sinelair Murray & Co. and D. L. Millar & Co, with the result that there was a reference to arbitration in terms of the arbitration clause contained in the entract between those parties. This reference resulted in an award for a large sum of money in favour of D. L. Millar & Co. against Sinolair Murray & Co. Sinolair Marray & Co. thereupon claimed to recover from J. K. Bose the sum which they had been made liable to pay to D. L. Millar & Co. On this J. K. Bose instituted the present suit for recovery of a sum of Rs. 1,500 from Sinelair Murray & Co. Sinelair Murray & Co. then applied under section 19 of the Arbitration Act to stay the suit.

Mr. Justice Buckland states in his judgment that towards the end of January 1919, Sinelair Murray & Co. took steps to refer their claim against J. K Bose to arbitration, and that thereupon, on the 22nd February, the present suit was instituted by J. K. Bose against Sinelair Murray & Co. This, apparently, was a mistake. At the time when the suit was instituted by J. K. Bose against Sinelair Murray & Co. no reference bad been made by the latter to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce Arbitration Tribunal in terms of the arbitration clause contained in the contract between them. That clause was in these terms: "Any dispute arising on or out of this contract shall be referred to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce under its rules applicable for the time being for decision, and such decision shall be accepted as final and binding on both the parties to this contract." The object apparently is to force J. K. Bose to have recourse the arbitration clause. Mr. Justice Buckland has beld that under the circumstances of the case the suit should be stayed. We are of opinion that this order cannot be supported.

Section 19 of the Indian Arbiration Act provides that "where any party to a submission to which this Act applies, or any person elaiming under him, commensas any legal proceedings against any other party to the submission, or any person elaiming under him, in respect of any matter agreed to be referred, any party to such legal proceedings may, at any time after appearance and before filing a written statement or taking any other steps in the proceed. ings, apply to the Court to stay the proceedings ... " Consequently, before an order eau be made under section 19, it must be established that the suit has been instituted in respect of a matter agreed to be referred. We have read the plaint in the suit instituted by J. K. Bose: and, in view of the order which we propose to make, we shall not discuss its terms. We need only observe at the present stage that from the. plaint it is by no means clear that the elaim of Rs. 1,500 relates to a matter agreed to be referred. That it is essential that the elaim should relate to a matter agreed to be referred, is established by the desision of the House of Lords in Thomas & Co. Limited v. Portsea Steamship Company Limited (1). It is well settled by a long series of eases that the Court will refuse a stay, where the action commenced relates to matters outside the submission; Smith v. Allen (2), Daunt v. Lazard (3), Lawson v. Wal. lasey Local Poard (4), Swiney v. Ballymena (5), Workman v. Belfast Harbour Commissioners (6). We further find that Sinelair Murray & Co. did not apply to the Court to compel J. K. Bose to give further particulars, so that it might be ascertained what was the real basis of the cause of action alleged by J. K. Bose against them. They did not do so, it is said, because they apprehended that such attempt on their part might be treated as equivalent to taking a step in the proceedings and might thereby disqualify them from having the benefit of section 19. The appellants have argued that the apprehension was really groundless and that mere request to be further informed of the matter alleged against the respondents could not constitute a step in the proceedings. But we need not discuss whether such apprehension was or was not well founded in view of the observations in Ives v. Willans (7) and whether the respon dent would have been affected by the decision in Parker Goines & Co. v. Turpin (8). This much is clear that there is no reason why, for the purposes of section 19, the Court should not compel J. K. Bose to give further particulars, so as to enable the Court to determine, whether the claim of Rs. 1,500 can be treated as a matter agreed to be referred under the contract between J. K. Bose and Sinelair Murray & Co. In these eireumstances, it is impossible for us to uphold the order of Mr. Justice Buckland.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the order made by Mr. Justice Buckland set aside and the matter remitted to him in order that he may reconsider it and determine, after taking such steps as he may consider necessary to ascertain from the plaintiff the basis of his claim against Sinclair Murray & Co., whether an order should or should not be made under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act.

JIWAN RAM AND OTHERS-OPPOSITE

PARTIES.

Execution—Deposit of decretal amount—Application for refund by sons of decree-holder—Notice to decree-holder—Ex parte order—Payment to sons—Decree-holder's application for refund—Procedure.

A decree-holder applied for restoration of certain sums of money deposited in satisfaction of the decree and paid to his sons under an exparte order after notice to decree-holder. The Court took security from the sons for the repayment of the money and ordered the decree-holder to file a suit within three months to have his title declared:

Held, that the Court had no authority to direct the decree-holder to file a suit nor had it authority to take security for the return of the money and that the application of the decree-holder should have been treated as an application to set aside the exparts order against him. JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Seth Bithal Das, has two sons, Jiwan Ram and Jagan-nath. We have it that a mortgage-deed was executed in favour of Bithal Das and his three brothers and that in a subsequent partition the rights under the mortgagedeed were assigned to Bithal Das and a brother called Kanhaiya Lal; that subsequently a suit was brought upon the mortgage-deed and a deeree obtained, half the benefits of which accrued to Kanhaiya Lal's heirs and half to Bithal Das. Sab. sequently, a sum was paid into Court in satisfaction of the whole decree. Half of that sum has been taken away by the heirs of Kanhaiya Lal, and we are in no way concerned with that. With regard to the remaining half, the present dispute has arisen. Jiwan Ram same into Court requesting that 1.6th of the deeretal amount in the hands of the Court should be paid to him. Jagannath same later and requested that 1 6th should be paid tolbim. Their father, Bithal Das, states that he sent many telegrams of protest, but that he was not aware of the date when the applications of his sons would come on for bearing. The sons' applications were heard, Bithal Das being absent and unrepresented. The Court found that the notice which had been issued to him was refused by him, and desided the applications ex parte against him. The order was that 1-6th of the amount in question should be paid to Jiwan Ram and 1-6th to Jaganrath. Disbursement was made accordingly. Then Bithal Das came into Court with an application that his sors should be made to refund the money on the ground that he had received no notice and that they were not entitled to the money. The learned Subordinate Judge took security from them for re-payment of the amount which they had received, and directed Bithal Das to institute a suit within three months to have his title to the amount declared. If he did not institute this suit, the security filed by the some was to be deslared espeelled. This is the matter which has come before us in revision. We agree that the learned Subordinate Judge had no authority to pass these orders. He had no authority to direct Bithal Das to file a suit and he had no authority to take security for the return of the money. The applieation of Bithal Dis was somewhat unfortunately worded but the application should have been dismissed, unless the ex parte order against Bithal Das was set aside.

The application sould be read as an applieation to set saide the ex parte order. Now this is how the case stands. If Bithal Das really refused notice, we see no reason why the previous orders directing disbursement to Jiwan Ram and Jagannath should be interfered with. But if Bithal Das did not receive notice, these orders would be automatically set aside, and the Court as a Court of execution would determine the matter upon its merits, and would either pay the money jointly or separately as the merits of the case required. For the above reasons, we set aside the order demanding. security and the order directing Bithal Das to file a suit, and we send the back to the learned Subordinate Judge or his successor to hear the case an application to set anide out as the ex parts order against Bithal Das. and after determining that matter, to pass on to such other action as his decision may render necessary. In the circumstances of the case we direct the parties to bear their own sosts.

A Court of Appeal should, in order to reverse the decision of the Court below upon a point where there is a conflict of testimony, not merely entertain doubts whether the decision below is right but be convinced that it is wrong. [p. 748, col. 1]

Although the parties to a cause are entitled, as well on questions of fact as on questions of law, to demand the decision of the Court of Appeal, and that Court cannot excuse itself from the task of weighing conflicting evidence and drawing its own inferences and conclusions, it should always bear in mind in deciding a point on which there is conflict of oral testimony that it has neither seen nor heard the witnesses and should consequently make due allowance in this respect. JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J .- This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for damages. The plaint. iff is a Blast Farnace keeper in the Bengal Steel Co.; the defendant Iron and Superintendent of Collieries. On the night of the 9th December 1916 plaintiff was proceeding on his motor cycle from Asansol to Kulti along the Grand Trunk Road, the defendant was driving his motor car in the opposite direction. The ear and the eyele collided with the result that the eyele was damaged and the plaintsustained severe injuries. He was detained in hospital for a considerable time and has become maimed and disfigured for life. The plaintiff asserts that the collision was due to the negligence of the defendant and claims Rs. 10,534 as damages. The enbstance of the case for the plaintiff is set out in the third and fourth paragraphs of the plaint filed on the 6th August 1917. where it is alleged that while the plaintiff was proceeding on his motor sycle along the left eide of the road, he saw two motor cars coming at a great speed from the opposite direction one behind the other. that the plaintiff passed the first motor car whereupon the defendant who was driving Lie car just behind the first ear, without any warning and contrary to the rules of the road, suddenly and negligently swerved out at a high and dangerous pass to the right in order to pass the first car, with the result that his car dashed into the cycle of the plaintiff. The case for the defendant is set out in the seventh paragraph of his written statement filed on the 1st Ostober 1917, in which it is stated that he had passed the ear in front (which was driven by one Mr. Gibson) as also gentleman (one Mr. Hall) who was coming in a motor oycle evidently in the same direction as the plaintiff, and that thereafter the plaintiff ran into and ecllided with his car. The defendant states that the distance between Mr. Gibson's car and Mr. Hall's eyele was 100 ft .: and that between Mr. Hall's eyele and the plaintiff's eyole was 300 ft. He further adds that at the moment of collision, he was proceeding by his left side of the road, leaving more than half the width of the road for vehicles coming from the opposite direction to pass. In the 8th paragraph of the written statement, the defendant alleges that on enquiry he learnt that the plaintiff had consumed a quantity of spirits at a refreshment room at Asansol which made him negligent, reckless and confused, and accounted for his suddenly running into the ear. The respective allegations, it may be observed, had been formulated by the parties in the source of correspondence antecedent to the suit, namely, on the 19th May 1917, on behalf of the plaintiff and the 19th June 1917, The Subon behalf of the defendant. ordinate Judge has found that the collision was brought about by negligence on the part of the defendant. He has disbelieved the story that the plaintiff was under the influence of liquor, and, unable to control himself, dashed into the car of the defendant. He has also accepted the plaintiff's story that the assident happened at the time when the defendant was trying to pass Mr. Gibson's car. The Sabordinate Judge has accordingly decreed the suit, holding, as regards the measure of damages that the amount claimed was not unreasonable. On the present appeal the judgment of the Sabardinate Jaiga has been attacked on the ground that his conslusions are not supported by the evidence on the record and that he has in fact given the plaintiff a decree on a theory inconsistent with the case made in the plaint. It has not been disputed on behalf of the respondent that, as pointed out by Lord Westbury in Behen Ohunder Singh v. Shamachurun Bhutto (1) and recently affirmed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Malrata Lakshmi Venkayyamma Row v. Venkatadri Appa Row (2), it is absolutely necessary that the determinations in a cause should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made. The fundamental principle that the plaintiff sannot be permitted to follow a line of attack which the defendant had no opportunity to meet is of special importance in collision cases, where the assident happens vary often in an entirely unexpected manner and in an extremely short space of time, thus rendering an accorate observation of the elements of the incident difficult the highest degree. In this class cases, it has consequently been considered specially necessary that the plaintiff, in framing his statement of claim, should set out the sirsumstances of the sollision, so far as they are known to him, with clearness and accuracy to enable his adversary to know the ease he has to meet; he should also state in specific terms the particular acts of negligence which, according to him, caused the collision [see the observation of Lord Chelmsford in Alice (The) and Rosita (The) (3).] We consequently to consider, whether assident took place in the manner described in the plaint.

In the determination of this question, we must remember that assording to the plaintiff he was always on his proper side of the road; the defendant did not seriously challenge this, but asserted that the plaintiff was so intoxicated that he lost all control over himself and ran into the ear. This theory has been negatived by the Subordinate

(1) 11 M. I. A. 7; 6 W. R. P. C. 57; 2 Ind. Jur.

Judge, and, in my opinion, no solid foundation was laid for it in the evidence. Immediately after the assident, a medical man was on the epot; no suggestion was made to him by the defendant that the plaintiff was intoxicated; and the information subsequently of liested with much assiduity from the refreshment room is entirely inconclusive. In this Court, no endeavour has been made to controvert the conclusion of the Sabordinate Jadge on this point. The position concequently is that the assertion of the plaintiff that he was on the proper side of the road prastically remains uncontradicted, while the only theory suggested why he should have run into the ear of the defendant has completely broken' down. We pass on next to the case of the defendant. Admittedly, there was another our in front of his our; he did swerve out of what was his proper track with a view to get in front of that ear; to this extent, he did violate the role of the road, He is thus constrained to take up the position that he successfully passed the car in front and managed to get again on the proper of the road before the assident side happened. The burden had of establishing this assertion lies primarily on him. If this allegation is not proved, the assident is explained. Upon the question, whether he had actually passed the car in front of bim and re-gained the proper side of the road, the evidence is conflicting. The plaintiff ascerts that the first oar passed him quite safely and the second car, evidently with the object of passing the first car, swerved out of its way, thereby catching him just when he had passed the first car. His statement is quite precise and he adds that when the rear ear struck him, some portion of it caught his right thigh and some other portion caught his right leg below the knee. Mr. Hall first came up to him, after the assident, and the plaintiff is definite that both the sars had passed Mr. Hall before the sesident. This description is borne out by Mr. Hall. He states that he and the plaintiff left the refreshment room together, but outside the station he went shead. He then wait. ed for the plaintiff to come up to him and was about 100 ft. to . 50 ft. off from the place of accident. He saw the two cars pass him, and immediately after the second car had passed him, it swerved to the right, evidently with the intention of overtaking and passing the first ear. At that time, the plaintiff was approaching from the opposite direction. He then describes how the plaintiff struck the side of the second ear as the position of the second ear did not give the plaintiff room enough to pass. The witness substantially adhered to this description even after a severe eross-examination. I see no reason to distrust the testimony of Mr. Hall and there is no doubt that he sould see how things happened in the bright moon light as it was the night of the full moon. On the other hand, the defendant asserted that be had passed the ear in front of him and had reached the proper side of the road before the assident happened, and in this version he was supported by his wife who was with him in the ear. There is thus a clear conflict of testimony upon this, the fundamental point in the case, The Subordinate Judge has accepted the version given by the plaintiff. I am unable to say that the story narrated by the defendant should have been preferred: it is to my mind plain that his estimate of the distances between the cars and the eyeles and the speads of the two ears is inaccurate. same remark applies to the evidence of Mr. Gibson. This is precisely the class of cases where a Court of Appeal should, as Lord Kingedown said in Bland v. Ross (4), in order to reverse the decision of the Court below upon a point of this deseription, not merely entertain doubts whether the decision below is right but be convinced that it is wrong. The same view has been emphasised by the Judicial Committee in later collision cases : Alice (The) and Princess Alice (The) (5), Tasmania (The) (6), Rivers Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. v. Hather Steamship Co. Limited (7). No doubt, as was observed in Glannibanta (The) (8), the parties to the cause are entitled, as well on questions of fast as on questions of law, to demand the decision ences and conclusions, though it should always bear in mind in deciding a point on which there is a conflict of oral testimony that it has neither seen nor beard the witnesses and should sonsequently make due allowance in this respect. In the present ease, we have the sardinal fact that the defendant at one stage took his car to the wrong side of the road which would inevitably lead to an assident if another vehicle eame from the opposite direction before the ear sould be taken again to the proper side of the road. That the car of the defendant did actually get back to the proper side has not, assording to the Subordinate Judge, been established by the evidence, and I do not see adequate grounds to discent from this conclusion.

of the Court of Appeal, and that Court cannot exense itself from the task of weighing con-

Rieting evidence and drawing its own infer-

I may add that the Subordinate Judge prop. erly declined to draw any inference adverse to the plaintiff merely from the position in which he was found lying on the road immediately after the assident. It is manifestly impossible to re-construct, even in imagination and with any approach to accuracy, the conditions under which the collision took place, solely from the position in which one of the compants of the eyele or car is found after the assident, that position is the resultant of a number of fastors which are absolutely unknown in the case before us. I hold accordingly, in consurrence with the Court below, that the assident was due to the negligence of the defendant.

As regards the quantum of damages, no conclusive reasons have been assigned in support of the contention that the assessment has been excessive; it is certainly neither perverse nor based upon a missonception of the facts of the case.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with sosts.

BUCKLAND, J.—On the 9th December 1916 the plaintiff had been spending the evening at Asansol, and at about 11 P. M. he left to return to Kulti, a place about ten miles away where he lived. REES U. YOUNG.

the same evening at the house of a Mr. Maskey which lies off the road from Asansol along which the plaintiff had to travel. Shortly after 11 P. M., Mr. Mackay's guests left his bouse in two motor cars, the Rece being in one and the Gibsons in another. Very soon after, they had torned into the main road they passed Mr. Hall, who was in front of the plaintiff and was standing by the side of the road waiting for the plaintiff to overtake him. This the plaintiff never did, for within a very short time of the cars passing Mr. Hall the plaintiff's motor cycle and the defendant's ear collided, with the result that the plaintiff was thrown on the road and sustained severe injuries, his motor eyele also being considerably damaged. The plaintiff brought the suit, which has resulted in this appeal, for damages which be has suffered in consequence of the collision which he says was due to the negligence of defendant.

The plaintiff's case is that he had passed one of the cars when the other, which was occupied by the defendant, swerved out into the read in order to pass the first car and in so doing collided with his motor cycle which was on its proper side of the road.

The defendant's ease is that he had already passed the other ear, in pursuance of something that was said before the ears left Mr Mackay's house, and that his car was leading. He denies that he swerved at all and says that "for some reason," as he puts it in one of his letters, the plaintiff turned into his ear, which he says was on his own side of the road.

On the eases as presented by the parties there is, therefore, a direct conflict of evidence as to (1) which of the cars was leading, (2) the position in the road of the defendant's car, (3) whether the plaintiff turned into the defendant's car.

The Subordinate Judge has found that the assident was due to the negligenes of the defendant. His findings as to the relative positions of the two cars are not clear, but he does not assept the allegations of the defendant and his witnesses as to the defendant's car having passed the other and being 200 or 300 feet ahead. He has found that the assident happened to the south of the sentre of the road, which means that the defendant's car was not in its proper track at the time of the collision. This finding also impliedly regatives the defendant's case that the plaintiff turned into him. In effect the Euberdinate Judge has accepted the evidence of the plaintiff and rejected that of the defendant and of his witnesses.

The plaintiff's ascount of the incident is contained in a very few lines of his evidence. He said :- "When the two motors approached me, the first ear passed me quite safely and the second ear, evidently with the object of passing the first ear, swerved out of its way, and caught me just as I had got past the first car . . . As I passed the first ear the rear care came across the road evidently with the intention of passing the first ear. But when the rear ear struck me, some portion of the rear car eaught my right thigh, some other portion of the ear caught my right leg below the knee. This knocked me on to the side of the car which went past."

I do not propose to examine in detail the evidence of the defendant and of his witness, Gibson, as to their positions at the time of the accident. The Subordinate Judge has not assepted it and I am not prepared to say that he cught to have done so. They both, however, say that when Gibson passed the seems of the accident he was going very slowly; he bimself says be "was simply srawling along, " while the defendant says, Gibson's speed was 4 cr 5 miles an hour. Gibson further says that he did not see how the assident happened. I find it quite impossible to reconcile these statements with the case that the defendant had passed Gibson some way further back and that the cars were proceeding at a distance of 200 or feet apart, at a normal speed, both on their right side of the road when the collision occurred. Were those the facts Mr. Gibson must have seen, if not the assident, at least the plaintiff lying in the road where he had fallen. Nor is his slowing down to 4 or 5 miles an hour in those circumstances explained. On the other hand, the reduced speed would be explained if it was for the purpose of allowing the other ear to pass. If this is the explanation, then it follows that the sollision took place either as the defendant's ear had just passed the other, or as it was passing, or, as it was on the point of passing. The plaintiff says he had passed the first car when the other car swerved and the collision took place. Which of the other two alternatives represents the facts is not, in my opinion, very important. It is clear both on the evidence and on the findings of the Sabordinate Judge that the second car was very near, and so near, in my view of the evidence, that the defendant in trying to rass the first ear without satisfying himself that the read was olear and that he could get by, was guilty of negligence which resulted in the collision.

The Sabordidate Judge has some to his conclusion principally on the evidence of the witnesses other than Mr. Hall, whose statements, he says, he has not much referred to, for, he has been accured of having instigated the plaintiff in bringing the suit. He does not say that he has any reason for not believing Mr. Hall, and though his dieregard of that gentleman's evidence emphasises his conviction of the truth of the plaintiff's evidence, I think he has erred on the side of excessive cantion in not taking more into account what Mr. Hall said about the occurrence. Mr. Hall appears at the time to have expressed an opinion adverse to the defendant, but that is not unnatural if his evidence true. Beyond that there is nothing the evidence to justify the accusation which the Subordinate Judge refere, even if that is a justification. Mr. Hall, besides the parties, was the only person who saw the accident. It was a moonlight night and he was at a short distance away. Irrespective of the estimates of the distance given by witnesses, this is proved by the fact that after the collision the defendant pulled up about 20 feet off from where it occurred, spoke a few words to his wife and ran back to where the plaintiff was lying and found Mr. Hall already there attending to the plaintiff. Mr. Hall's statement as to the collision is that the care passed him; then he says: - 'Immediately after the second car passed me it swerved to its right evidently with the intention of overtaking and passing tho first oar . . . plaintiff was approaching when he was about in line with the first car the second car evidently sesing that the road was not clear attempted to get behind the first ear again but as he was so near the first car that at the time of swerving to the right he could not get back to his left side of the road and did not give Mr. Young room to pase." This is an intelligible account of the occurrence ocrroborating the plaintiff and I see no reason for not accepting it. This account is also corroborated by the defendant's statement of damage done to his The Sabordinate Judge has not accepted the statements of the defendant and of Mr. Gibson as to the defendant's car having gone ahead before reaching the place where Mr. Hall was standing. Not orly is this finding supported by the evidence of Mr. Hail but the evidence generally supports the argument advanced on behalf of the respondent that it was on assunt of Mr. Hall being on the road that the defendant did not overtake and pass Mr. Gibson earlier, but waited till the cars were clear of Mr. Hall.

A great deal has been made on behalf of the appellant of the position in the road in which the plaintiff was found to be lying after the collision. It has been argued that as he lay prastically on the centre line of the road the defendant's car must have been on its proper side or it would have run over him. I find it impossible to draw any inference from this. The colliding vehicles were approaching each other at a speed aggregating between 30 and 40 miles an hour, the plaintiff must have been thrown violently from his machine, contact with the ear projected him in another direction How is it possible to say after he had been thus thrown about that the place where he came to rest gives any presise indication of his position before he was subjected to these forces?

Though it has not been contended on appeal, and the point has very properly been abandoned, that the plaintiff was under the influence of alcoholic stimulant on the occasion in question, I wish to say a word with regard to the matter. The Subordinate Judge has found that the suggestion is without any basis. Not only do I agree with this finding but the suggestion ought never to have been put forward. It is in evidence that the very day after the acsident the defendant made enquiries at Messas, Kellner and Co.'s refreshment-room at Asansol, yet he said nothing in his letter MUHAMMADI BEGUM U. UMDA BEGUM.

of the 19th June about the plaint iff being the worse for liquor. On the occasion of the accident a Dr. Tomb was present and attended to the plaintiff, but he was not called to support this suggestion. Yet the sherge made in the written statement filed on the let October 1917 and persisted in when the plaintiff was cross-examined, though the defendant and his advisers must have known that there was not a word of truth in it. Such charges, irresponsibly made, may do incalculable barm, and they should be finally laid to rest.

On the question of damages, I can only say that I think that, considering the plaintiff's injuries, the pain and suffering, which he underwent, at one time his life was said to be in danger, his claim extremely moderate, and that I know of no reason for reducing them even by the smallest coin of the realm.

I agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

the Respondents, JUDGMENT .- This is an appeal in exeaution proceedings. A decree was obtained as long ago as the 15th of September 1913 by the respondent, Musammat Umda Begum (the widow of a Muhammadan gentleman), against ber so widow, step-son and step daughter. Various applications were made until we come down to the precent application which was filed on the let of August 1919. The office reported that this application was time-barred. Thereupon the Court issued notice to the parties to appear on a given date to decide whether or not the application was barred by limitation. On the date fixed no one appeared on behalf of the judgment-debtors and the Court held that the application was This was on the 12th of within time. January 1920. Thereupon attachment issued, and on the 9th of April 1920 the judgment debtors took objection to the attachment on the ground, among others, that the application for execution was time-barred. The Court below held, on the evidence, that the notice to the judgmentdebtors to appear on the 12th of January 1920, had been duly served on them, and held that as they had not objected, the order of the Court concluded the matter, and it was no longer open to the judgmentdebtors to contest this decision except by way of appeal. This is the point raised in appeal before us. We find on the evidence that the judgment debtors had notice to appear on the 12th Japuary 1920, and that they knew that the issue then to be desid. ed by the Court was the question of limita. That being so we think that their failure to oppose the application then preeludes them afterwards. It is not a question, in our opinion, of res judicata at all. It was a decision in the very litigation upon the eame application. In our opinion the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale, Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 59, 60— Suit to recover money kept with defendant—Demand, what is—Request for money on account, whether constitutes demand.

The plaintiff from time to time entrusted money with the defendants who were to hold the same for safe custody, and by way of deposit they were at liberty, if they thought it safe and on their own responsibility and risk, to lend the money to others and, in case they did so, they were to pay a certain sum to the plaintiff as interest on the money so lent. The money was payable on demand. The plaintiff on several occasions wrote letters to the defendants for payment and finally addressed a letter through his Solicitor demanding the entire amount in deposit with the defendants. In a suit by the plaintiff brought within three years from the date of the Solicitor's letter for the recovery of the money due from the defendants:

Held, (1) that the suit was governed not by Article 59 but by Article to of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and was not barred by limitation;

(2) that the relation between the plaintiff and the defendants was not that of a lender and a borrower, that the defendants did not take the money for their own benefit and did not agree to pay interest on it themselves; [p 754, col. 2.]

(3) that before the Solicitor's letter there were no demands properly so-called but only requests for money on account and limitation, therefore, did not run from those dates. p. 754, col 2.,

Article 0 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act is not limited in its application to claims against bankers only. [p. 754, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to recover a sum of Rs. 19,918.7.0 according to the account given in the schedule annexed to the plaint, The defendants are brothers living in joint. mess, the defendant No. I being the eldest member of the joint family. The plaintiff's case is this: In the year 1896, he came to a place called Fuleswar where the defendants were carrying on business, The plaintiff gradually during his stay at Faleswar became very friendly with the defendants and mutual confidence scon grew From time to time, from the year 1899, he entrusted money with the defend. ants and up to the year 1903, the total smount entrusted to them came up to Ra. 6,700. The terms agreed upon between the parties are said to have been there: The defendants were to keep the money entrusted to them for safe onstody; they were at liberty to employ the same in their money-lending business upon their own responsibility; the money so employed was to carry interest at Re. 1 4 0 per cent. per mensem and the rest of the money was to remain with the defendants as deposit and would carry no interest; interest was to be calculated with quarterly rests; and the money was payable on demand. The plaintiff says that from time to time he received about Rs. 1,400 from the defendants, that subsequently the rate of interest was modified and reduced to 12 annas per cent. per mensem and that, according to the agreement between the parties, the total amount due to the plaint. iff now is the sum elaimed in the plaint. The defendants deny everything except the fact that in 1896 the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 came to know each other. The plaintiff has filed a number of letters purporting to have been written by the defendant No. 1 and also ascounts submitted to him by that defendant from time to time. If these letters are gennine, they fully make out the case of the plaintiff and show that the defence is a dishonour. able one. The assount, Exhibit 4 (a), and other assounts show that interest and ealculated compound Were interest the rate elaimed in the plaint. That compound interest was agreed upon, also appears from the letter. Exhibit 4, in which Jogendra, the defendant No. 1, says; "it becomes quite hard and impossible to

realiz). sompound interest of the money from them" that is, the debtors. fact that interest was payable on money lent to others and not on money that remained in deposit with the defendants is also proved by the accounts which show that the defendants divided assounts under two heads-one was called the deposit assount and the other the account of the money lending transaction, and that while interest was saleulated on money lent but no interest was calculated on money that remained in deposit. These letters and accounts exhibited in the case, if genuine, prove the plaintiff's case to the hilt. The only question of fact that we have to consider is, whether these latters and assounts are genuine or not. The plaintiff had considerable difficulty in proving his same as he is a stranger to the place where the transaction took place, being a resident of the Feudatory State of Maurbhanj. The defendants are men of some influence in the locality. The plaintiff fully estisfied the learned Sibordinate Judge by the evidence of some of his witnesses that these letters were written either by or on behalf of the defendants. The letters purport to be signed by Jogendra, the defendant No. 1, but it appears that only Exhibit 2 bears his genuine signature. It is proved, though denied by the defendants themselves, that the accounts and the body of the letters were mostly written by Jotindre, the son of the defendant No. 2, and that the signatures, though they purport to be of the defendant No. 1, are really in the handwriting of the defendant No. 2. Only as regards Exhibit 2, it has been shown that the signature is of the defendant No. 1. It seems to us, even if the other letters were signed not by Jogendra but by his brother, that they were signed on behalf of Jogendre, the defendant No. 1 and at his instance. The learned Subordinate Judge has disbelieved the defence and the evidence of the defendants, and we see no reason to differ from his view. There seems to be no reason why the story told by the plaintiff from the witness-box should not be believed in its entirely. It is difficult to imagine that the plaintiff, who is a strarger to the place, should have consceled a false case and forged a series of letters and accounts to support it. The defendants say that they are at enmity with a man named Anukul and that it was at his instance that the plaintiff instituted this false suit against them, although his real debtor was the said Annkal and not the defendants. plaintiff swears that he received the letters from time to time and that he replied to them, Some of these letters themselves show that they were written in reply to plaintiff's own letters. There seems to be very little room for doubt that the plaintiff received these letters and that they were written, if not by the defendant No. 1, at least, at his instance. Even the letter, Exhibit 2, which as the learned Subordinate Judge has found bears the signature of the defendant No. 1, shows that the defendants had correspondence with the plaintiff. In that letter, Jogendra asknowledges the resaipt of a letter from the plaintiff and he says that he was trying his best to seeure money but sould not say how far he would succeed. letter alone is suffisient to show that Jogendia's allegation that he had had no dealings with the plaintiff at all, is false. In our opinion, the letters are genuine, and so also the assounts that have been filed by the plaintiff.

It has, however, been contended that the learned Subordinate Judge has not believed the plaintiff in so far as the case against the defendant No. 2 is concerned, and that we should not believe him altogether. This is not quite correct. The learned Subordinate Judge has refused to pass a decree against the defendant No. 2 on grounds which do not appear to us to be quite sound. He says: "An attempt is made to charge him (that is, the defendant No. 2) with liability on the allegation that the brothers were joint in mess and property and that they had joint money-lending business and a joint karbar in paddy. It is true that the brothers are joint in mess and that the ancestral property is joint. There is nothing to show that they had a joint money lending business or that the defendant No. 2 had any interest in the paddy business." The elaim of the plaintiff was not dependent on the brothers carrying on any joint business. His case was that his dealings were with both the brothers, JOGENDRA NATH CHAKRABARTY D. DINKAR RAM KRISHNA CHETTEL.

and, on that basis, he claimed a decree against both of them. It is, however, not necessary to go into the matter further as there is no cross appeal against that part of the decree of the Subordinate Judge which exonerates the defendant No. 2 from liability. The finding of the Subordinate Judge does not affect the substantial truth of story told by the plaintiff.

It has next been argued that the plaintiff is not entitled to any interest after the year 1910. It is urged that the stipulation for the payment of interest was only with reference to the sums that were lent out to others, and that there is nothing to show that after the year 1910, any money was so lent. This contention, in our opinion, is not sound. The account of 1910 shows that there was no money left in deposit with the defendants and that the whole money had been lent out to others. If at any time after 1910 any money came back into the hands of the defendants. that was a matter which was specially within their knowledge and the onus to prove that faet was on the defendants under cestion 1(6 of the Evidence Act and they have failed to discharge that onus. It was next urged that the plaintiff's soit was barred by limitation under Article 60 of the Limita. tion Act. The learned Vakil for the appellant has contended that several demands were made by the plaintiff and that if time is calculated from the dates of any of these demande, the suit not having been instituted within three years of any of these dates must be held to be barred. If any demand was made, it must have been made by letters witten by the plaintiff to the defendants. The deferdants deny that they received any letters. That denial is, no doubt, false. They have not produced the letters and the inference is that if they had been produced they would have gone against them. The plaintiff does not admit that he made any demand such as is contemplated in Article 60 of the Limitation Act except one made on the 20th January 1916 when his Solicitor wrote a letter to the defendants demanding from them a sum of Rs. 18,880 which was said to be due up to the end of December 1915. Calculated from the date of the letters the suit is in time. Plaint. iff, no doubt, speaks of other demands but it appears that those were not demands properly so called but only requests for money on - account. It nowhere appears that before the

Solioitor's letter the plaintiff had demanded the whole of the morey that was due to him. In that view, of the case if Article 60 applies, the claim is not barred by limitation. It however, been argued that Artihas, ele 60 has no application to this case, that the money paid to the defendants was not at all a deposit and that the ease is governed by Article 59 of the Limitation Act. That Article refers to money lent under an agreemnet that it shall be payable on demand. It is argued that this was really money lent to the defendants. We do not take that view. The relations between the plaintiff and the defendants was not that of a lender and a borrower. The defendants did not take the money for their own benefit and did not agree to pay interest on it them. selves. The nature of the arrangement already set out was this: The defendants Ncs. 1 and 2 were to hold the money for safe sustody; and by way of deposit they were at liberty, if they thought it safe and on their own responsibility and risk, to lend the money to others and that, in case they did so, they were to pay a certain sum to the plaintas interest on the morey so lent presumably after realizing such interest from the debtors. It has, however, been urged that Article 60 only applies to cases where money is deposited with Bankers and reliance is placed on the decision of this Court in the CASE of Ishur Chunder Bhaduri V. Jibuu Eumari Libi (1). That was a case of money deposited with a firm of Bankers and Article to was held to apply. That eace is not an authority for the proposition that that Article is limited in its application to elaims against Bankers only. This view is supported by the decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Subramanian Chettiar v. Kadiresan Chattiar (2), where it was held that under Article 60 of the Limitation Act money left in the hands of a trader who is not a Banker will be a deposit in circumstances such as would make it money of a sustomer where the deposites is a Banker and that the word "deposit" in that Article is need in a non-legal sense. In our opinion, therefore, it is not Article 59 but

KIRPA RAM U. JOWANDA MAL,

Article 60 that applies to the present case and the plaintiff's suit is not barred by limitation.

As regards the question of interest, the learned Subordinate Judge has held that there are no grounds for interfering with the agreement between the parties; and in that view we agree. Although in the beginning the interest was rather high, it afterwards same to be reduced to 12 annas per cent. per month and that cannot be said to be a high rate of interest. It is not a sase where the defendants were under any necessity to take the money from the plaintiff. There is no ease of any undue influence. Very likely the defendants found it profitable to invest the plaintiff's money. That being so, they are bound by the contract which they entered into with the plaintiff.

We accordingly affirm the desision of the learned Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Mortgage—Redemption—Improvements—Liability of mortgagor.

A mortgage-deed provided for the payment of costs with interest of re-building the mortgaged house in case the mortgagee chose to re-build it. Shortly after the execution of the mortgage, the mortgagers vacated the mortgaged house at the request of the mortgagee, as the latter wanted to pull it down and re-build it. The mortgagee then pulled down the house and constructed a double-storied building in its stead. Subsequently, the mortgagers sold the house to the plaintiff, and in the sale deed it was specifically stated that the vendee was to redeem the mortgage and a specific sum was left in deposit with him for the purpose. This sum was to include the principal and interest as well as any amount spent by the mortgages and interest thereon, and the vendee undertook to be responsible for any sum in excess of the sum left in his hands Plaintiff sued to redeem the mortgage on payment of principal and interest:

Held, (1) that the covenant in the mortgage-deed coupled with the subsequent conduct of the mortgagors left no doubt that the re-construction of the house took place with the assent of

(2) that, therefore, the plaintiff could not redeem the house without paying to the mortgagee the cost of re-construction of the house. [p. 758, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Gujranwala at Sialkot, dated the 10th February 1917, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Gujranwala, dated the 26th June 19:6.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant. Dr. G. O. Narang, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Ghasita Singh and Kalu, on the 8th Ostober 1903, mortgaged a half share of a house belonging to them to Devi Ditta Mal, for Rs. 900. Rs. 700 of this was to sarry interest at Rs. 0 10.0 per cent. par mensem, i.e., 7½ per cent. per annum and interest on the remaining Rs. 200 was to be set off against the rent of the house mortgaged. The mortgage-deed contained the following clause:—

"Rharch shikast rekht wa lipai hamare Zimma hai. Agar murtahin kharch karega to shamil sar i rehn, mai sud ba sharah bala derenge. Agar murtahin nao tamir karega to ham sar i lagat, mai sud be sharah bala bar

waqt faqqul rehn decenge."

Subsequent to the mortgage, the mortgages pulled down the building after evicting the mortgagers therefrom, and constructed a double-storied building in its stead. This was done under the impression that the mortgage-deed contained a provision authorising the re-building of the house.

On the 4th November 1913 the mortgagora sold the house, as it then stood, i. e. stood re-built, to Kirpa Ram, for Re. 2,'0), In this sale deed it was specifically stated that the vendes was to redeem the mortgage in favour of Devi Ditta Mal, and a sum of Rs. 1,700 was left in deposit with the vendes for the purpose, This sum was to include the principal and interest as well as any amount spent by the mortgagee and interest thereon, and the vendee undertock to be responsible for any sum in excess of the Bs. 1,700.

On the 23rd October 1915, Kirpa Ram, vendee, brought a suit for redemption elaiming to be entitled to redeem the mortgage on payment of Rs. 1,372 8.0 and asking for the issue of a perpetual injunction to the effect that the defendant mortgagee should remove his materials from the site of the house, on the ground that the mortgagee was not competent to build the house in the way he had built it. The original mortgagee was then dead, and his son contested the snit elaiming to be entitled to be reimbursed all sums expended by the mortgagee in connection with the re building of the house as well as the principal and interest thereor, and elaimed a sam of Rs. 7,027 8 0 in all before he could be made to surrender posses. The Trial Court granted the plaintiff a decree for possession by redemption conditional on his paying a sum of Rs. 5,000 to the defendant-mortgagee within six months from the date of the deeree. The claim for perpetual injunction was dismissed. sum of Rs. 5,000 was made up as under :-

Principal mortgage money ... 900

Interest on Rs. 700 at Re. C-. 0 0 per cent, per mensem to date of institution of suit ... 470

Cost of re building the house ... 2,500

Interest at Re. 0 10.0 per cent. per mencem, after a deduction of Re. 370, being the increased rental value of the re-built house, for a period of eight years ... 1,130

Rs. 5,000

Against this decree both parties preferred appeals to the District Judge, the plaintiff claiming to have the amount reduced and the defendant claiming to be entitled to a larger sum. The District Judge came to the conclusion that although under the mortgage deed no power of reconstruction had been conferred, such a power had actually been recognised. He also held that the principles enunciated in section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act could not be invoked by the defendant mortgagee in the circumstances He held further that the conof the case. duet of the mortgagors clearly showed that the improvements which had been made had been so made with the assent of the mortgagors. This conduct may briefly be summarised as their vacating the premises at the request of the mortgagee in order to enable the mortgages to demolish the existing building and re-build the present one, and further their failure to raise any objection or take any action to the conduct of the mortgages in demolishing and re-building and finally the sale by them of the re-built bonce to the plaintiff five years after the house had been built and the absence in the deed of sale of any assertion that the house had been re built without sarction or against their wishes or had in any way been unauthor zed. He then examined the question as to the actual amount expended by the mortgages and came to the conclusion that the figure fixed on by the Trial Court, vis. Rs. 2,500 was ecrreet. He further ecnsidered that the deduction of Re. 370, on account of an increased rental value resulting from the improvements was not warranted. deares of the Trial Court was, therefore, modified by the addition of this Rs. 370 to the sum of Rs. 5,000 fixed by the First Court.

Against this appellate decree Kirpa Ram has come up to this Court in second appeal challenging the Sinding of the District Judge; and the defendant mortgages has filed cross objections, under Order XLI, rule 22, through Dr. G. C. Narang, in which it is urged that interest should have been allowed to date of redemption and not to date of suit, and further that the cost of re-building had been wrongly fixed by the First Court.

Dr. Nand Lal contended that the learned District Judge erred in holding that the demolition and re building had been carried out with the assent of the mortgagors. He has dwelt at some length on sections 63 and 72 of the Transfer of Property Act, but we do not consider it necessary to discuss all his arguments, as, in our opinion, the construction to be placed on the most-gage deed is that placed on it by the learned District Judge. It seems to us that the parties to the mortgage deed elearly contemplated the possibility of the premises being demolished and re-built and that because of that a stipulation was entered in the deed itself to the effect that in the event of the mortgagee erecting any new building the cost thereof, together with interest at the stipulated rate, would be payable at the time of redemp-This covenant coupled with the tion. fact that the mortgagors vacated the premises, soon after the mortgage deed was executed, at the instance of the mortgagee, in order that be might demolish the existing building and build a new one on the site without any protest on their behalf, renders it impossible to doubt that the premises were re-built with the assent of the mortgagors. This view is further fortified by the provision in the deed of sale in favour of Kirpa Ram by the mortgagors in which the mortgagers very earefully provided for the payment of any claims by the mortgagee for improvements made by him, and the fixing of a definite sum, namely, Rs. 1,70) for which alone the mortgagors were held liable. We, therefore, agree with the learned District Judge in holding that the improvements were made with the assent of the mortgagors.

In this view of the ease it is unnecessary for us to diseuss Nathu Piraji v. Umed nal Gadumai (1) and Narayana v. Ohengalamma (2), eited by Mr. Nand Lal. We would note that Arunachella Ohetti v. Sithayi Amm ! (3), referred to by Mr. Nand Lal, was dis sented from by the Allahabad High Court in Rahumatullah Bez v. Yusaaf Ali (1), and, in our opinion, the Madras authority goes too far. We would also refer to Shepard v. Jones (5), in which it was held that a mortgagee is entitled to be re paid his expenditure so far as it has increased the value of the property mortgaged and in such case it is immaterial whether the mortgagor had notise of the expenditure, notice to the mortgagor being only material when the expanditure is unreasonable, for the purpose of showing that he acquiesced in it. In the present case it is clear that the mortgagors had notice of what the mortgagee was doing, and that he was purporting to act under his mortgage deed; and as we have held above, the mortgagors clearly acquiesced in the conduct of the mortgagee.

Turning now to the amount to which the mortgagee is entitled, it has been urged that it is necessary for the mortgages to prove the amount of his expenditure and we certainly agree with this contention. The evidence on the record, we are told, consists of two estimates, one prepared on behalf of Kirpa Ram and the other cn behalf of Jowanda Mal. The former estimates the cost at Ro. 1,100 and the latter estimates it at Rs. 3,500. The Courts below note that these estimates are clearly biassed. The Trial Court inspected the premises itself and same to the conclusion that, after allowing a sum of Rs. 200 for the materials of the old building, the cost of re building, the house can very fairly be fixed at Rs. 2,500. The learned Distriet Judge has considered this to be the correct estimate and it appears to us that this is a finding on a question of fast, that we, sitting in second appeal, are unable to interfere. At the same time we would note that this sum appears to us, in the eirsumstances, to be as nearly as may be, the cost incurred by the mortgagee, and we hold accordingly.

The new building is said to have been made some eight years prior to suit and inasmuch as the increased value of the premises would increase its rental value as well we consider that the learned District Judge was wrong in not deducting at least Rs. 570 on that account as had been done by the Trial Court.

Turning now to the cross-objections there is some force in Dr. Narang's contention that the interest should be allowed up to the date of redemption. At the same time it seems to us that while on the one hand the mortgages can claim interest on the principal amount decreed from the date of cuit up to date of redemption, Kirpa Ram would be entitled to be given the benefit of an enhanced rental owing to the improved condition of the mortgaged premises, and after a careful consideration it seems to us that the most equitable method of dealing with the case is the one adopted by the Courts below, namely, the fixing of a lump sum to be paid on redemption.

We accordingly accept this appeal and give the plaintiffs a decree for redemption conditional on his paying a sum of Rs. 5,000 within six months of this date. The cross-objections are dismissed, and parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

Mortgage-decree—Personal decree—Date from which period of limitation runs—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48, O. XX, r. 6—Insolvency of judgment-debtor—Application by decree-holder to have his name entered in list of scheduled creditors—Bur of time, whether available after adjudication—Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 24 (2).

Where a mortgage-decree directs that the available proceeds of the sale to be held thereunder be paid in satisfaction of the decretal debt, but that if the amount due is not satisfied by the sale of the mortgaged properties, the balance be realised from the other property and person of the mortgagor, the period of limitation applicable runs not from the date of the sale of the mortgaged properties, but from the date of the decree as fixed by Order XX, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 758, col 2.]

A debt barred by the Statute of Limitation is not provable in bankruptcy proceeding. But the bar of time ceases to run (or to further run) after adjudication—as the effect of the bankruptcy is to vest the property of the bankrupt in the trustee for the benefit of the creditors, and all personal remedies against the bankrupt are also thereafter stayed. [p. 75%, col. 1.]

In bankruptcy a debt does not become barred by lapse of time if it was not so barred at the commencement of the bankruptcy. [p 760, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order made under sub-section 2 of section 24 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1967. The events antecedent to the order may be briefly stated.

On the 3rd October 1907 the respondent obtained a decree against the appellant in a mortgage suit. The deerce directed that the available proceeds of the sale to be held thereunder be paid in satisfaction deeretal debt, but that if the of the amount due to the plaintiff was not satisfied by the sale of mortgaged properties, the balance be realised from the other property and person of the defendant. The decree has been excented and the hypothecated properties have been sold, but a large sum is still due under the deeree, In the case of a decree of this character, the period of limitation applicable rurs not from the date of the sale of the mortgaged property, but from the date of the decree as fixed by Order XX, rule 6, Civil Procedure Ocde ; Khulna Loan Co., Limited v. Jnanendra Nath Bose (1). The same prineiple must be applied to test the applieability of section 48, Civil Procedure Ccde, which provides that where an application to execute a decree (not being a decree granting an injunction) has been made, no order for the execution of the same te made upon any freeh deeree stall application presented after the expiration of twelve years from the date of the decree sought to be excented. Consequently, in ite present case, the term of 12 years must be taken to run from the 3rd October 1907.

It appears that on the 22rd June 1918 the appellant made an application under section 6 of the Provincial Insolvency Act 1907, to be adjudged an insolvent. The adjudged an insolvent. The adjudged to the section 16 (1) on the 4th April 1919. The

of this adjudication order was that under section 16 (2) the whole of the property of the insolvent became vested in the Court and thereafter no ereditor to whom the insolvent was indebted in respect of any debt proveable under the Ast could, during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings, have any remedy against the property or person of the insolvent in respect of the debt or commence any suit or other legal proceedings, except with the leave of the Court and on such terms as the Court might impose. Under section 16 (4), a similar consequence followed in respect of all such property as might be acquired by or devolve on the insolvent after the date of the order of adjudication and before his discharge. Under section 16 (c), the adjudication order also related back and took effect from the date of the presentation of the petition on which it was made. On the 21st May 1920 the respondent, as judgment-oreditor of the insolvent, applied under section 24 to have his name entered in the list of scheduled ereditors, and the application was granted on the 9th June 1920. The validity of this order is now questioned on the ground that on the 21st May 1920, when the application under section 24 was made. it had become impossible for the mortgagee deeree holder to apply for execution in the face of the provisions of section 43, Civil Prosedure Code. In our opinion, there is no room for doubt that this contention has been rightly overruled by the District Judge,

It is well-settled that a debt barred by the Statute of Limitation is not provable in bankruptey proceedings. This rule was enunciated by Lord Eldonin Dewdney, Exparts (2) and was re-affirmed by him in Roffey, Exparts (3). But it is equally plain that the bar of time ceases to run (or to further run) after adjudication—as the effect of the bankruptey is to vest the property of the bankrupt in the trustee for the benefit of the creditors, and all personal remedies against the bankrupt are also thereafter stayed. This principle is deducible from the provisions of the Pro-

Insolvency Act, 1907, which vinsial make it impossible for a ereditor to take proceedings in execution after the adjudication order has been made and during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings. The rule has been recognised and applied in England in cases of high authority. In Ross, Ex parte; Oeles, In re (4) this principle was enqueiated by Vice. Chancellor Leach; on appeal against his order, Lord Lyndhurst observed that the effect of the commission in bankruptey elearly is to vest the property in the assignee for the benefit of the creditors; thay are, therefore, in fact trustees, and it is an admitted rule that unless debts are already barred by the Statute of Limitations when the trust is ereated, they are not afterwards affected by the lapse of time. The question was again raised in Lancaster Banking Corporation, Ex parte; Westby, In re (5) where Bason, C. J., observed as follows: "The argument founded on the Statute of Limitation as an answer to this elaim is not tenable for a moment. Statute of Limitation has nothing to bankruptey laws. When the with bankruptey ensues, there is an end to the operation of that Statute with reference to debtor and creditor. The debtor's rights are established and the ereditor's rights are established in the bankruptey and the Statute of Limitation has no application at all to such a case or to the principles by which it is governed." This rule has been recognized in later cases amongst others, in Crosley, In re. Munns v. Burn (6), Stock, In re; Amos, Ex parts (7) and Cullwick, In re; Official Receiver, Ex parte (8). It may at first sight appear that in Benton, In re; Bouer v. Ohetwynd (9) View different indicated. MYB that case debts were incurred by bankruptsies bankrupt before his two which occurred in 1890 and 1892. was the donee of a general testamentary power of appointment and died in 1911. having exercised the power by his Will but without having obtained his discharge. The Court held that the Statute of Limitations applied and that the creditors who had proved in the bankruptey were barred and not entitled to be paid out of the appointed fund. Channell, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, stated that cases were quoted beginning with Ross, Ex parte; Coles, In re (4) which showed that in the bankruptoy a debt does not become barred by lapse of time if it was not so barred at the commencement of the bankruptey and of this there can be no boubt, but this is only in the bankruptey. The learned Judge further added as follows: real difficulty in the way of the appellants is the well established rule that if the Statute once begins to run it continues to run whatever happens." No difficulty however arises in the case before us because in the events which have happened the Court is not called make an order for execution of the mortgage decree. Indeed under the provisions of the Provincial Incolvency Act if such application were made it would not have been entertained. Consequently there is no question of the applicability of section 48 and the name of the respondent has been rightly entered in the list of scheduled ereditors because at the time when the adjudication order was made the deer e had not become barred by limitation nor had the right thereunder become extinguished by the application of the rule contained in section 48.

The result is that the order of the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs—one gold mohur.

APPELLANT

M. R. SIVARAMA AIYAR AND ANOTHER
-DEFENDANTS-RESPONDENTS.

Damages, suit for—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXVIII, r. 5—Attachment before judgment, malicious - Reasonable and probable cause—Malice—Inference—Attachment incomplete, effect of—Pleadings—Omission to state how proceedings terminated, effect of.

An action lies for the taking out of a malicious attachment before judgment under Order XXXVIII, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, and the party aggrieved is entitled to compensation for the injury actually sustained even though the attachment was not completed. [p. 761, col 1.]

The absence of reasonable and probable cause for taking legal action in execution or otherwise is itself some evidence from which malice may be inferred. [p. 762, col. 1.]

Where an attachment before judgment is taken out only with the object of securing, for satisfaction of the plaintiff's debt, money in the possession of the defendant, the order must be held to have been obtained not only without reasonable and probable cause but also without any justification and the latter is entitled to substantial damages [p. 763, col. !.]

Where the plaint in an action for damages for illegal attachment fails to set forth how the proceedings terminated, the Court may allow it to be amended by setting forth the necessary particulars. [p. 763 col. 1.]

The termination of proceedings in plaintiff's favour is essential to sustain an action only where a distinct termination in favour of one party or other is possible and not where the proceedings cannot end by their nature in a judicial disposal, as where money is paid to avert the process and settlement reported to Court. [p. 763, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Sabordinate Judge, South Malabar at Calient, in Original Suit No. 9 of 1919.

FAOTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. O. Machavan Nair (with him Mr. Krishna Menon), for the Appellant.—The affidavit in support of the defendants' application for attachment before judgment does not show any probable cause for taking out the process. It does not satisfy the requirements of Order XXXVII!, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code. It is only under one of the conditions mentioned in the rule that the writ can be asked. The defendant was approved at plaintiff's transaction with the

JOSEPH MICHOLIS C. SIVARAMA AIYAB.

Nedugandi Bank in supersession of himself. From absence of reasonable cause malice may be inferred. The only object of the attachment was to secure the money in the plaintiff's possession. The plaintiff suffered injury because the Amin took out his clothes though the attachment was not completed.

As the proceedings terminated by payment of the amount, it does not affect the plaintiff's right of suit.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Respondents,—There is no evidence of malice.

The action is unsustainable because the attachment was not in fact effected. The money was paid and settlement was reported. Rima Aiyer v Govinda Pillii (1).

The plaint does not state, as it ought to have that, the proceedings terminated in plaintiff's favour.

There were facts on which the defendants could reasonably have applied for attachment, e.g., the execution of documents in plaintiff's wife's rame. In any event the claim for Re. 5,000 and odd is excessive. At least, only contemptuous damages could be awarded.

JUDGMENT.- This appeal is against the lower Court's dismissal of the plaintiff's suit for damages in connection with the deferd. ant's application for attachment before judg. ment. The facts are that the attachment before judgment was ordered by the Distriet Munsif of Calient on the 10th February 1919 and that 1st defendant accompanied by an Amin proceeded to the plaintift's shop. The lower Court has dealt at considerable length with what happened there. It is not nessessary to repeat its observations on the evidence. We need only say that there is a preponderance of evidence, including that of an European Sergeant whom we have no reason for distrusting, to the effect that the Amin proceeded so far as to take out the plaintiff's elothes from the shelves of his shop and began to measure them, when the plaintiff who had heard by then of what had happened paid the amount of the elaim. We, therefore, reject the defendante' case on this point, that nothing was done towards making the attachment at all. It is in respect of this action of the defendants and the Amin at their instance that plaintiff claims damages.

No doubt, there was not, in our opinion, a completed attachment by seizure of any of the plaintiff's property: but that is not material. For the claim, as stated in the plaint, is generally in respect of the acts done and not expressly or exclusively in respect of a completed attachment; and there is, in our opinion, no doubt that the plaint. iff may be entitled to compensation, even though the attachment was not completed, if, notwithstanding that, he sustained injury by what was actually done. No authority has been adduced by the defendants to show that a completed attachment is necessary. In Rama Aiyer v. Gosinda Pillai (1) it was held that a mere prosuring of an order for attachment before judgments did not afford a sause of action for damages. Without expressing any opinion as to the correctness of certain parts of that decision, we can distinguish it from the facts now before us on the ground that they include several acts of the defendants and the Amin, by which injury to the plaintiff has, as we shall show. been established.

That being our conclusion as to the actual occurrence proved, in respect of which the plaintiff elaim, we have now to see whether be has established what, according to the authorities, he must establish, that the defendants acted maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause. Certain heads of proof of this were attempted at the trial, for instance, the plaintiff's refusal to sell to the defendants a pony and Jutka. the institution by the defendants of the snit in which this attachment was made in a Court which would not ordinarily exercise jurisdiction over the plaintiff and, lastly, the fact that the plaintiff had borrowed from Nedungadi Bank at 12 per cent. interest instead of continuing to borrow from the defendants as he had done in the past. In this Court the pony transaction has not been relied on. It is not shown that the defend. ants' choice of the Court in which they brought their suit was in any way unreason. able. The plaintiff's resort to the Nedungadi Bank instead of to the defendants for a loan is explained by the admitted fact that the defendants had refused to advance him more than they had already done, In these eireumstances, these items of evidence are useless to establish malice.

This part of the plaintiff's case is, however, far better supported with reference to Exhibit XV filed by the first defendant in order to obtain the conditional attachment, with which we are concerned, since the allegations in it are, in our opinion, not merely unfounded, but such as he could not have possibly supposed himself entitled to make. The absence of reasonable and probable cause for taking legal action in execution or otherwise is, as was decided by the Court of Appeal in Brown v. Hawkes (2), some svidence, from which malice may be inferred; and we may say at once, that in this case with reference to the surrounding eircumstances, we shall be prepared to infer it therefrom. The defend. ants proseeding 919W under Order XXXVIII, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code, and under that provision they had to satisfy the Court that the defendant, with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of the decree that might be passed against him, was about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property. That being the only matter which they could legally present to the consideration of the Court to obtain the order which they desired, it is useless for Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar on their behalf to represent to us that there were other facts available to them, on which their application might have been founded and as to the truth of which there can be no doubt. We must confine ourselves to what they, in fact, had to submit to the Court. We find in paragraph 2 of Exhibit XV that the first defendant said, "that the defendant becoming aware of the fact that the aforesaid plaint was being prepared, with the intention of defrauding the ereditors executed (to amend the Court translation in assordance with the agreement of the practitioners before ue) doeuments in respect of the properties belonging to him in the name of his wife and others and borrowed large amount from the Nedungadi Bank on mertgage of his properties. If the defendant receives money and appropriates the same and alienates the properties as aforesaid, there will be no remedy whatever to realise the amount in respect of the decree that may be passed against him." The substantial allegations here on which the Court was asked to ast was that the plaintiff on becoming aware of the fact that the plaint was being prepared executed documents in respect of the properties belonging to him in the name of his wife. The only matter relied on by Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar as in any degree supporting this statement, as it stands, is that the plaintiff had in 1916 purchased some property in his wife's name and that he had subsequently paid for improve. ments to it. The only admissible evidence of payment for improvements to the property is given by plaintiff himself, other evidence being admittedly hearsay. The sixth defendant's witness, no doubt, speaks to the purchase of property by the plaintiff in his wife's name, and it may be true that he did so or that even though he purchased the property in his wife's name, it was intended to be at his own disposal. That, however, is absolutely immaterial, because the charge, in consequence of which the Court was asked to pass the order of attachment, was that he had done this in consequence of his know. ledge that the plaint in the suit was being prepared. The plaint in the suit was, according to Exhibit II, and that is the earliest evidence we have on the point, being prepared on 8th June 1918, that is, long after the only purchase in the plaintiff's wife's name, of which we have any information. In these circumstances, there is nothing to justify the allegation in Exhibit XV and it was, as the plaintiff must have known, clearly untrue. There is also a statement in Exhibit XV that plaintiff, in consequence of his know. ledge of the preparation of the plaint, execut. ed documents in respect of which properties in the names of others also, although there is no evidence whatever and no sort of attempt has been made to justify this. In these circumstances, our finding must be that the affidavit on which the defendants obtained the order of attachment was not merely given in a material particular without reasonable or probable sause but was also known to him to be without any justification at all.

As throwing light on defendants' conduct, there are, further, their relations with the plaintiff. The defendants appear to have lent money to the plaintiff for some time and to have been quite unsuccessful in obtaining re-payment thereof. It is unnecessary to go through the details which appear in the oral evidence and from correspondence. It is clear that the plaintiff was living from hand to mouth and not paying debte, until he had no alternative but to do so and that the defendants had shown very considerable forbearance. The crisis was evidently reached just before the suit was brought, because the plaintiff succeeded in borrowing from the Nedungadi Bank already referred to at 12 per cent, the sum of Rs. 15,000, and he even promised to use a portion of this in re-paying the defendants. The situation then was that the defendants having no alternative, brought their suit and that they knew that there was in the plaintiff's hands a means by which they could get eatisfaction of their debt, if they only could secure it. It is a fair presumption, which there is nothing to rebut, that the defendants astually did what they did in order to secure for the satisfaction of their own debt the money of which the plaintiff had become possessed. Taking that as their motive, and baying regard also to the unjustifiable character of the allegations in the affidavit, we have no hesitation in finding, differing on this point from the lower Court, that they acted not merely without reasonable and probable cause of setting the law in motion, but also maliciously.

Before dealing with the question of damages, we consider an argument advanced by Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, that the plaintiff had no cause of action, because he did not allege in his plaint that the proceed. ing, by which he was aggrieved, had ended in his favour and because it never in fact did so end. The facts are that the proceeding or the application for and the lower Court's conditional order of attachment under Order XXXVIII, rule 5, same to an end, as the plaintiff paid the amount of the defendant's elaim and the warrant was returned to the Court with the endorsement by the first defendant that "the matter of the plaint having now been settled, there is no necessity for attachment." It does not appear from the record what happened to the suit; but, as the amount of the defendants had been paid, it either has been or should have been dismissed. As regards the failure to mention the result of the proceedings in the plaint, it need only be said that no objection was taken with reference to it at the trial and that, if such an objection were pressed before us in appeal, we should meet it by allowing an amendment. As regards the more substantial objection that the proceedings are not shown to have terminated in plaintiff's favour and that they sould not be regarded as having so terminat. ed, so long as the order for conditional attachment was not discharged at his instance or otherwise, we observe, first, that it would be quite useless for him to obtain such a discharge, when his creditor himself had informed the Court, as he did by the endorsement on Exhibit XVI and elsewhere, that the attachment need not be proceede l with, because the matter had been settled. On the broad question whether the termination of the proceedings in the plaintiff's favour is essential, there is, no doubt, abundant authority that it is so; but aush authority is applicable only to cases in which a distinct termination in favour of one party or other is possible, and not to a case such as that before us, in which the ings cannot end by their nature in any judicial disposal and in fact have been terminated by an act of the first defendant himself. In support of this distinction we were referred to Gilding v. Eyre (3) and Steward v. Gromett (4). In the former of these cases the facts were very similar to the present and the Court dealt particularly with one feature of the ease, the abandonment of the proceedings by the creditor in consequence of the payment which the debtor, plaintiff, made in order to obtain his release from arrest, holding that nothing arose in favour of the defendant from it. In these circumstances the argument founded on the absence of the termination of the proceedings in the plaintiff's favour must fail.

We have now to settle what damages we shall award. Reference has already been made to the state of the plaintiff's credit and we need not deal with it in greater detail. It is clear that he found it most difficult to obtain funds at any reasonable rate of interest, that there had been other claims against him in the Courts, that he had lost his credit with the defendants at least and that it was possible for him to borrow elsewhere only at 12 per cent. There is practically no evidence of value as to any detriment to his eredit or position generally owing to the defendants' action. He himself says that customers did not resort to his shop, but it is not possible to connect the falling off in his retail eloth trade with the state of his eredit. He says again and has adduced some evidence that the subscribers to a Chit Fund which he was conducting began to default after this occurrence. The Chit Fand has five hundred subscribers, and it is not, in our experience, unusual for a proportion of the subscribers to such Chit Funds to default. It is not shown by any evidence which we can accept that the default of some fifty subscribers in the present ease is due to what happened on the 10th February 1919. If it had been so, it should have been eavy for the plaintiff to adduce much better evidence by calling some of the defaulting subscribers or producing accounts of the Chit Fund and he has not done either. Lastly, there is the evidence of an apparently respectable gentleman, plaintiff's fifth witness, that the plaintiff's credit had suffered. He, however, gave no details and his general assurances do not seem to us of any affirmative value. In these eirenmetances, we are unable to accept the plaintiff's eleim for the large sum of Rs. 5,250 as damages. At the same time, we are not prepared to grant only contemptuous damages. The facts are, that the plaintiff was put to annoyance and no doubt to some extent to dishonour by this public employment of coercive processes without legitimate necessity and without justification. We think that, in the circumstances. Rs. 50 will be a sufficient compensation for such mental pain and loss of reputation as he may have sustained. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the lower Court's decree and grant the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 50 with costs thereon throughout. The plaintiff will pay the defendants their costs throughout, not on the whole amount in respect of which the suit was filed, but, in the circumstances of the ease, on Rs. 1,500.

Possession under title, continuity of-Presumption -Ejectment, suit for-Plaintiff, duty of-Adverse possession.

In a suit for ejectment, it is for the plaintiff to prove possession prior to the dispossession which he alleges. If it is proved that he has title, and he obtained possession under that title, the general presumption of law is that possession goes with title, and unless the defendant shows that he has been in possession adversely to the plaintiff for more than twelve years, the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree. [p. 765, col. 1]

Second appeal from a decision of the Assistant Judge, Sholapur, in Appeal No. 145 of 1917, reversing a decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Sholapur, in Civil Suit No. 556 of 1916.

Mr. Gothal: (with him Mr. V. V. Bhadkam. kar), for the Appellant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT,-The plaintiff filed this enit to recover possession of the two open sites described in the plaint. He alleged dispossession by the defendant unlawfully about three years prior to the suit. The defendant alleged that the plaintiff was not the owner of the plaint property; that he had never been in possession or enjoyment of it; that the defendant had been in posses. sion for many years as owner; that the suit was time barred; and that the cause of action did not accrue in 1913. The main issues were : (1) Does the plaintiff prove that the plots in suit were purchased by him at the austion sale in 1893; and (2) Is it proved that the plaintiff was in possession within twelve years before the suit? The first issue was found by the Trial Court in the affirmative, the second, in the negative. The result was that the suit was dismissed.

In appeal the learned Judge was of opinion that the evidence of the witnesses on both sides was unworthy of credit. But the plaintiff having established his title over the plaint property, he could rely upon the presumption that possession goes with the title. There being no satisfastory evidence in rebuttal, the presumption must be givan effect to.

This raises a question which has often been diseassed in these Courts, and eventually it may have to come up for decision before a Fall Bench. No doubt if the suit comes under Article 142 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, time begins to run from the date of the dispossession. but if the plaintiff alleges be is dispossessed within twelve years of the suit, then the question must arise, according to the cirsamstances of each case, how far the plaint. iff has correctly fixed the date of disposes. sion, and how far the onus lies on the defendant to show that that date was wrong. I may refer to Secretary of State for India v. Ohelikani Ram Rao (1) and Kuthali Moothavar v. Feringati Kunharankutty (2) where their Lordships said on the question of the onus probandi in cases where title has been proved :

Standing a title in 'A' the alleged adverse possession of B' must have all the qualities of adequacy, continuity and exclusiveness which should qualify such adverse possession. But the onus of establishing these things is upon the adverse pos-

We take it that the general principle is, as laid down by the Privy Council in Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Mahara; a Jagadindra Nath Roy Bahadur (3), that it is for the plaintiff in a suit for ejectment to prove possession prior to the dispossession which he alleges. At the same time, on this question of evidence the initial fact of the plaintiff's title comes to his aid, with greater or less force according to the circumstances established in evidence. If it is proved that the plaintiff has title and obtained possession under that title, then the general presumption of law is that possession goes with the title.

In Ganapati v. Raghunath (4) the plaintiff sued to have it declared that the land described in the plaint belonged to him and to recover damages from the defendant for wrongfully taking possession of it, and for possession. The learned Chief Justice at page 717* after referring to the evidence with regard to possession, which had been found to be uneatisfactory, said:

"Upon that finding as to the present state of facts and having regard to the statement of the defendant's father to which we have already referred, we have to consider whom the possession of the vacant land must be presumed to have been with, in the absence of direct evidence. Now it is held in the ease that the title to this land was in the plaintiff, and it is held that the defendant has made no permanent use of it inconsistent with its being the plaintiff's land. That being so a case is made out for the application of the presumption stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rungeet Ram Panday v. Goburdhan Ram Fanday (5) that pressession goes with title. No ecutrary presumption adverse to the plaintiff ear, we thick, arise from the wrongful acts of the defendant's father in 1880, which were promptly repudiated was charged in the by him when he Magistrate's Court." Now a reference to the map in this case would show that the plaint sites [lie adjacent to and appartenant to the shop which was purchased by the plaintiff together with the sites and it certainly would not be necessary for him to preserve evidence that ever since the date of his purchase he was in active possession of those open eites. Possession of those sites would naturally go with the posses. sion of the shop, and when the defendant asserted his right over the open sites he would have to show in the absence of any evidence that these sites seased to appurtenant to the shop, and that he had been in possession adversely against the owner of the shop. Therefore is one of those cases in which the of the plaintiff's title comes to his aid with greater force as far as the evidence goes with regard to the possession of the open sites, and eliminating all the oral evidence on both sides as being unsitisfactory, (and naturally, considering the position of these open sites, and the difficulty of proving active user, it would be unsatisfactory), we think the learned Assistant Judge was perfectly right in holding that possession went with the title. Therefore, unless the defendant could show that be had been in possession adversely to the plaintiff for more then twelve years, the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree. Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 178, (1) (e)

—Tenancy created by compromise decree—Ejectment, provision for, legality of—Ralief against forfeiture, jurisdiction of Court to grant.

Where a valid tenancy is created, and it continues in operation, the tenant can only be ejected therefrom in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, notwithstanding that the tenancy was created under a consent decree which provided for the ejectment of the tenant upon a breach of any of its terms, as under section '78 (1) (e) of that Act, nothing contained in any contract between a landlord and a tenant entitles a landlord to eject a tenant otherwise than under the provisions of that Act. [p. 767, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of the Additional Judge, Noakhali, dated the 3rd January 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, Lakhmipore, dated the 22nd June 1920.

Babu Subodh Chandra Roy Chowdhury, for the Appellant.

Babu Rames Chandra Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT,-This is an appeal by a judgment debtor against an order for eject. ment passed in execution of a decree. The decree was made by consent of parties on the 30th September 1919. A petition of compromise was filed on that date and a decree was drawn up on the basis thereof, Most, but not all, of the terms of the petition were incorporated in the decree. Under what eircumstances some of the terms were omitted, does not appear from the record. Under the decree, the plaintiff, now the respondent, settled with the defendant, now the appellant, an os. t raivati interest in 2 annas 5 gandas share of the lands then in dispute, at an annual rent of Rs. 40, and for a period of 9 years from 1326 to 1334 The defendant undertook to execute a registered osat raiyati kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiff within two months from the date of the decree and also to pay rent in accordance with law. The decree further provided that the defendant would pay to the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 150 as rent for the years 1322 to 1325 as also Rs. 5 as cesses making an aggregate of Rs. 165, and that such payment would be made within two months from the date of the decree. In a subsequent slause, it was stated that the defendant would not be able to eat down trees on the lands in suit, and would neither be able to alter their shape in any way nor dig any earth from them or do any act prejudicial to the plaintiff nor be able to transfer them or get any embatitution of GOPAL ERISHNA NATH C. BARI NATH KAPURTH.

names. Then followed the provision that, if the defendants violated any condition of the compromise, they would be ejected from the lands in suit. The decree holder made the present application for ejectment of the defendant on the allegation that the kabuliyat had not been delivered within the period stated nor had the arrears of rent been paid within two months from the date of the deeree. The defendant alleged that the sum had been deposited in Court within the prescribed period and also that the kabuliyat had been transmitted to the decree holder by post. The Courts below have consurrently held that the judgment debter had not complied with the terms of the deeree, and, in this view, have directed that the defendants be forthwith ejected from the land in execution. We are of opinion that this order eannot be maintained.

It is plain that a tenancy was created by virtue of the desree for a period of nine years from 1326 to 1334 B. S. to be held at an annual rent of Rs. 40. The defendants were consequently liable to be ejected only in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As prescribed by subsection (1), clause (e) of section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, nothing in any contract between a landlord and a tenant made before or after the passing of the Act, shall entitle a landlord to eject a tenant otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the Act. No doubt, the terms of the contract between the parties have been incorporated in the decree made by the Court. But, as was pointed out by the Court of Appeal in the ease of Buddersfield Banking Co. v. Lister (1), the real truth of the matter is that a concent order is a mere creature of the agreement, and if greater sanctity were attributed to it than to the original agreement itself, it would be to give the branch an existence which is independent of the tree. To use the language of Kay, L. J., "A consent order is only an order of the Court earrying out an agreement between the parties." The same idea was expressed in different terms by Mr, Justice Parke in Wentworth v. Bullen (2), when he said that contract, and subject to the incidents of a contract because there is superadded the command of the Judge. Consequently, the legality of the provision for ejectment must be tested in the light of the rules formulated in the Bengal Tenancy Act, even though the provision originally appearing in the petition of compromise has been incorporated in the decree. The Court, will not, in such circumstances, assist the decree holder to achieve his illegal purpose in defiance of express statutory prohibition.

Apart from these considerations, it is plain that this is pre-eminently a case in which, assuming that a forfeiture has been insurred, the Court should afford relief against the forfeiture. That it is competent to the Court to grant such relief in execution is elear from the judgment of this Court in the case of Kandarpa Nag v. Banwari Lal Nag (3), where the cases on the subject including the earlier decision in the case of Surendra Nath Banerjee v. Secretary of State for India (4) will be found reviewed. The eircumstance that a consent decree has been passed on the basis of a compromise does not onet the jurisdiction of the Court to grant relief against forfeiture, and the Court must determine whether, on equitable grounds, relief could have been granted against forfeiture, if it had been called upon to enforce the agreement itself. In the present ease, it cannot be maintained that the time mentioned, namely, a period of two months, was of the essence of the contract. Besides, it cannot be disputed that the tenant has substantially peformed what he was required to earry out under the terms of the com. promise. He has deposited the money in Court and the sum may be withdrawn by the decree holder at his choice. The tenant has also transmitted by post the kabuliyat to the landlord. Our attention, however, has been drawn to the fact that the kabuliyat does not incorporate one of the terms originally intended to be inserted therein, namely, the elause which would entitle the tenant to ask for renewal of the lease after the expiry of the prescribed term of 9 years. It has been explained on behalf of the appellant that this term was not incorporated because it might erests a difficulty in the registration of the agreement as an under raily ti lease. It is anyhow plain that the omission to insert this term, which would have operated to the benefit of the tenant alone, has not prejudiced the landlord.

In these circumstances, we are of opinion, that a valid tenancy for 9 years was created by the decree, that such tenancy is still in operation, and that the tenant cannot be ejected in execution of the decree.

The result is, that this appeal is allowed, the order of the District Judge is set aside and the application for execution is dismissed with costs, in all the Courts.

We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at one gold mohur.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, rr. 1, 2—Tenant obtaining decree against sub-tenant for possession—Suit by landlord against tenant for possession and injunction not to execute decree—Temporary injunction, legality of—Proper remedy.

Plaintiff let a house to defendant on lease which expired on 30th June 1920; defendant sub-let the premises, and as he could not get possession from his sub-tenant he brought a suit and obtained a decree. Plaintiff then filed a suit against defendant claiming possession and that the decree obtained against the sub-tenant was not binding on him, and for an injunction against defendant not to take possession. After the suit was filed he applied for, and was granted a temporary injunction restraining defendant from executing his decree against the sub-tenant:

Held, that plaintiff's suit not being of the nature prescribed in either rule 1 or rule 2 of Order XXXIX of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court had no jurisdiction to restrain defendant from obtaining the benefit of his decree, which had nothing to do with plaintiff's claim, and that plaintiff's proper remedy was to ask for the appointment of a Receiver pending settlement of the dispute between himself and the defendant.

Application against an order passed by the District Judge, Satara, in Missellaneous Appeal No. 7 of 1921, confirming an order passed by the Sabordinate Judge at Wai, in Civil Sait No. 302 of 1921.

JUDGMENT.-The present plaintiff were owners of a bungalow at Panebgani which had been let to the defendant on a lease, which the plaintiffs say expired on the 30th Jane 1920. Meanwhile the defendant had sub-let the premises, or part of them, and as he •onld possession from his sub-tenants, a suit had to be filed in which there was a decree in the defendant's favour. The plaintiffs, as owners of the property, filed a suitagainst the defendant elaiming that they were entitled to possession, and that the decree which the defendant had obtained against his sub-tenants was not binding upon them, and for an injunction against possession. the defendant not to take After the suit was filed, an application was made by the plaintiffs for a temporary injunction restraining the defendant from executing his decree against the sub-tenants, The Trial Court granted the injunction, and an appeal against that order was dismissed by the District Judge.

In revision it is urged for the defendant that the Court had no jurisdiction to grant the temporary injunction asked for Order XXXIX, rules i and 2, prescribe in what cases the Court can grant a temporary injunction, and it is quite clear that the plaintiff, suit is not a suit of the nature prescribed in either rule 1 or rule 2. The primary object of the plaintiffs suit is to get prescribed in the property which they claimed as belonging to them, on the ground that the term of the defendant's lease had expired, and assordingly possession should be given to the different owner. That is an entirely question from that which had already been desided between the defendant and the sub-tenants. The Court has no jurisdiction to restrain the defendant from seeking to get the benefit of the decree he has obtained, which has nothing whatever to do with the plaintiffs' claim. What the plaintiffs ought to have asked for was the appointment of a Receiver, so that the Court might take charge of the property through its Receiver pending the settlement of the dispute between the plaintiffs and the defendant. The Rule will be made absolute, and the order staying execution and restraining the applicant from executing his dearce set aside with costs throughout.

ORDER .- The question for decision in this case is whether the Court has power to order the appellant who is the plaintiff in this suit to pay a deficit Court fee upon his memorandum of cross objection in the lower Appellate Court before it will entertain his appeal here. The circumstances are a little pesuliar and the question arises in this way. The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants for a deslaration of his title and recovery of possession in respect of 10 gandas share in certain property. The fee he paid upon his plaint was based upon a valuation of ten times the Government Revenue and the fee actually paid arrived at in that manner Re. 3-12. In the Trial Court the plaintiff specceded as to half his claim, that is to say, he get a decree in respect to 5 gandas only and not 10 gandas. From that decree the defendants appealed contesting the plaintiff's right to recover even 5 gandas. The plaintiff entered a eross objection elaim. ing that he was entitled not only to the 5 gandos under the decree of the Trial Court but that he was entitled to the other 5 gandas also. In respect of his ercss-objection he paid a Court-fee of Rs. 1-14 upon the same basis of calculation as in the Trial Court. The defendants' appeal in the lower Appellate Court succeed. ed and the plaintiff's ercss-objection failed. The result, therefore, was that the plaintiff recovered nothing. From that decision he entered a second appeal in this Court, That appeal, however, was concerned only with what I may call the first 5 gandas or that part of the elaim which was decreed in the Trial Court. As far as the 5 gandas refused by the Trial Court were concerned, the plaintiff did not pursue his appeal in this Court.

Now, when the case came before this Court, the Taxing Officer came to the conclusion that the fee payable by the plaintiff appellant was not a fee based upon ten times the Government Revenue but an advaloren fee. Therefore, he was ordered to pay a deficit upon his memorandum of appeal. It was also found that his plaint in the Trial Court was deficient in the matter of fee and those two fees he has now paid. It was also found by the Taxing Officer that his memorandum of cross objection in the lower Appellate Court was deficient to the amount of Rs. 88 2, that is to say, there was a deficiency in respect of property which is no longer the subject of appeal to this Court, and the question for us to determine is, whether before we allow his appeal .o proceed we should insist upon his paying the fee which he ought to have paid in his crossobjection in the lower Appellate Court. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that this Court has not jurisdiction in the matter because the subject-matter of his eross-objection in the lower Appellate Court is not now before the Court, and he relies upon the case of Kerala Varma v. Chadayan Rutti (1). The facts of that case, however, are entirely different from those of the present. What happened in that case was that the plaintiff obtained a desree arrears of rent and possession of certain parcels of land. There were four defendants and be recovered against them all. One of the defendants appealed and during the appeal it was discovered that the plaintiffrespondent had not paid the proper Courtfee on the plaint. His decree was not objected to except by one of the defend. ants who only objected to it in so far as it related to his interest, namely, onefourth of the whole. The District Judge, before whom the appeal came, considered that he was entitled to give the defendant a decree, because the respondent, the plaintiff. not paid the fall had Court-fee the Court below. He made an order that the defendant's appeal should be allowed merely upon that ground. When the matter came before the High Court, it was pointed out that the Court had no jurisdiction over the whole subject matter of the suit as the appeal by the fourth defendant related to one item only, and it seems obvious that as the plaintiff had a vested interest in that part of the decree which had not been appealed from, the Court elearly had no jurisdiction to interfere with that interest merely because one of the defendants appealed against another portion deeree.

Now, the matter so far as this Court is concerned appears to me to depend upon whether or not where there has admittedly been a deficit in the Court-fee in the lower

Appellate Court and the person by whom that deficit was payable appeals to this Coart, this Coart has power to refuse to entertain his appeal until the deficit in the lower Appellate Court has been paid. The question is not one which arises under any particular provision of the Court Fees Act bat it is a matter which, as has been held in this Court, is within the inherent jurisdiction of the Court. In the case of Narain Prasad v. Kameshwar Persad Singh (2) it was laid down by the late Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad that the plain duty of the Court was to require the appellant to pay a deficiency in the Courtfee in the Court below before they could entertain any appeal arising out of the same suit by that appellant. Now, although it is true that in the present ease the appellant is not appealing from that part of the desree of the lower Appellate Court which disallowed his cross-objection, nevarthiese he was in default, and it is a default arising out of the same suit, and be is now asking this Court to hear his appeal although he in the lower Court did not comply with the provisions of law requiring him to pay a certain Court-fee. There can be no doubt as to his liability in the lower Court and I think that the Court has discretion in the matter to insist upon his paying the proper Court fees throughout the litigation as a condition precedent to allowing him to come before this Court in appeal and ask it to set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court.

The result is that the appeal will be stayed until the appellant has complied with his obligation to pay the deficit Court fee in the lower Appellate Court which amounts to Re. 88.2. The appellant will be allowed ten days' time within which to pay the Court-fee.

Mortgage-Post diem interest, no stipulation as to-

In the absence of any stipulation, express or implied, in an instrument of mortgage as to the continuance of interest after the due date, the mortgagee is not entitled to interest after the due date but he is entitled to damages to be calculated ordinarily at the covenant rate of interest and for the entire period during which the principal sum has remained unpaid, unless the mortgagee is himself the plaintiff in which case the period is the same as that prescribed by the Statute of Limitation for a suit for the recovery of damages on the footing of the mortgage in his favour. ORDER.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—(January 21, 1922.)—
The propositions of law, which have been formulated by the Division Banch for determination by the Full Beneb, are in the following terms:—

(1) If in an instrument of mortgage there is no stipulation as to the entirument of interest after the due date and the intention of the parties cannot be deduced from the instrument itself, is the creditor ordinarily entitled to interest at the rate specified in the deed for the entire period during which the mortgage-money remains unpaid?

(2) If he is not so entitled but entitled only to receive post diem damages, should those damages be awarded for the same period and ordinarily at the rate as that specified in the instrument of mortgage.

On the first question we have referred to a large number of decided eases. most of which do not enunciate any principle of law, but determine only the question whether the terms of the particular contract entered into by the parties lead to an inference that they intended that the mortgages should recover interest after the due date. Whether interest rost diem should or should not be allowed is a question which depends upon the interpretation of the instrument of mortgage. If there is an express evenant on the subject one way or the other, then the Court has only to give effect to that ecvenant. The difficulty. however, arises when the deed contains no express stipulation, and the question then is whether an implied signistion to pay interest after the due date can be deduced from the terms of the instrument. : It is elear that for a solution of a problem of this character, which depends upon the partisular terms of each contract, no general rule can be laid down, and it is, therefore, unnesessary to travel through the mass of anthorities which have been cited by the learned Advectates on both sides. On behalf of the mortgagor, we are asked to endorse the rule which appears to have been enunciated in Bulanda v. Futsh Din (1) that if the transaction entered into by the parties is a mortgage by way of conditional sale, then, in the absence of an express stipulation, it must be presumed that interest was not intended to be paid after the due date. There is, however, no valid reason for laying down such a broad proposition, Indeed, there are several eases decided by the Privy Council and the High Courts dealing with marigages by way of conditional sale in which interest after the due date has been allowed simply on the strength of an implied argument to that effect, tide, inter alia, Binderi Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (2) and Sardar Umrao Singh v. Sardar Thahur Singh (3).

On the other hand, it is urged on behalf of the mortgages that where the mortgages deed contains a covenant for the payment of the principal debt with interest at a certain rate on a certain day and is silent as to the rost diem interest, then in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, a further contract for the continuance of the same rate of interest until actual payment must be implied. There are dicta to that effect in some judgments, but the correct rule, in my opinion, is that the law raises no presumption either in favour of, or against, an intention to pay interest after the due date.

The determination of the question reits entirely upon the interpretation of the intrument, and in this connection no definite rule of construction can be laid down except that the deed must be viewed as a whole and that the Court should, if possible, avoid an interpretation which would, to use the language of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mathura Das v. Baja Narindar Bahadur (4), asoribe to the parties "an intention that, however payment may be delayed beyond the fixed day, the debt shall earry no interest, that the creditor shall have no remedy provided by contract, but shall be driven to treat the contract as broken, and to seek for damages, which lie in the diseretion of a Jury or a Court, and are subject to a different law of prescription." observed by their Lordships, it is more reasonable to "aseribe to the parties the intention of making a perfect contract, especially when such a contract is of a very common, kind and snitable to the ordinary expectations of persons entering into a mort. gage transaction."

If the Court, after taking into consideration all the terms of the instrument in the light of the observation quoted above, reaches the conclusion that there is neither an express nor an implied covenant for payment of interest after the fixed date, then the mortgages cannot recover interest as such after that date.

The mortgages is, however, entitled to damages on assount of the failure of the debtor to pay the debt at the stipulated time. The latter by withholding the money has deprived his ereditor of the interest which he could have earned, and should compensate him for the loss thus caused to The measure of damages would prima facie be the same as the rate of interest stipulated for by the parties, vile Oha mal Das v. Brij Blukin Lal (5). There ie, however, no rule of law making that rate necessarily the measure of damages and the Court has dissration to relass the rate if it is found to be unusual. The discretion is, however, not an arbitrary one, it is a judicial discretion and must proceed upon sound principles, whether or not the stipulated rate is unusual must depend upon various circumstances, c. o., the risk undertaken by the ereditor, the nature of the sesurity offered by the debtor, the stringency or otherwise of the money-market in the locality eto.

The period, for which interest by way of damages for the breash of the contract can be recovered is a matter upon which there is some difference of judicial opinion. It is stated in some cases that this period cannot exceed six years. Now, I am unable to understand the rationale of the rule limiting the right of the mortgages to damages for a period of six years only, even if he happens to be the defendant in the case. The rule of law is beyond doubt that where the mortgagor commits a breach of the contract he is liable to pay damages to the mortgagee, and there is no reason why he should not pay damages for the entire period during which he had withheld the money and prevented the mortgagee from earning interest. So far as the substantive law is concerned, there is no provision confining which could be invoked for his liability to any period less than the period of his default. It seems to me that the rule allowing damages only for six years owes its origin to the law of limitation, but it is an elementary principle of law that limitation only bars the remedy but

Now Article 116 of the Second Schedule to the Limitation Ast preseribes a period of six years for a suit to recover damages for the breach of a contract embodied in a registered instrument, and it is, therefore, elear that if the mortgages invokes the assistance of the Court in his capacity as plaintiff, he can recover damages only for the period prescribed by that Article, the rest of his claim being barred by time. If, on the other hand, he happens to be a defendant as in a suit for redemption, there is no valid reason why the Court should award him damages only for six years and should deprive him of his right to recover damages for the remaining period during which the principal sum has been with-As pointed out above, the bar of beld. time applies only to the remedy of the plaintiff, it has no effect whatsoever on the plea of the defendant. In the judgments such as Jawahir Mal v. Raja Shah (6), which curtail the right of the mortgages. defendant in the manner indicated above, I have sought in vain for any reason which would justify this interference with the right which he undoubtedly possesses under the law of contract. It seems to me that there is nothing peculiar about the period of six years and that the sole ground for adopting this period is farnished by the fact that under the Law of Limitation as it stands a mortgages suing for damages on the footing of a registered instrument ean resover damages sustained by him during the preceding eix years only, and that the rest of his elaim would be barred by time. Indeed it is difficult to see why he should get damages even for the entire period of six years, if the mortgage in his favour was by means of an unregistered instrument which could be the case if the principal sum was less than R. 100. 11 appears that the rule of six years was the outcome of the Law of Limitation operating upon the slaim of the mortgagee-plaintiff and that it has been applied also to the mortgages-defendant, though the reason upon which the rule was founded has no application to the latter.

It is to be observed that the English Law, as exponeded in the recent authorities, recognises no such limitation upon the right of a mortgages defendant. As laid down in Dingle v. Copper. (7), though the mortgages taking proceedings to enforce his security is entitled only to six years' arrears of interest, he may in a redemption action resover all arrears of interest, though they may exceed six years. This principle is reaffirmed in Lloyd, In re. Lloyd v. Lloyd (8).

My reply to the first question, therefore, is that in the absence of a stipulation, express or implied, the mortgages is not entitled to interest after the due date.

To the second question I would return the following answer. The mortgages is entitled to damages to be calculated ordinarily at the entire period during which the principal sum has remained unpaid, unless the mortgages is himself the plaintiff in which ease the period would be the same as that prescribed by the Statute of Limitation for a suit for the recovery of damages on the footing of the mortgage in his favour.

CHEVIS, J.—(January 22, 1922).—I concar. The Law of Limitation limits the time within which a person may seek relief from the Court and thus cartails the rights of a plaintiff. This law has, I consider, often been wrongly applied to cartail the defense of a defendant.

HARIDAS GHOSH-DEFENDANT-RESPONDENT.

Will-Standard of proof-Suspicion-Consideration and analysis of positive evidence on record-Proof of handwriting—Comparison of signatures, value of.

In the case of a Will, reasonable, natural and proper in its terms, it is not in accordance with sound rules of construction to apply to it those canons which demand a rigorous scrutiny of documents of which the opposite can be said, namely, that they are unnatural, unreasonable or tinged with impropriety.

Wherever a Wili is prepared under circumstances which raise a well-grounded suspicion that it does not express the mind of the testator, the Court ought not to pronounce in favour of it unless the suspicion is removed. JUDGMENT.

MOCKERJER, J .- The subject matter of the litigation which has resulted in this appeal is the estate left by one Rajanimani alias Rajanibala Dasi, a Hindu lady, who died on the 21st March 1917. She left a son Nitai, a grandson Anil, by a predeceased son, and three married daughters. The relationship of the several members of the family is indicated on the following genealogical table: - testamentary disposition of her properties. Oa the 25th August 1917 an application for Probate was lodged in the Court of the District Delegate by the present appellant, Sarojini, the widowed daughter in law of the deceased, but it was returned as object. tion was filed. An application for Latters of Administration with a copy of the Will annex. ed was consequently presented to the District Judge on the 12th Ostober 1917. Objection was thereupon lodged on the 22nd January 1918 by the respondent, Haridas Ghose, on the allegation that he had, on the 28th May 1917, acquired title to the estate left by Rajanimani, by purchase from her son, Nitai Chandra Ghose, who had succeeded thereto as the heir-at-law. Thus emerged the question in controversy between the parties, namely, whether the Will alleged to have been executed by Rajanimani on the 18th March 1917 is or is not genuine. The District Judge has come to the conclusion that the Will propounded was not duly execut. ed. On the present appeal the correctness of this view has been impeached on behalf of the propounder.

The preamble to the Will recites that the testatrix had been in failing health for some time and had some to the residence of his second son-in law, Krichna Chandra Ghose, at Baranagore, in the northern suburbs of Calcutta. The first clause enumerates the relations of the testatrix as set out in the genealogical table. The second clause states that her surviving son, Nitai Chandra Ghose, had taken to evil ways and that she had consequently desided not to leave him any portion of her estate; but that if he left any son or sons of good character, the said grandson or grandsons would, after attainment of majority, be competent to possess and enjoy the property according to the terms of the Will. The third elause gives a description of her properties, namely, two houses in Calentto, one purchased with her own money, the other obtained by virtue of a deed of gift from her mother in law. The fourth clause provides for maintenance allowance to au aunt-in law dependent upon her. The fifth elause gives a monthly allowance to her son Nitai, her grandson Anil and to her three married daughters. The sixth clause provides for the performance of her Sradh from the sale proseeds of her ornaments, the surplus to be taken by her son Nitai. The seventh clause gives one half of her property to her grandson Anil and the other half to the son or sons that might be born of the loins of her son Nitai. The eighth paragraph makes the various sums payable as maintenance a charge on the estate. The ninth contains miscellaneous directions, elause There can be little doubt that the primary object of the testatrix was to keep her property out of the hands of her son who had taken to drink and women at an early age, and had in 1912 perome involved in a shoot. ing case.

There are six attesting witnesses to the Will including the scribe. All of them have been examined. The evidence of Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, a Vakil of this Court, who is related to the family and was consulted by the lady as to a possible testa. mentery disposition, has also been recorded. The District Judge has stated that he believ. ed in full the evidence of Babu Jyotish Chandra Harza. That evidence shows that the lady sent for him and requested him to draft a Will, so that Nitai might not be able to destroy the estate. She said that she had two houses in Calcutta and that she wished to leave one-half to the son of his predeceased son and the other half to the son of Nitai, if one should be born. She also desired to provide small monthly annuities for her aunt and her married daughters. Jyotish Babu thereupon told the lady that such a Will, leaving something to an unborn person, was not possible but that as the law might soon be altered by a Bill already introduced into the Council. she could make the Will she desired after the law had been changed. This Bill, as we know, was passed on the 23th Saptember 1916, and was placed on the Statute Book as Ast XV of 1916. Jyolish Baba further stated that he met Krishna Chandra Ghoss, the son-in-law of the lady, after the law had been altered, and told him to inform her that she sould then make the Will she wanted. Sometime afterwards, Krishna Chandra came to the house of Jyotish Babu at Brownipur, told him that the lady was very ill at Bara. nagore and requested him to draft a Will. Jyotish Babu told Krishna Chandra that he was ossupied with examination work and could not afford time to see the lady for the next ten or fifteen days. Upon this evidence, SAROJINI DASI D. HARIDAS GHOSE.

strengthened by that of Dr. Gokul Chandra Dhar, there is no room for doubt that, before September 1916, the lady had intended to make a testamentary disposition of her properties so as to exclude her son from the inheritance, and that she retained such intention as late as the end of February or the beginning of March 1917 after she had removed from her residence in British Chandranagore to the house of her second son in law at Baranagore. The questien has accordingly to be faced, whether she did in fact earry out her intention by means of the document under consideration. Her sonin law, Krishna Chandra Ghose, who holds an important position in a mercantile firm and who takes no benefit under the Will, unless, indeed, the annuity of Rs. 2 a month in favour of his wife can be regarded as such, has been examined and cross-examined at considerable length. He corroborates the parrative of Babu Jyotish Chandra Hezra in every material particular, and adds that his mother in-law had repeatedly expressed a wish to make a Will in view of the conduet and character of her son Nitai. On the refusal of Jyotish Babu, he went to Narayan Chandra Chatterjee, a Pleader of Baranagore, now dead, who expressed his inability to come on the Sunday, on which the Will was made. Thereupon, a neighbour, Adhar Chandra Ghose, a trader in rice, offered to scoure the services of a deed-writer, Nanda Lal Das, who was known to him. Krishna Chandra accordingly took Nanda Lal to his mother in law who gave him instructions about the provisions to be inserted in the Will. Nanda Lal thereupon prepared a draft. which has been produced in these proceedings. It was read over to Rajanimani, and, after she had expressed her approval, Nanda Lal made a fair copy. At this juncture, Rashbibari Mockerjee, the physician who attended upon Rajanimani, same to see her, and, as was quite natural, he was requested to stay and attest the Will, Krishna Chandra also asked a neighbour, Saileswar Sanyal, a trader, to some and attest the Will. It to happened that Jitendra Nath Upadbyay, a Pleader of the Alipore Bar, had just at that time come to Saileswar Sanyal to collect some money due to his brother. Krishna Chandra, seeing him present, and learning that he was a Pleader, pressed him to some and be an attesting witness. The Will was subsequently executed by the lady, and was attested by Nanda Lal Das, the scribe, Krishna Chandra Ghose, the son-in law of the testatrix, Adhar Chandra Ghose, a local trader, Rashbibari Mookerjee, the physician, Saileswar Sanyal, a neighbour and a trader, and Jitendra Nath Upadbyay, the Pleader. These persons have come forward to pledge their oath that the Will was executed by the lady and was daly attested by them. They are persons of respectability, and no bypothesis has been put forward, except the innate perversity of human nature, to explain why they should all conspire to forge the Will, and to perjure themselves in Court. The version given by them in examination in chief has not been affected by eross examination; on the other hand, their statements are free from material contradictions, and their narratives have the ring of truth about them. These statements are further supported by Sarojini, the widowed daughter-in-law of the testatrix, who was in the room where the doenment was executed; she was subjected to a severe and prolonged cross examination, but with no effect. This mass of testimony bas, however, been summarily brushed aside by the District Judge on grounds of suspicion for which no foundation has been laid in the evidence. No dcubt, as stated by Lord Davey in Tyrrell v. Painton (1), wherever a Will is prepared under circumstances which raise a well grounded suspicion that it does not express the mind of the testator, the Court ought not to pronoures in fevour of it unless the suspicion is removed. But, as was explained by Jenkins, C. J., in Gores. sur Dutt v. Bissessur Dutt (2), this suspicion must be one inherent in the transaction itself, and not the doubt that may arise from a corflict of testimony which becomes apparent on an investigation of the transcotion. The reasons assigned by the District Judge for his refusal to act upon the testimony of some, at any rate, of the witnesses examined in this case indicate, however, that he has approached the evidence from an entirely erroneous standpoint. Thus, with regard to Nanda Lal Das, the seribe, he notes that he was presured from Serampore, aeross the river, and adds that as he has been a Pleader's elerk and writes for people frequenting Courts and Registration Offices, he is a likely hand to be shosen for getting up a deed. There is no foundation laid in the evidence for the imputation thus made against professional deed-writers in general. He next dismisses the evidence of the Doctor Rashbibari Mookerjee with the remark that he does not pay income tax and was prosecuted in a forgery case. This comment is based apparently on a statement made by the witness in the following terms: "there was a criminal ease against me for forging a currency note; there were fourteen accused in the case; only one Phani Bhushan Pan was convicted; all the others including myself were acquitted in the bessions Court; that was seven or eight years ago." The District Judge thus overlocks the elementary principle that where there has been an acquittal, the aquittal is conclusive; Jenkins, C. J., observed in Emperor Noni Gopal (3), on the authority of the decision in Rex. v. Flummer (4), it would be a very dangerous principle to adopt to regard a judgment of not guilty as not fully establish. ing the innocence of the person to whom it relates. Again, Saileswar Sanyal is discredited because he is a neighbour, while Jitendra Nath Upadbyay is not relied on because te is a chance witness from a The District Judge, bowever, distance. soncedes that the evidence of all these witnesses could be accepted if the Will had been exceuted in the natural way and publicity given to it, though be does not state how the execution was unnatural and how seerecy could have been intended when at least half a dozen strangers were present in the assembly. The District Judge next proceeds to make the general observation that it must be acknowledged that there is no great reluctance in our country in getting up a deed of this kind. There is no trace of evidence in the record to support this remark with regard to the people either of the province in general or of the localities where the lady resided or the Will was executed. The Judge then proceeds to rely upon a statement made by Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra in cross examination to the effect that Kanty Chandra Ghore and Kailash Chandra Ghose, two members of the Ghose family of Chandranagore, had propounded a Will alleged to have been executed by Trailokya Nath Ghose, brother of Kanty Chandra Ghose, that Probate of the Will was refased by the Trial Court, and that during the pendency of an appeal in this Court the matters in difference were settled by a deed of release dated the 9th March 1916. It is difficult to see how this statement is relevant to the present proseedings and how it can be admissible in The resitals in the deed evidence. release are plainly inadmissible, and the document was introduced into evidence for an entirely different purpose, namely, as containing the signature of Rajanibala who had asted as the guardian of her infant grand-son, Anil Chandra, in the transaction. The District Judge plainly should not have allowed his judgment upon the question of the genuineness of the Will now in controversy to be affected in the remotest degree by what took place in connection with the alleged Will of Trailokya Nath Ghose. Moreover, his observation that the Will of Trailokya Nath was designed to cheat his daughters while the present Will is intended to save the estate from the effect of the conduct of a dissolute ecn can only be regarded as embodying whelly misleading analogy. This is followed up by the entirely groundless imputation that a friendly neighbour (Saileswer Sanyal) and a young student (the Pleader Jitendra Nath Upadhyay) would not be averse to belping a minor. In view of these and other remarks made by the District Judge, we see no essape from the conclusion that the adverse opinion formed by him with regard to the Will in dispute is not based upon a consideration and analysis of the positive evidence on the resord. He has in fact adopted the method which has been more than once condemned by the Judicial Committee; Ohotey Norain Singh v. Ratan Koer (5) and Jagrani Koer v. Durga Parshad (6). As was observed by Lord Watson in the first of these sases, in order to prevail against such evidence as has been adduced, the improbability must be elear and eogent and must approach very nearly to, if it did not altogether constitute, an impossibility. This was emphasised by Lord Shaw in the second case, when he added that objection that the wifnesses might have been of a better class is at an end when execution and attestation are proved. comment of this character has no force except upon something of a much higher level than mere suspicion, namely, proof which would thoroughly satisfy the mind of a Court that the witnesses had committed both forgery and perjury. In the case of a Will, reasonable, natural and proper in its terms, it is not in accordance with sound rules of construction to apply to it those canons which demand a rigorous serating of documents of which the opposite ean be said, namely, that they are unnatural, unreasonable or tinged with impropriety. In view of all these circumstances, we cannot attach much weight to the opinion of the Trial Judge who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and notising their look and manner, as laid down by the Judicial Committee in Shama Charn Kundu Khettromoni Dasi (7), Shunmugaroya Mulaliar v. Manika Mudaliar (8), Bombay Cotton Manufacturing Co. v. Motilal (91. Reg. v. Bertrand (10) and other decisions reviewed in Lalljee Mahoxed v. Dudchni

Jisanji Guedar (11) and Surendra Krishna Mondal v. Ranes Dassi (12).

We may further observe that the evidence adduced by the propounder is practically uncontradicted. We have, on the other side. some evidence as to realisation of rent from the tenants of the houses after the death of the testatrix. On one occasion Nitai and Kiishna jointly demanded rent; that was apparently to meet the expenses of the Sradh ceremony. The tenant, however, did not pay the rent, and he continued to with. hold it when he found there was a dispate as to the title. The only evidence worthy of notice adduced on the side of the caveator is the signature of the testatrix on the release. There may be a controversy as to whether the document was duly proved and received in evidence, but even if we assume that it was really executed by the lady, it does not assist the ease of the eaveator. The District Judge limited himself to the observation that the signature on the Will is firm and not like that of a pale and emaciated lady on the point of death. We have no evidence to show how much vitality the lady possessed three days before her death; but this much is plain that a comparison of the signature on the Will with that on the deed of release is not saleulated to excite suspicion. In this connection, reference may be made to the exposition of the methods of proving handwriting given by Jenkins, C. J., in the ease of Barindra Kumar v. Emperor (13) which was followed in Pulin Behary v. Emperor (14). The ordinary methods of proving handwritings are: (i) by calling as a witness a person who wrote the document or saw it written, or who is qualified to express an opinion as to the handwriting by virtue of section 47 of the Evidence Act; (ii) by a comparison of handwriting as provided in section 73 of the Evidence Ast; and (iii) by the admission of the person against whom the document is tendered. A document does not prove itself, nor is an unproved signature proof of its having by the person whose written signature it purports to bear. In applying 73 of the the provisions of section Evidence Act it is important not to lose sight of its exact terms. It does not sanction the comparison of any two doenments, but requires that the writing with which the comparison is to be made, or the standard writing as it may be called, shall be admitted or proved to have been written by the person to whom it is attributed, and next the writing to be compared with the standard or, in other words, the disputed writing, must purport to have been written by the same person, that is to say, the writing itself must state or indicate that it was written by that person. The seetion does not specifically state by whom comparison may be made, though the second paragraph of the section dealing with a related subject expressly provides by way of contract that in that particular connection the Court may make the comparison. A comparison of handwriting is at all times as a mode of proof hazardous and inconslusive, and especially when it is made by one not conversant with the subject and without such guidance as might be derived from the arguments of Counsel and the syldenes of experts. In Sceemutty Phoo !se Bibee v. Gobind Chunder Roy (15) it was said by the Court that "a comparison of eignature is a mode of assertaining the truth which ought to be used with very great care and caution." It is true that the opinions of experts on handwriting meet with their full share of disparagement at times, but at any rate there is this use in their employment, that the appearances on which they rely are disclosed, and can thus be supported or criticized, whereas an opinion formed by a Judge in the privacy of his own room is subject to no such sheek. And that the aid of an expert may be of value was elearly the opinion of so distinguished a Judge as Mr. Justice Black. barn, who in Reg. v. Harrey (16) refused to allow a comparison to be made without of experts, the help A comparison of writings has consequently been deemed a mode of ascertaining the truth which ought to be used with very great saution: Nob.n Krishna v. Rassic's Lall (17), Kurallee l'ersaud Misr v. Anantaram Bajra (18) specially if no skilled witness has been salled to make the comparison; Reg v. ti'verlock (19), Reg. v. Harvey (16), Doe d Mudd v. Suckermore (2); Ra endro Nath Holdar v Jogendro Nath Baner. jes (21), Romesh Ohunder Muteri v. Rajani Kant Mukerji (22). We must further bear in mind that, although from the dissimilarity of signatures, a Court may legitimately draw the inference that a particular signature is not genuine because it varies from an admittedly genuine signature, yet, resemblance of two signatures affords no safe foundation that one of them is genuine. Now, it may be sonceded that if two signatures are exactly identical, there is room for suspicion that the one in question may be a copy or careful imitation of the genuine signature. It is a fact well-known and may be readily verified that no two signatures, astually written in the ordinary course of writing them, are precisely alike. The character of a person's signature is generally of uniform appearance, and the resemblance between one and another signature of the same person is thus apparent, but the coincidence is seldom known where a genuine signature of a person superposed over another genuine signature of the same person is such fac-simile that one is a perfect match to the other in every respect. There generally diversity in the marks of the pen, the size of the letter, the level of the signature and the space it compies, that stands as a guard over the gennine signature and characterises it as the true signature. But, as was observed by Coleridge, J. in Doe J. Mudd v. Suckermore (20), "the test of genuineness ought to be the resemblance, not to the formation of the letters in some other specimen or specimens, but to the general character of writing, which is impressed on it as the involuntary and unconscious result of constitution, habit, or other permanent cause, and is, therefore, itself permanent" Again, as Sir J. Nieboll said in Robson v. Rocke (23), "the best, usually perhaps, the only proper, evidence of handwriting is that of persons who have asquired a previous knowledge of the party's handwriting from seeing him write, and who form their opinion from the general character and manner of this, and not from criticising particular letters." I have compared the two signatures, and the impression left upon my mind by their prevailing character is that they are signatures of the same person, although on one document she signs her name as Rajanibala and in the other as notwithstanding this Rajanimani, Bat, general correspondence of the signatures, justifying a reasonable inference that they were made by the same person, I do not desire to base my conclusion upon the similarity of the signatures, because, as has been well observed, it is not difficult to forge the bandwriting of almost any person so that it may be impossible for even the most acute and experienced Judge to diseriminate between the false and the true. Besides, such reliance upon similarity of signatures is unnecessary in the present case. as there is, in my opinion, a mass of direct and circumstantial evidence which points unmietakably to the genuineness of the Will. After an examination of that evidence and a consideration of the criticisms thereon by the District Judge and by Coursel for the respondent in this Court, I feel no doubt that the Will was duly executed and attested by the testatrix. I may add that it is not necessary here to consider what may be the legal effect of the grant of Probate upon the title set up by the eaveator.

The result is, that the appeal must be allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the application for Letters of Administration with copy of the Will annexed granted to the appellant with costs in both Courts.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit in which they claimed Rs. 1.349 on account of rent for 41 bighas 17 kathas of land for the years 1322 to 1325. The land was held by the defendants under a Manhunda Settlement for 3 years from 1310 to 1312 and they have been holding over. The Munsif gave a decree in full but the learned District Judge modified the decree on a construction of the lease.

The first point taken in second appeal is that the appeal to the District Judge was insompetent and his decree a nullity because the suit was brought by four plaintiffs while only two of these were made respondents in the appeal. In support of this contention the esses of Ee,oy Gopal v. Umeth Chandra Bose (1), Dharan; it Naroyan Lingh v. Chandeswar Frosad Narayan Singh (2) and an observation in the judgment of the Privy Council in Rai Chunder Sen v. Ganga Das Seal (3) have been referred to. On the other side has been sited the desision in Upendra Kumar Chakravarty v. Sham Lol Mandal (4). This desision appears to be in ear first with the other authorities and contrary to the general course of decision. It seems plain that a person who is a necessary party to a suit must also be a necessary party to the appeal. The two plaintiffs who were made respondents to the appeal could not have maintained the suit which was a suit for rent for one holding, and the appeal against these two plaintiffs only is, in my opinion, incompetent. It was attempted to support the degree on the ground that the plaintiffs are brothers governed by the Dayabhaga School of Law and that the two who were made respondents are the senior members of the family; but the decree appealed against was not a decree for specific sums in favour of each plaintiff but a single decree in favour of all. The appellants were not entitled to divide the amount of the decree by two and appeal against two of the plaintiffs only in respect of half of the eam deereed.

Reference was also made to Order XLI, rule 4, but that has plainly no application as it provides for an exactly opposite set of cir-cometances to the present. I, therefore, hold that the appeal was incompetent and that the decree passed in appeal is a nullity.

The second point is on the merits of the case. It is contended that on the true construction of the kabuliyat the Munsil's decree was right. The Settlement is expressed to be a Manthika Settlement. The stipulation as to rent is as follows:—

"We shall in respect of this kamat land deliver to the Malik esmindar aforesaid at his place, grains, Kalai, and Jai, 2 maunds per bigha on the average, total 83 maunds 28 seers by way of rent in this way, vis., each year in the month of Pous 50 maunds of Kalai and in the month of Baieskh 33 maunds 28 seers Jai (oats)."

The term of the Settlement is then set forth and provision is made for what is to be done in the case of excess or defect in the area under sultivation, the rent being inereased or decreased at the aforesaid rate of 2 maunds of Jai per bigha. Then at the end of the lease the following words occur : "the price approximately is fixed at Rs. 2.4.0 for Kalai per maund, and Rs. 2-3-0 for Jai per maund," and in the Schedule "approximate rent comes to Rs. 185." Various cases have been eited on the construction of leases more or less similar to the present lease and in these eases different views have been taken. As these decisions proceeded on the terms of the contracts which were there being construed, they are not of much assistance in the present case; but it may be noted that in Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Chandra Chakra. barti (5) stress was laid in constraing the document on the fact that there was an express provision relating to the delivery of paddy in the month of Pous. A similar provision is found in the present lease. There is no doubt that the lease is a Manhunda lease and the rent payable is rent in kind. There is no provision, as in some of the cases that were cited, that on failure to pay rent in kind, rent at a particular each rate shall be payable. It is contended that the last clause of the lease, which I have already quoted, has this effect. It is not so expressed and, in my opinion, will not bear that interpretation. In the first place this clause is not inserted along with the clause where the rent is set forth but in a different part of the lease altogether, remote from the clause providing for the payment of rent. In the second place the price at which the produce is valued is not stipulated to be payable in default of delivery of produce. Thirdly in both places where each is mentioned, the word 'approximate ' is used. Now, no one grants a lease at an approximate rent and the fact that the word 'approximate' is used in connection with the terms relating to each is a clear indieation that these terms are not rent or any substitute for rent. The rent is produce deliverable in the month of Pous 50 maunds of Kalai and in the month of Basiak 33 maunds 23 seers of Jai. It seems to me that the clear consequence of non-delivery of produse as covenanted is that the defendants are liable for the market value of these erops at the time when they are deliverable. I hold, therefore, that the District Judge has erred in his construction of this lease and appeal ought to have been that the diemissed.

(5) 7 Ind. Cas. 875, 37 C. 626.

The result is that the present appeal must be decreed with costs, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the decree of the Munsif restored.

Note — The above judgment was affirmed on appeal under the Letters Patent of the High Court on the 20th December 193',—[Ed.]

Will-Standard of proof to establish Will-Burden of proof-Attesting witnesses, production of-Appel late Court, duty of-Verdict of Judge trying case not to be lightly disregarded.

The standard of proof to establish a Will required by the Indian Statutes is that of the prudent man and not an absolute or conclusive one. The Evidence Act, while thus adopting the requirements of the prudent man as an appropriate concrete standard by which to measure proof, is, at the same time, expressed in terms, which allow full effect to be given to circumstances or conditions of probability or improbability, so that where forgery comes in question in a civil suit, the presumption against misconduct is not without its due weight as a circumstance of improbability, though the standard of proof to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt required in a criminal case may not be applicable. [p. 788, col. 1.]

The onus probandi lies in every case upon the party propounding a Will, to satisfy the conscience of the Court that the instrument propounded is the last Will of a free and capable testator: in other words, where a Will is prepared under circumstances which raise a well-grounded suspicion that it does not express the mind of the testator, the Court ought not to pronounce in favour of it unless the suspicion is removed. But the suspicion must be one inherent in the transaction itself and not the doubt that may arise from a conflict of testimony which becomes apparent on an investigation of the transaction. [p. 788, col. ?.]

Though it is desirable that all the attesting witnesses capable of being called should be examined to remove all suspicion of fraud, it is not absolutely necessary that where there are many attesting witnesses, the absence of every one not called should be specifically explained. [p. 788, col. ?.]

The verdict of a Judge trying the case should not be lightly disregarded by the Appellate Court where the issue is simple and straightforward and the only question is, which set of witnesses is to be believed. But where the determination of the question of genuineness of a Will depends not merely upon the assertions of witnesses but upon surrounding facts and circumstances whose existence is either admitted or indisputably proved, the judgment of the Trying Judge may be vitiated by his failure to test the veracity of the witnesses by reference thereto. Two conflicting view-points have to be reconciled, namely, on the one hand, the undoubted duty of the Court of Appeal to review the recorded evidence and to draw its own inferences, and conclusions, and, on the other hand, the unquestionable weight which must be attached to the opinion of the Judge of the primary Court who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and noticing their look and manner. JUDGMENT.

Mookesjas, J .- The subject matter of the litigations which have culminated in these two appeals is the estate left by one Mandakini Debi, a Hindu lady, who died on the 16th September 1918. On the 1st October 1:18 Baikuntha Nath Chattoraj, the surviving brother of her deseased husband, Brahmananda Obattoraj, made an application for Letters of Administration to the estate left by her. On the 28th July 1919 her sister, Prasannamayi, the widow of Rajballabh Chattorai, another brother of her busband, applied for Probate of an unregistered Will alleged to have been excented by her on the 14th September 1918, two days before her death. The relationship of the members of the family is set out in the annexed genealegical table :

MADHUSUDAN CHATTORAJ.

Radhaballav, Brahmanands, Rajballabh, Baikuntha died 1900 died 1918, died 1902, Nath, widow Mandakini widow (Caveator). Asutosh (Testatrix) Frasanna. mayi, Jamini, (Propounder)

By consent of parties, the Administration same evidence. In the Probate proceedings, the District Judge came to the conclusion that the genuireness of the Will had not been established; accordingly, be granted Letters of Administration to the petitioner in the other proceedings. Two appeals have, conrequently, been presented to this Court by Prasannamayi: Appeal No. 31 of 1920 is directed against the refusal of Probate; Appeal No. 35 of 1920 is directed against the grant of Letters of Administration. embetantial point in controversy is the question of genuineness of the Will.

The Will parporte, on the face of it, to have been executed by Mandakini whose name was signed by Natabar Mockerjee, who also signed his own rame as the seribe, and there were in addition seven attesting witnesser. The soribe and four of the attesting witnesses have been examined on behalf of the pro-The Will recites that Brahpourder. manands, the husband of the testatriz, had a brother Pajballay who had token her sister, Prasannamayi, as his second wife. Brahmananda and Rajballabh used to live in joint mess and estate as members of a Hindu family, and since their death, Mandakini and Prasannamayi had likewise lived in joint mess and estate. Rajballay had bequeathed his property to his widow, that is, to her sister Prasannameyi, and in his Will had appointed her husband as excentor. Her husband had taken out Probate Will of his brother and had, out of the income and profits of his own property and of the estate left by his brother, acquired properties in his own name. All these properties he had bequeathed to her and had ap. pointed her cousin (mother's siter's son), Kalibbusan Mcokerjee, as executor. After these resitals, the testatrix proceeded to give directions for the disposal of her estate in five paragraphs. In the first clause, she dedicated a property to goddess, Durga, and appointed Baikuntha Nath (her husband's younger brother) and Asutosh (son of her husband's elder brother) as managers of the property so dedicated. In the second clause, she directed her brother-in-law and nephewin-law to feed Brahmins annually on the occasion of the Durga Paja, for the spiritual benefit of her husband, out of the income of two other properties. In the third elause, she directed Rs. 1,500 to be spent in the and Protate proceedings were tried on the performance of her Sradh ceremony. In the fourth elause, she directed the residue of her estate to vest absolutely in her sister, Prasan. namayi. In the fifth elause, she dirested the expenses of the annual Sradh ceremony of herself and of her husband to be met out of the income of the estate vested in her sister. These directions do not seem unnatural; on the other hand, they constitute the kind of disposition which might well have been made by an elderly Hindu lady in the position of the testatrix. She had no children; her sister had married in the same family as berself, their husbands were brothers who had lived joint in PRASANFAMATI DEBI U. BAIGUNTHA MATH.

mess and estate and separate from their other brothers. Her rearest relations by marriage were her husband's younger brother and elder brother's son. In a family so constitued, it was not surprising that a pious Hindu lady would dedicate some property for the worship of the deity, appoint her brother in law and nephew in law as managers thereof, make provision for her own Sradh ceremony and the annual Sradh seremonies of herself and of her busband, and leave the residue of the estate to the sister whom she dearly loved. These provisions of the Will can in no sense be deemed inofficious or unnatural; on the other hand, they are prima facie reasonable, as they do not disregard the moral claims of the relatives of the testatrix which the ties of kinship suggest; they are consequently not calculated to excite auspicion as to the genuineness of the disposition: Jagrani Kosr v. Durga Parthad (1). We now proceed to consider the evidence as to the actual execution and due attestation of the Will by the testatrix; but before we do so, it is necessary to state the circumstances which led up to the discovery of the Will, for, as will presently their true appear, bearing upon question of genuineness of the Will has not been fully appreciated by the Trial Judge.

As previously stated, the applicant for Letters of Administration presented his petition to the District Judge on the 1st October 1918. On the same date, the District Judge made an order for the appointment of Babu Lalit Mohan Banerjee, a Pleader, as Commissioner to make an inventory of the articles and the iron safe and each to be found in boxes belonging to the deceased, Commissioner went to the residence of the deceased on the following day. Thereupon, Prasannamayi objected to the interference of the Commissioner on the ground that her sieter, Mandakini, had bequeathed all ber properties to her by means of a Will. She further stated that the key of the iron chest in which the moveable properties left by the deceased were kept was not with her, but was with Kalibhushan Mookerjee, the son of her mother's sister, who lived in Pakhanna 14 miles off. She added that she trusted no body else and would not open the iron sheet or box till he came. She further declined to show acything as she had got everything in pureuance of the Will. What she stated was reduced to writing by the Commissioner, and, later on in the day, she asserted again that her sister, Mandakini, had bequeathed her property to her by means of a Will. The Commissioner submitted a report to the Court on the following day, in which he explained his inability to make an inventory. On the 3rd October, the District Judge recorded that Prasannamayi claimed the property under a Will, directed her to show cause on the 6th November 1918 why she should not be criminally prosecuted for disobedience of the orders of the Court, and issued instructions that in the meantime the boxes and the safe containing the property, of which an inventory was sought to be made, be kept by the Commissioner in a separate room under seal, the key of the room to remain in the custody of the Commissioner. On the 4th October the Commissioner again went to the residence of the deceased, collected the moveables left by her, made a list thereof and placed them in a separate room which was looked up and sealed by him. The contempt proceed. ings against Prasannamayi dragged on for sometime, but were subsequently abandoned. On the 21st December 1918 a reference to arbitration was made at the instance of the partise, but this also, as might have been anticipated, proved infructuous in the end, as the question of the genuineness of a testamentary instrument cannot be settled by sompromise. Ultimately, the Commissioner again went to the residence of the deseased under the orders of the Court dated the 31st January 1919. He reached the place on Saturday, the 1st February, opened the room on the following day, and made a list of the safes, boxes and other articles as also of their contents. This list was filed in Court on the 3rd February 1919 and contained the following entry :

"IRON CHEST

(1) Unregistered Will of Srimati Mandakini Debi by the pen of Natabar Mookerjee of Pratrasayar, dated 28th Bhadra, 1325 B. S.

(2) Draft of a Will by Srimati Manda. kini Debi. These two are tied in a piece of cloth," PRABANKAMATI DEBI C. BAIKUNTHA NATH.

The list, as expressly stated in the report of the Commissioner dated 3rd February 1919, was prepared by him in the presense of Kalibbushan Mookerjee, Baikuntha Nath Chattoraj (the petitioner) and Baba Upendranath Das, Pleader for Prasannamagi. The articles found in the room were, after the preparation of the list, left there, and the room itself was again looked up and sealed. On the 3rd February 1919, that is, the day after the dissovery of the Will in the iron safe, Prasannamayi made a petition to the arbitrators in which abe resited the previous insidents and prayed that they might send for the Will. On the requisition of the arbitrators, the District Judge directed the Commissioner on the 10th Fabruary to bring the documents and file them in Court. On the 16th February the Commissioner went to the house agair, "brought the unregistered Will and a draft of a Will found in an iron safe" and filed them in Court on the following day, "wrapped in a piece of cloth." It is thus elear that the Will was inside an iron safe which was looked up and placed inside a room, the doors whereof were looked up and sealed by the Commissioner and remained so sealed from 4th Ostober 1918 up till 2nd February 1919. Consequently, the Will must have been in existence as early as the 4th October 1918. It has been boldly suggested, however, that the Will might have been manufactured later and smuggled into the iron safe when the scom, was opened and the safe was unloaked on the 2nd February 1919. But there is manifestly no foundation whatever for this ingenious suggestion which is not based on any evidence in the resord. As already stated, the Commissioner reported to the Court on the 3rd Fabruary 1919, that he had prepared the list of the contents of the room and of the safes and boxes in the presense of Baikuntha Nath Chattoraj, and the list specified in explicit terms "the Will and draft tied in a pisce of eloth," as found among the contents of the iron chest. Baikuntha Nath might have forthwith objected that this was an incorrect statement, and that the Will was smuggled in when the safe was opened by the Commissioner; his omission to take exception at the time is significant, and no weight ean be attached to the much belated after.

thought that the Will might have been surreptitionsly introduced into the safe when it was opened by the Commissioner. Such a suggestion plainly involves a serious charge of carelessness against the Commissioner, and he should, in all fairness, been examined before the sharge sould be entertained. On the other hand, such evidence as there is on the record including the statement of the caveator as to what took place when the Commissioner opened the room and unlocked the safe, indicates that the work was done in the presence of many people, anxiously watching the prozeedings; in such sircumstances, it is improbable in the highest degree that desparate attempt would be made to smuggle in the two dosuments, or, that it made, it should escape detection. We must consequently hold that the Will and the draft were inside the iron safe on the 4th Ostober 1918, when it was placed inside the room which was looked up and sealed by the Commissioner. This constasion, as we shall presently see, is supported by reliable evidence on the record.

Natabar Mookerjee, the god-son of the testatrix and the writer of the Will, has deposed that he used to serve in the Na. karka Colliery, (Post Kotwalgar, District Manbhum) 300 or 400 miles distant from his house which was about 6 miles off from the residence of Mandakini and that he came home in September 1919 to see his wife who was ill and also to negotiate for the marriage of his daughter. On or about the 13th September, he went to see Manda. kini as usual as she was his god-mother and found her ill. Prasannamayi also was ill, and, assording to the witness, both of them probably had an attack of inflaerza. He was told that Mandakini would execate a Will. On his stating that he had no experience in Will drafting, she said that she had a draft prepared by Upendra Baba of Bankura who was her retained Pleader from before. The draft was in a wall-almirah, wrapped up in a rag. The draft showed that Mandakini was willing away in favour of Prasannamayi and Prasannamayi was in her turn willing away in favour of Mandakini. The draft, in fact, was for a mutual Will. Natabar did not approve of the draft, and on the suggestion of Rajendra Narayan Biswas, PRESANNAMAYI DEBI U. BAIKONTHA NATH.

Babu Bhutnath Mandal, a Pleader of the Burdwan Bar, who had some to the village on business was called in. The Pleader examined the draft and distated the Will to Natabar who wrote it out. After the Will had been written out, it was read over and explained to Mandakini by the witness. At her request, he signed her name as execut-Bhutnath Mandal also became ant. witness and he was followed by other attesting witnesses, The Will was then taken to Prasannamayi who was lying bedridden in another room. As she was not able to get up, she asked the witness to take it back to Mandakini. After she had been helped to get up, she went into another room and kept the Will and draft tied up in a rag inside an iron chest. was in this safe that the two documents were found on the 2nd February 1920. this evidence, it is difficult to realise how a doubt could be seriously raised as to the genuineness of the Will. The Court below, however, has not taken a comprehensive view of the case and has looked at every incident with surpicion which appears to us to be groundless. The attempt to break down Natabar Mookerjee in eross-examination was by no means successful. The suggestion was made that he was not present in the village and in the house of Mandakini on the date of execution of the Will. He emphatically repudiated the imputation. If his statement was untrue, he could have been completely contradicted by Janakiballay Hazra, his superior officer in the Colliery where an attendance register was kept; but it is significant that though his name was included in the list of witnesses, effective steps were not taken to serve the writ on him and to place him in the witness-box. The warrant issued against Janaki was not served for want of an identifier, and the application for re-issue of process was renewed at so late a stage of the case, that the District Judge rightly refused to grant it. It is further clear from the evidence of Natabar Mookerjee that subsequent to his return to the Colliery after the execution of the Will, he did not go back to the village for many weeks. A post eard written by him on the 7th November 1918 to Prasannamayi is alleged to have been found on or about the 2nd December 1918 in a window in the house, though it is not mentioned by Baikuntha in his examination-in-shief. The sontents of this communication, which the witness was never called upon to explain, have been supposed to militate against the theory that Natabar was present when the Will was executed. The letter, however, is eapable of a very different interpretation, and is consistent with the view that when Natabar left Mandakini, her illness had not taken a serious turn (as, indeed, is shown by other evidence on the record) and also that Natabar was not informed of her death for some considerable time. The letter was evidently written on receipt of intimation of news of her death from Prasannamayi, who communicated with him while the proceed. ings for contempt were pending against her. The letter brings out the very important fact that even on the 7th November 1918, Natabar was at the Colliery and thus corroborates his assertion that he did not return to the village till after its date. This also could have been verified or contradicted if the petitioner had secured the attendance of the Colliery officer Janakiballay Hazra and secured the production of the attendance register. It is not enough to suggest doubts as to the veracity of a witness; if the means of contradiction are available to the party who shallenges his truthfulness, these should be produced before the Court. We must consequently take it as established beyond reasonable doubt that Natabar was present at the house of Mandakini on or about the 14th September 1918 took part in the preparation of the Will and did not again return to the village till after the 7th November 1918. This conclusion completely demolishes the theory that the Will was manufactured after the death of Mandakini on the 16th September 1918, for, as has already been shown, the Will was inside the iron safe as early as the 4th October 1918, If Natabar, the scribe of the Will, was 300 or 400 miles away, at the Colliery, from the 15th September 1918 to the 7th Novthe question inevitably ember 1918, arises when and where did he manufacture the Will to be placed inside the iron safe not later than the 4th October 1918. No hypothesis, probable or improbable, has even been suggested as a satisfactory solution of this eracial difficulty in the path of the respondent.

PRASANNAMAYI DEBI O. BAIKUNTHA NATH.

Apart from this, there is other weighty evidence, besides that of Natabar Mookerjes, to support the genuineness of the Will. The testimony of Baba Upendra Nath Das, a Pleader of long standing of the Bankara Bar, is unimpeachable. He aggerts that he prepared the draft which was subsequently found inside the iron safe along with the Will. There is no inherent improbability in the terms of the draft, which could be used either for a mutual Will or for a Will by one of the sisters in favour of the other. The Trial Judge has summarily discarded the evidence of the Pleader, because he could not remember the date when he made the draft; the suggestion apparently was that he might have prepared it after the death of the testatrix. This is a mere hypothesis, not supported by evidence. The Judge has further sommented adversely upon the cirenmstance that the witness did not produce his assounts; the obvious answer is that he was never called upon to do so, even though he offered, when asked in crossexamination about his assounts, to produce them on the following day. The objecttion that the assounts of Mandakini were not produced is equally fatile; her papers, any, were in the enstody of the iŧ Commissioner no attempt and made to examine them. In our opinion, there is no reason why the evidence of Babu Upendranath Das, so far as it goes, should not be accepted as a perfectly honest and straightforward statement. But if the Pleader is unable to re-eall the exact time when he prepared the draft, the date is fixed with some approach to assuracy by Trailokyanath Karak who was formerly in the service of Mandakini. He swears that he was sent by Mandakini to Babu Upendranath Das to get the draft prepared and that this took place not less than 10 nor more than 30 days before her death. The witness also describes the ineidents connected with the astual execution and attestation of the Will. There is no reason why he should be disbelieved, except the fact that he had been in the service of Mandakini. We need not refer in detail to the evidence of Nagendranath Ghose whose statements do not seem rew acitenimexe-ecore eccaw has ,eldedeng improperly disallowed even after he had parned hostile, [Surendra Kriehna Mondal v.

Kanee Dassi (2)] nor, is it necessary to rely upon Sarendranath Mandal manner is described by the Judge as suspisious. But we do not see adequate reasons for rejecting the testimony of Babu Bhutnath Mandal, a Pleader of the Burdwan Bar. The District Judge was evidently annoyed when it was found difficult to secure his attendance, but the explanation offered by him for his failure to attend punctually has the ring of truth. Apart from this, his evidence in support of the Will was trustworthy and remained unaffected by cross-examination. It may be noted that the Judge considers him unworthy of credit because his professional income as a lawyer is small; but clearly it cannot be affirmed as a general rule that a person is not trustworthy because he is not wealthy, and the Judge himself does not hesitate to believe Kalipada Ray, a witness for the eavestor, though his income as a medical man is equally limited. The position, then, is that there is a large body of respectable syidence in support of the case made by the propounder, and that evidence fits in with the two eardinal points that the Will must have been in existence as early as the 4th Ostober 1918, and that no hypothesis has been propounded to show that the Will could have been manufactured after the 15th September and before Ostober 1918. As against this evidence, the caveator produced a physician Kalipadda Ray, who asserted that he was approached in January or February, 1919, with a request that he should for a consideration of Rs. 400 become witness to a Will executed by Mandakini, and a deed-writer Anantalal Ghosb, who alleged that he had been invited in the middle of November 1918 to forge a Will by Mandakini for a bribe of Me. 200. These witnesses are obviously unreliable, and their statements must be deemed untrue when it is remembered that, at the dates spoken to by them, the Will was inside the iron safe. The other witnesses give evidence of a negative character which does not neutralise that adduced by the petitioner. The adverse comments made upon the evidence of Prasannameyi are really not justified; there is nothing to show that she knew that the Will which had been taken to her and returned, was deposited in the iron safe; it is further not shown that she obtained the key of the safe after the death of her eister or that, if she had the key, she ever opened it and examined the contents; she may have heard of the matter during her illness, but it is not improbable that as stated by her in her petition to the arbitrators on the 3rd February 1919, it may have escaped her memory. In these eireumstances, we are clearly of opinion that the Dietriet Judge has arrived at an erroncous conclusion on the question of the genuineness of the Will. His judgment shows that his opinion is not based upon a careful analysis of the evidence and has been influenced by unfounded suspicior. As was pointed out by Jenkine, C. J., in Gopessur Dutt v. Bisiessur Dutt (3), the standard of proof to establish a Will required by the Indian Statutes is that of the prudent man and not an absolute or. conclusive one. The Indian Evidence Act, while thus adopting the requirements of the prudent man as an appropriate ocnerete standard by which to measure proof, is, at the same time, expressed in terms, which allow full effect to be given to circumstances or conditions of probability or improbability, so that where, as in this case, forgery comes in question in a civil suit, the presumption against missondust is not without its due weight as a circumstarce of improbability, though the standard of preced to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt required in a criminal case may not te applicable: Cooper v. Slade (4), Devine v. Wilson (5). If the evidence is tested from the point of view just indicated it leaves no room for escape from the conelusion that the Will was in fact excented by Mandakini.

The only other question which could possibly arise would be that of her testamentary sapacity. On this part of the eace, however, Sir Asntosh Chaudhari conceded that if it was found that the Will had teer, in fact, executed by Mandakini, be could not centend that she had not at the time a scund disposing mind. No doubt as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Earry v. Butlin (6) the onus probandi lies in every case upon the party propound. Will to satisfy the conscience of the Court that the instrument propounded is the last Will of a free and capable testator; in other words, as stated by Lord Davey in Tyrrell v. Fainton (7), wherever a Will is prepared under eireumstances which raise a well-grounded suspicion that it does not express the mind of the testator, the Court enght not to pronource in favour of it unless the suspicion is removed. The suspicion to which allusion is thus made must be one inherent in the transaction itself and not the doubt that may arise from a scuffict of testimony which becomes apparent on an investigation of the transaction. Considered in the light of these principles, the question of testamentary espacity is free from difficulty. The evidence adduced by the propounder affords everwhelming proof that the testatrix was in full possession of her mental faculties when she executed the Will, and this is borne out even by the evidence of Bijayebandra Ghose, Jaminibbushan Chattoraj and Bipinbihari Mandal called by the eaveator. We have further the important fact that the Will was executed according to a draft prepared at the instance of Mandakini some time before her illness and there is nothing to indicate that Prasanna. mayi ir fluereed the disposition in her favour. Some stress was laid, not unnaturally, on the circumstance that all the attesting witnesses were not salled; but though it is desirable that all the attesting witnesses capable of being salled should be examined to remove all suspicion of fraud, it is not absolutely necessary that where, as here, there are many attesting witnesses, the absence of every one not called should be specifically explained; Surendra Krishna Mondal v. Rance Dassi (2).

It has been finally urged that the Court should be slow to interfere with the findings of fact of the Trial Judge who saw and heard the witnesses and had an opportunity of noting their demeanour. This is a salutory rule and it may be conceded that as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Bombay Ootton Manufacturing Co. v. Motilal (8), the verdict of a Judge trying the case should not be lightly disregarded where the issue is simple and straightforward and the only question is which set of witnesses is to be believed. The case before us is of a different description. Here the determination of the question of genuineness depends not merely upon assertions of witnesses but upon surrounding facts and eireamstances whose existence is either admitted or indisputably proved, and the judgment of the District Judge is, in our opinion, vitiated by his failure to test the veracity of the witnesses by reference The desitions reviewed in Lall ee Mahomed v. Dadabhai Jivanji Gustar (9), and Surendra Krishna Mondal v. Rance Dassi (2), show that two corflicting view-points have to be reconciled, namely, on the one hand the undoubted duty of the Court of Appeal to review the recorded evidence and to draw its own inferences and conclusions, and on the other hand the unquestionable weight which must be attached to the opinion of the Judge of the primary Court who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and noticing their look and manner. have kept in view these considerations and have arrived at the conclusion that the opinion of the District Judge on the question of the genuineness of the Will sannot be supported on a right appreciation of the evidence.

The result is that the appeals must be allowed and the Will admitted to Probate. The application for Probate is granted while the application for Letters of Administration is dismissed. The appellant will have costs in both Courts in the two proseedings.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1837), 8, 25-Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1903), O. IX, r. 8-Dismissal of suit for default-Revision.

Application for revision against the order of the First Class Sab-Jadge, Hyderabad.

Mr. Fatehchand Assudamil, for the Ap. pellant.

Mr. Tabilran Maniram, for the Respond. ent.

JUDGMENT .- The fasts of these two Ravision Applications Nos. 70 and 71 are simple and undisputed,

The plaintiff, who is the present applicant, filed a suit for Rs. 226 in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Hyder. abad, in the exercise of Small Cause Court Jarisdistion. The defendant in his written statement admitted that R1. 136-5-6 were due to the plaintiff but he went on to arge that owing to non-delivery of the goods. namely, split and unsplit wood, within the stipulated period the defendant had insurred a loss of Rs. 73.9.0. The defendant, therefore, declared himself ready to pay not Rs. 135.5.6 but Rs. 62.12.6. Oa this counter-claim he paid the Court-fee stamps. The ease was fixed for hearing on the 6th of September 1917. It is alleged that the plaintiff's Pleader went to the First Olass Subordinate Judge's Court bat found him busy. As the Pleader had a case on the same day in the Sassions Judge's Court he went there leaving his eleck behind, Some time later, the plaintiff's case was called out and the elerk went to call the JOWAD BUSSAIN U. GENDA SINGH.

plaintiff's Pleader. The latter, it is said, was engaged in arguing the case before the Sessions Judge. At any rate, he did not go to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge until some 15 or 20 minutes later. By that time, however, the learned First Class Subordinate Judge had already dismissed the case for default with costs.

The plaintiff by his Pleader made an application to restore his suit file. On the 21st September 1917, the learned First Class Subordinate Judge dismissed the application. Against this order of dismissal of the learned Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff has filed these two applications. In the one, he has asked this Court to restore his case to the First Class Sub-Judge's file (No. 70). In No. 71 he has urged that in view of the defendant's admission in his written statement, he should awarded been 8 deeree have Rs. 136-5-6.

As regards Application No. 70, we do not think that we should be justified in interfering with the learned Sabordinate Jadge's discretion. It is no doubt true that this is a revision application, not under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. but under section 25 of Act IX of 1887. But even section 25 of Act IX of 1887 lays down that the High Court can only vary the order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes if that order has not been made according to law. Now under Order IX, rule 8, the duty laid on the Court to dismiss a suit when the plaintiff does not appear is peremptory. The words are: "The Court shall make an order that the suit is dismissed." It has been urged by the learned Pleader that the Judge might have waited for the Pleader to come. The answer is that it is a matter entirely within the discretion of the learned Judge and we do not propose to interfere with it. At the same time we do express our disapproval of a Pleader's conduct who takes such little care of his elient's ease that he does not even ask a brother Pleader to apply for a short adjournment during his absence.

As regards the Application No. 71, we think that the application should be granted. Mr. Tabilram for the opponent has frankly admitted that as regards Rs. 62-12-6 the Judge should have awarded to the plaintiff a decree. The question, therefore, resolves itself into this, whether the plaintiff should be given a decree for Rs. 136.5.6 or Rs. 62-12-6. Mr. Tahilram has relied on section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and bas urged that as the Trial Judge refused to allow the Rs. 73.90, that was a finding of fact which we cannot disturb. But this was a counter claim by the defendant and it was for the defendant to prove it just as much as if he had been a plaint. iff, and as if he had filed a plaint. As the learned Pleader, Mr. Fetheband, contends, the defendant is no more entitled to recover a counter claim merely on a written state. ment than a plaintiff is entitled to recover his claim merely on his plaint. As the defendant did not lead any evidence to prove his counter-elaim, we must dismiss it, and we direct that a decree should be granted to the plaintiff for Rs. 135.5.6 only. We grant costs in the lower Court to the extent of Rs. 136.5.6 and we grant interest at 6 per cent, on Rs. 136.5.6 from the date of suit to the date of payment,

We dismiss Application No. 70 with costs and we grant Application No. 71 with costs.

JUDGMENT,

Das, J .- The material facts are all stated with precision in the judgment of the Court below; and, as I agree with the conclusion at which the learned Sabordinate Judge has arrived, it is unnecessary to recapitulate these facts. The learned Counsel for the appellants contends that the right to apply assended to the plaintiffs on the 22nd August 1915, the date fixed for payment of the mortgage-money by the preliminary decree passed by the Court of first instance, and that as the respondents did not apply for a final decree until the 22 ad of Fabruary 1919, the application presented on that date was barred under the provision of Article 181, First Schedule, of the Limitation Act. The learned Counsel for the respondents, on the other hand, maintains that as there was an appeal to the High Court by his elients from the decree of the Court of first instance and that as that appeal was disposed of on the 21st May 1917, the right to apply accrued to the respondents on the 21st May 1917, and the application was not ascordingly barred by limitation. To this, the learned Conneel for the appellants replies that, as the desres of the High Court did nothing more than dismiss the appeal with costs, time bagan to run from the 22nd August 1915.

I confess that the question is not free from difficulties. It is conceded that Article 181 of the Limitation Act applies; and I think that if is a matter for regret that there are no provisions in the Limitation Act which would govern applications for a final decree analogous to those contained in the third column of Article 182 of the Limitation Act. It is conceded that if the Appellate Court at all varies the decree of the primary Court, time would begin to true from the date of the decree of the

Appellate Court, and not from the decree of the Court of first instance; but it is entended that if the Appellate Court dismisses the appeal without extending the time for payment fixed by the decree of the primary Court, time would begin run from the date so fixed. It seems to me that, if the argument be a good one, it is possible for a mortgagor to defeat the mortgages by earrying an appeal from one Appellate Court to another, and ultimately suffering the appeal to be dismissed. But the mere fast that the argument have that result is no ground for holding that it is a bad one; but it is a ground hoping that the Ligislature may find it possible to deal with the subject by providing a period of limitation for applications for final decrees in mortgage astions, and the time from which such pariod would begin to run on principles analogous to those contained in the third column of Article 182 of the Limitation Act. Though not strictly pertinent to this subject, I may point out that, under Artiele 132 of the Limitation Act, the period of three years limited for an application for the execution of a degree or order begins to run from the date of the decree or order, unless, there has been an appeal, in which case the time begins to ran from the decree or order of the Appellate Court or the withdrawal of the appeal. But where there is an appeal, and the appeal is dismissed for want of prosecution. since the order dismissing the appeal neither adopts nor confirms the decision appealed from nor is it an order passed on the withdrawal of the appeal, time begins to run from the date of the deeree or order appealed against, as in the opinion of the Jadicial Committee, the appealing must be regarded in the circumstaness as being in the same position as if he had not appealed at all. See Abdul Marid v. Jawahir Lul (1). This obviously puts the decree-holder at a great disadvantage, where the appeal is by the judgment. debtor. If the matters are at all resonsidered by the Legislature, and applications for firal decrees in mortgage actions are put on the same footing as applications for execution of decrees, then the case where a mortgager or a judgment-detter carries an appeal to the Appellate Court and then suffers the appeal to be dismissed for want of presecution ought not to be overlooked by the Legislature. The question which has been argued before us is not free from difficulties; but it is difficult to resist the argument em pleyed by Banrerjee, J., in the case of Ga, adhar Singh v. Kishen Jiwan Lal (2), upon which the learned Subordinate Judge relied. In giving effect to the arguments advanced on behalf of the mortgagees, that learned Judge said as follows:-"It seems to me that this role," that is to say the 5th rule of Order XXXIV, the rule regulat. ing applications for firal decrees in mortgage actions, "contemplates the passing of only one final decree in a suit for sale upon a mortgage. The essential condition to the making of a final decree is the existence of a preliminary decree which has become sorelusive between the parties. When an arreal has been preferred, it is the deoree of the Appellate Court which is the final dearee oacre." The decision in tha the Judicial Committee in the care of Abdul Mojid v. Jawahir Lal (1), was relied on by Mr. Justice Banerice. The facts of that ease were these: by the prelimitary deeree passed by the Court of first instance, 12th of August 1890 was fixed for payment of the mortgage-money. An appeal was taken from that decree to the High Court, and that appeal was dismissed on the 5th of April 1883. The merigager obtained leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee, but did not prosecute his appeal, and on the 13th of May 1901, the appeal was dismissed for want of prosecution. On the 11th of June 1909, the mortgages applied to the Subordinate Judge for an order absolute to sell the mortgaged prop-The Judicial Committee came to erties. the conclusion that the application was barred under section 179 of the Limitation Act of 1877 at the expiry of three years from the date of the decree of the High Court, and, therefore, before the passing of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. and that, as the right had once been barred, no provision of the Code of 1903 could operate to revive it. With this portion of the judgment of the Judicial Committee, we are not concerned, except in so far as it held that, before the passing of the Code of 1908, an application for an order absolute to sell the mortgaged properties was regarded as an application for execution of the preliminary decree, for, on no other bypothesis could Article 179 of the Limitation Act of 1871 be ragard. ed as applicable to such an application. The Judicial Committee, however, held that the time for making such an application began to run from the 8th of April 1893, the date of the decision of the High Court dismissing the appeal. Mr. Justice Banerji took the desision of the Judicial Committee in the case cited to establish that, when an appeal has been preferred, it is the desree of the Appellate Court which is the final decree in the case. But it may be pointed out that, on the hypothesis that Article 179 of the old Limitation Act was applicable to such an application, under the express provision of Article 179 time would begin to run from "the date of the final deerse or order of the Appellate Court;" and it is doubtful whether we can apply a decision under Article 179 of the old Limitation Act to a case under Article 181 of the new Limitiation Act, except by analogy. All that Article 181 condescends to tell us is that limitation begins to run from the date "when the right to apply accrues." The question is when does the right to apply accrue? Under Article 179 of the old Limitation Act, it accrued on the date of the final deeree or order of the Appellate Court. This provision is not to be found in Article 181: But peither is there any thing in Article 181 to contradict the view that the right to apply accraes on the date of the firal decree or order of the Appellate Court, where there is an appeal from the decision of the Court of first instance. Now the essential character of an application which follows a preliminary decree sale remains the same, though the provisions as to mortgage suits have been removed from the Transfer of Property Act to the Civil Procedure Code and the order passed on such an application is now salled a deeree for sale and not an order for sale. The shange effected by the Code of 1908 was a change in procedure so as to shut out such contentions as used to be raised that such applications were not under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. Neither the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 nor the Limitation Act of 1903 has answered the question, when the right to make the application assrues. That being so, we are, I think, entitled by analogy, to apply the provision of Article 179, third column, answering the question, when the right to apply accrues. As I have said before, the question is not free from difficulty; but, on the whole, I think, with great respect, that the view of Banerjee, J., in the case I have cited is right,

I must dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the semindar defendant in a suit commenced on the 12th April 1915 under section 14 of Regulation VIII of 1819 for reversal of the sale of a patni taluk held under the Regulation on the 15th May 1914. The validity of the sale was attacked on a variety of grounds. One of these grounds was that the requirements of section 8 of the Regulation had not been fulfilled; and this was formulated in the ninth issue in the fullowing terms:

"Were the Astom petition, notice, istahar and all the proceedings connected therewith, good and valid according to law and were notice and istahar duly served."

The District Judge has answered this question in favour of the putnidar and has, for this reason, set aside the sale as invalid. On the present appeal by the semindar, the conclusions of the District Judge have been assailed as erroneous.

Section 3, clause (2) of the Patni Regulation requires the cominair to present a position to the Collector containing a specification of any balance due to him or appoint tolandare.

BRUPENDRA MARAIN SINGH U. MADAR BUX.

This petition must be stuck up in some conspieuous part of the Collector's Cutcheri with a notice that if the amount elaimed be not paid before the 1st Jaistha following, the tenure of the defaulter will on that day be sold by public sale in liquidation. This must be read with section 10, which provides that at the time of sale, the notice previously stuck up in the Cutchery shall be taken down and the lots be called up successively in the order in which they may be found in that notice. This makes it plain that section contemplates a self-contained notice, which comprises not only a specification of the arrears and notification that the sale will be held on the 1st Jaietha if the amount elaimed be not paid before that date, but also a statement of the lots proposed sold in the order in which the sale will be held. This conclusion is confirmed by an important provision contained in section 8. clause (2) which is expressed in the following terms: "A similar notice shall be stuck up at the Sadar Outshery of the semindar himself, and a copy or extract of such part of the notice as may apply to the individual case shall be by him cent, to be similarly published at the Cutchery, or at the principal town or village upon the land of the defaulter." This leaves no room for doubt that the notice to be stuck up in the Cutchery of the Collector, like the petition, must contain specification of the balances that may be due to the reminiar conserned from all the painidars under him and that a copy or extract of such part of the notice as may apply to an individual defaulter stall be sent by the cem ndar to be similarly published at the Cutchery or at the principal town or village upon the land of the de-There can thus be no serious confaulter. troversy as to the correctness of the view adopted by this Court in the case of Bejoy Krishna v. Lakshmi Narain (1), regarding the contents of the notice which is required to be stuck up in the Cutchery of the Collector under section 8 and to be taken down at the time of the sale under section 10, so that the lots may be called up suscessively in the order in which they may be found in that notice.

We have now to judge by this test, whether the zemindar who is exclusively answerable for the observance of the forms prescribed in section 8, clause (2), has established that the statutory requirements were sarried out. The notice which has been produced (Exhibit P) obviously does not fulfil the requirements of the Regulation; it does not contain a specification of the balances due from all the patnidars; it mentions only the patni, now in suit, though the oral evidence makes it clear that "there were about forty Astam eases in which the Raja of Nashipore was interested." The zemindar has consequently been driven to bring forward oral evidence to establish that another notice, showing all the defaulting patnidars and the balances due from each of them was stuck up as required by the Regulation. Sailajaprased Sengupta deposes that while he was Jamanabis in the service of the Maharaja of Nashipore, a notice used to be drawn up showing all defaulting patnidars in two parts-one was published in the Sadar Cutchery of the zemindar and the other was sent to the Raj Pleader, Sasibhushan Chaudhuri, at Birbhum. The Pleader, who is also the am mukhtear of the semindar, has been examined. He asserts stuck up in the Collectorate two notices of As:am sales, one, of the mal. and the other, of the debutter mahal. The District Judge has not accepted this assertion, and after eareful consideration of all the eirenmetances, we are unable to disagree with him. The memory of the witness as to the time when the alleged notices were put up is elearly at fault. He asserts that he saw stuck up on the notice-board of the Collector the notice (Exhibit P) before the 12th or 13th Baisak, and he fortifies this statement by the further assertion that he examined the board between the 10th and the 13th. This must be incorrect, because the peop, who stuck up the notices, did not receive them for publication till the 14th Baisak. Apart from this, no explanation is forthcoming why notices in respect of indivdual patnis should be stuck up, though not required by the Regulation, and complete actices as required by the Regulation should be subsequently stuck up. Besides, it is a matter for legitimate comment that while the notice (Exhibit P) was stock up by the Collectorate peon in the discharge of his nenal duties, the alleged comprehensive notice was put up by the am-muktear. It does seem strange that a private individual should stick up the proper notice as required by the Regulation, while the inappropriate motion is stack up by the officer concerned. evidence also shows that notice-board is in a glass case, that there are iron-safes and chests about a cubit below the place where the notices are hang, and that a sentry "armed with gun" walks up and down by that place. An attempt by a stranger to stick up notice on a notice-board so placed could not fail to attract attention, and independent evidence might be expected of the endeavour made by the witness to comply with the requirements of the Statute. is finally the significant fact that the notices alleged to have been stack up by the witness on the notice board of the Collector were not found on the records, which contained, however, the notice (Exhibit P). In these circumstances, we are not prepared as a Court of Appeal to pronounce the opinion that the view taken by the Trial Court is erronsous. But even if it were conceded that the requisite notice had been put up by the am-muitear as alleged by him, there is no evidence to show that it was taken down at the time of the sale as required by section 10 and that the lots were called up successively in the order in which they stood in that notice. Indeed, the notice does not appear to have been seen by any one except the am multear. In this connec. tior, we must take the statement of Upendranath Sadhu, who was the revenue Perhkar of the Ocllector at the time, that the Maharaja of Nashipore always has a separate petition for each tenure. witness was present with the Collector when the paini was sold and so also was the am-muktear of the zemindar. The witness asserts that the am muktear filed before the Collector a list of arrears and the Muffasil notice, that the witness read them to the Collector who signed them and then the sale took place. To the same effect is the testimony of Anantalal Ghosal, another assistant in the Collectorate who was present at the sale. The evidence of Surendra Mohan Kar, who was the Naib Nazir of the Collectorate at the time, does not afford the slightest indication that the notice alleged to have been put up by the am-muttear had ever been stuck up or seen by anybody or taken down at the time of the sale. He asserts that on the 27th April, that is, the 14th Baisakh, the records of the Astam case were made over to Sheikh Amin the peon (since deceased) for publication, that the witness himself went later and found that the resords were hung up in the proper place that they remained there till the day of sale, and that on that day the records were brought down and arranged by the witness and sent to the revenue Peshkar with reports of service by the peon. The witness added that from the time of publication until they were returned to the Munshikhana, they remained in charge of the Nazir (who has died sinse) and that he himself had never notised any record short when the record was brought down. If the additional notice, alleged to have been put up by the am-muktear himself, had been on the notice board when the records were brought down on the day of eale and arranged by this witness, it could hardly have escaped his notice. a review of the evidence relevant to this question, we bold, in consurrence with the District Jadge, that the cemindar has not discharged the burden, which the law imposes upon him, to establish that a notice fulfilling the requirements of section 8 was stuck up in some conspicuous part of the Cutchery of the Collector; the only notice which is shown to have been stuck up does not satisfy the statutory requirements. This by itself is fatal to the sale; for, as repeatedly emphasised by this Court as also by the Judicial Committee, strict conformity with the requirements of the Regulation in respect of the contents and service of the notice mentioned in sestions 8 and 10 is essential to sesure a valid sale; Maharajah of Burdwan v. In the matter of Arbitration between Jainarain Babulal and Maraindas Janinal.

In view of our conclusion on this point, it is not necessary to investigate whether there was due service of the notices at the Sadar Cutsbery of the cemindar and at the Catchery or at the principal town or village upon the land of the defaulter. The District Judge has hell that the temindar has failed to prove by satisfactory evidence that those notices were really or properly published. His eriticisms on the evidence may, in some places, seem unduly searching, but it is needless for us to embark upon a review of his conclusion based upon an apprecia. tion shirfly of oral testimony, as, in our opinion, the sale must be cancelled on the ground already stated.

The result is that the decree made by the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 10, 11, scope of—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899)—Reference to arbitration—Award—Suit to set aside award filed—Stay of award proceedings.

Sections 10 and 11 of the Civil Procedure Code are concerned with the law of procedure and the mere user of the word "suit" in section 10 does not restrict its applicability to suits alone but the section can be extended to civil miscellaneous proceedings by virtue of section 14', Civil Procedure Code, if it is otherwise applicable. [p. 798, col. 1.]

Once an award is made, there is no equitable reason for staying proceedings under it because a suit is filed to set it aside. [p. 799, col. 1.]

An order under section 151, Civil Procedure Code is to be made when the ends of justice require it or to frustrate an abuse of the process of the Court, and where in an application to stay proceedings under an award neither of the conditions prevail

there should be no stay. [p. 799, col. 2.]

Parties entered into contract of sale of certain bales of cloth with the usual clause as to reference to arbitration of any disputes arising between the parties. Certain disputes arose and one party called upon the other party to join them in referring to arbitration and name their arbitrator. The other party failed to do so The first party nominated arbitrators, one on their own behalf and the other on behalf of the second party. Poth the parties were present before the arbitrators who, after hearing them, made the award. The arbitrators then filed their award in the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court and notices were issued to the parties to show cause why the award should not be filed. Objections were filed. The other party Lad filed a sait previous to the award at Delhi for a declaration that there was no contract between the parties and an appeal was pending in that case in the Lahore High Court, After the award the second party filed another suit against the first party in the Sub-Judge's Court at Delhi questioning the validity of the arbitration proceedings. An application was filed in the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court that pending the appeal in the Lahore High Court and the suit in the Sub-Judge's Court, Delhi the hearing of the petition to file the award be stayed under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code:

Held, that section 10 of the Civil Frocedure Code did not apply to the case as the parties in the proceedings sought to be stayed were not identical with those in the Delhi suits and as the Delhi Court was not competent to grant the relief claimed in the application JUDGMENT,—This is an Procedure Civil section 10. nnder Code, read with scotion 141, Civil Prosedure Code for stay of proceedings in Judisial Missellaneous No. 72 of 1921 which is a petition under section 11, clause (2) of Act IX of 189) for filing an award. discussing the legal aspect of the applieations it is necessary to set out all the eiroumstances that have led to it.

The firm of Jai Narain Babulal alleged that the firm of Naraindas Janimal of Delbi had entered into a contract with them for the parchase of several bales of white mulls under various indents, which contained the usual reference clause to arbitration in the event of any disputes between the parties. Certain disputes did arise and the firm Jai Narain Babulal ealled upon Naraindas Janilal to join them in referring them to arbitration and to name their arbitrator, and, as the latter failed to do so, they executed a reference on the 1st July 1920 in favour of two European merchants as arbitrators, nominating one on behalf of themselves and one on behalf of Naraindas Janimal. Both the parties were present before the arbitrators who, after hearing them, made their award on the 20th January 1921 for the payment of a sum of Rs. 48,000 odd to Jai Narain Babulal by Naraindas Janimal. On 17th February 1921 the arbitrators filed the award in this Court, and usual notice was issued to Naraindas Janimal to show sause why the award should not be filed. have filed their objections to it which have not yet been considered.

Now, Naraindae Janimal were undoubt. edly aware that Jai Narain Babulal contemplated a reference of the disputes between them to arbitration, and evidently with the view of fore-stalling them, filed a suit against them on the 8th August 1919 in the Court of the First Class Sub Judge, Delhi, for a declaration that there was no contract between the parties, and that, even if there was one, it was vitiated by fraud and misrepresentation, and hence Jai Narain Babulal could not enforce the arbitration clause and should be restrained from doing so. This suit was dismissed on a preliminary point on the 28th January 1920. An appeal was filed against the order of dismissal in the Lahore High Court and has been admitted to hearing. An application for temporary injunction restraining reference to arbitration had been presented and granted by the Sub Judge but was dissharged by High Court.

On the 22nd January 1921, shortly after the award, Naraindae Janimal filed a second suit in the Court of the Sub Judge of Delhi against Jai Narain Babulal questioning the validity of the arbitration proceedings as the matters involved were already the subject of a pending suit and prayed that the award be set aside and cancelled. This suit has not been disposed off.

It is contended on behalf of Naraindas Janiram that as there is an appeal pending in the Lahore High, Court arising out of the suit for a declaration that it be held that there was no contract between the parties and consequently the arbritation clause was not enforceable, and, secondly, as there is a suit pending in the Court of the Sub-Judge seeking to set aside the award, the hearing of the petition to file the award in this Court should be stayed, as it directly and substantially covers the same ground, and the same parties are concerned therein.

Admittedly, the first suit was filed in the Court of the Sub Judge, Dehli, before the reference to arbitration, and the second after the passing of the award. Further, it is well established that the word "suit" in section 10, Civil Procedure Code includes an appeal, and, therefore, as an appeal is pending against the first suit and has been admitted to regular hearing, there can be no bar to the applicability of section 10, if it is otherwise applicable.

The first question is as to the applicability of section 10 to proceedings to file an award under the Indian Arbitration Act.

There is no doubt that a petition presented in Court for the filing of an award is to be reekoned as a missellaneous judicial proceeding and not as a suit. The award does not sulminate in a deeree, though it is enforceable as if it were a decree and may be executed as if it were a decree, Now section 10. Oivil Procedure Code, refers to the stay of "suits" and it has been contended that this section is inapplicable in the present ease as what is sought to be stayed is not a suit bat a missellaneous proceeding. To this argument, however, applicant's Counsel has retorted that, even if the word "suit" be construed in its strict technical sense, section 141, Civil Proeedure Code, applies to miscellaneous proecedings the procedure provided in the Court in regard to suits so far as it can be made applicable. Mr. Rupchand challenged the applicability of section 141, Civil Procedure Code, to section 10, Civil In the matter of Arbitration between JAINABAIN BABULAL AND NARAINDAS JANIMAL.

Procedure Code on the ground that both sections 10 and 11, Civil Procedure Code, are not concerned with procedure but with substantive law. In my opinion this is rather a bold assertion. Both sections 1) and 11 belong to the domain of adjective law. Section 10 bars the trial by one Court of matters which are on process of adjudication by another Court and is an application to pending suits of the principle of res judicata. The rule in section relates to matters sub judice and that in section 11 to matters which have passed into rem judicatom. Now, as said in Casperz on Estoppel and Res udicata "the rules of res judicata are rules of procedure which is but the machinery of the law after all the enannel and means whereby law is administered and justice reached," and in Sita Ram v. Amir Begam (1) it was said, the plea of resjudicata as a bar to an action belongs to the provision of adjective laws." In my opinion both sections 10. and 11, Civil Procedure Code, are concerned with the law of procedure, and the mere user of the word "suit" in the former section does not restrict its applicability to suits alone but the section could be extended to sivil miscellaneous proceedings by virtue of section 141, Civil Procedure Code, if it is otherwise applicable.

Now, one of the essential conditions to attract the applicability of section 10 is, that the same party must be concerned in both the proseedings or the parties under any of them claim, litigating whom under the same title. The application before me is one by the arbitrators to file an award, the parties in the suits at Delhi being respondents one and two respectively. The arbitrators have no interest in the Delhi suits which are to be fought out as between Jai Narain Babulal and Naraindas Janimal. Prima facie, therefore, the parties in the two proceedings are not identical. To meet this aspect of the case, Mr. Kimatrai has taken up a very ingenione point which, so far as I can see, is res integra. He contends that under the Indian Arbitration Act it is not the Court that files an award but the arbitrator does so under section 11 of the Act and unless it is limited or set aside it becomes forceable as if it were a decree of the Court under section 14. Though on the presentation of an award in Court and the issue of a notice to the parties concerned to show cause why the award should not be filed, the application is described one for the filing of an award, yet the real point for decision by the Court is not whether the award should be filed but whether it should be remitted to the arbitrators or set aside on good grounds shown. Hence, when objestions are lodged to an award, the sonfliet is confined exclusively to the two parties whether the objections are to be upheld, and the arbitrator is a mera figurehead. Therefore, says Mr. Kimatrai, the parties in the proceedings before me are identical with the parties in the Dalhi suits. Now, under rule 7 of the rules framed by this Court under section 20 of the Arbitration Act, and which is virtually the ipsissima verba of rule & of the rules framed by the Bombay High Court, upon any application under the Act the Judge shall direct notice to be given to all persons specified in the petition requiring them to show cause within the time specified in the notice why the relief sought should not be granted; and if no sufficient cause be shown the Judge shall pass such order as the eircumstances of the case may require. Section 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act states that, "an award on a submission, on being filed in the Court in accordance with the foregoing provisions, shall (unless the Court remits it to the re consideration of the arbitrators or umpire, or sets it aside), be enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court." Now, it is obvious that though the filing of the award is the act of the arbitrators, the award does not become enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court immediately on its presentation to the Court. The Court allows an opportunity to the parties adversely affected by it to move to have it set aside or remitted to the arbitrators, and if, within the period allowed, no application is made to the Court for either of these purposes, the award is enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court. The objections to an award, therefore, cannot be dissociated from the petition to file the award. Further, I do not think it correct to say that on objections being lodged against an award, the disputes are relegated only to the parGHAPOR KHAN U. PRAG NARATAN.

ties concerned in the result of the award. The arbitrator is as much interested in his award being upheld as the party in whose favour it is made; in fast, in view of the nature of the objections that can be raised to an award under the Indian Arbitration Act, the dispute substantially converges between the arbitrator and the party prejudicially affected by it. I cannot, therefore, agree with Mr. Kimatrai's view that on objections being filed to an award they are to be considered divorced from the petition to file the award, and that the only parties concerned are those that referred their disputes to arbitration. I am, therefore, of opinion that the parties in the proceedings sought to be stayed are not identical with those, in the Delhi suits. Another essential condition to render section 10 applicable is that the Court wherein the suit has been previously instituted has jurisdiction to grant the relief elaimed. As I have remarked above, both the suits filed by Naraindas Janimal were in the Court of the First Olass Sab-Judge, Delbi. I have described the nature of the two suits. The proceedings before me are concerned with an application under the Indian Arbitration Act, and that the award should be set aside. (Section 14 of this Aet) on the ground of misconduct on the part of the arbitrators, and that the award has been improperly prosured. Admittedly, the First Class Sub-Judge has no jurisdiction under the Indian Arbitration Act either to consider an application for filing an award or any objections to its being filed. It is, therefore, not competent for that Court to grant the relief elaimed in the application before me. It is probable that in the second suit filed in the Delhi Court, the award will be attacked inter alia on the ground of its having been improperly procured and it may be contended that it should be set aside on the ground of missonduct on the part of the arbitrators. But this suit was filed only after the award was passed though prior to the petition for filing it in the Court. Once an award is made I see no equitable reason for chesking its legitimate consequences because a suit has been filed to set it aside. And a party who has obtained an award in his favour under the Indian Arbitration Act is not to he deterred from reaping the fruits of his sussess, unless by an order of the Court he is prevented from executing it. Farther, it must be remembered that the jurisdiction of a Court in setting aside an award is limited. Arbitrators are judges both of law and facts and an erroneous decision by them is not by itself sufficient ground for setting aside an award, whereas in a suit an award may be attacked on grounds which are not open under the Indian Arbitration Act.

It was finally argued that this Court should exercise its inherent powers under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, and stay the present proceedings. Practically, the only ground put forward for invoking the aid of this section is that both the parties are residents of Delhi and it would be highly inconvenient for members of the firm of Naraindas Janimal to some to Karachi for the purposes of the application. One of the members of this firm did attend before the aribtrators, who held their sittings in Karachi and in view of the number of the references to arbitration, in which the firm was interested. he must have attended on more than one An order under section 151 OSCASSIOD. is to be made when the ends of justice require it or to frustrate an abuse of the prosess of the Court, neither of which conditions prevail in the present case.

I reject the application under section 10 with costs on the applicants. By consent of the respective parties, this order governs similar applications in Miscellaneous Judicial Nos. 67 to 74.

Possession of land, suit for—Trees, removal of ancillary prayer for—Limitation Act (IX of 1903), Sch. I, Art. 142.

BUN LIFE ASSURANCE CO., OF CANADA D. CORPORATION OF MADRAS.

A suit for possession of land coupled with an ancillary prayer for the removal of the trees planted on it is governed by Article 142, Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

Badal v. Babu Nageshwar Bakhsh Singh, 52 Ind. Cas 858; 6 O. L. J. 329 and Musharf Ali v. Iftkhar Husain, 10 A. 614; A. W. N. (1888) 257; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 427, distinguished from.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 22nd March 1921, up-holding that of the Munsif, Purwa, dated the 27th November 1920.

Mr. Maheshwar Prasad Asthana, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT .- This is a second appeal for the possession of plots Nos. 21 and 82 in Mauza Kudra in the Purwa Tabeil of the Unao District on the allegations that the land was formerly grove, that it ceased to be grove and ensheated to the Zemindar some thirty years ago and that the defendants have taken unlawful possession by planting new trees in the year 1915. The lower Appellate Court has found that the land did cease to be a grove and did escheat to the Zemindar, that the plaintiff has been in possession of it within limitation and that all the trees, for the removal of which the plaintiff asks, were planted within twelve years of the suit, The finding that the land ceased to be grove is strongly supported by the entry of the last Settlement which the lower Appellate Court has disenseed, and is not now open to attack. The main ground of appeal has been that the suit is governed by Article 129 of the Limitation Act, and the learned Pleader for the appellant has referred to a desision of a Judge of this Court printed as Badal v. Babu Nageshwar Bakhsh Singh (1) in support of his view. That case purported to follow the decision in Musharf Ali v. Iftkhar Husain (2), but the latter ease was not at all parallel to that now before me. It was purely a elaim for removal of trees on waste land belonging to the Zamindar and the defend. ants had no right in the land of any sort whatever. Here the suit was, on the face of it, one for resovery of possession of immoveable property governed by Article 142 of the Limitation Act. Trees being things permanently attached to the earth are immoveable property under the definition given in section 3 of the General Clauses Ast for the purpose of the Limitation Act. The answer. ing defendant, Ghafur Khan, (the other defendants have admitted the plaintiff's elaim) in his written statement, paragraph 14, elaimed to have been in adverse proprietary possession of the grove for more than twelve years and he said the same in his oral statement. It may be that he only elaims possession in the character of a grove. holder. Nevertheless, he did set up adverse proprietary possession in answer to the claim; The prayer for removal of the recently planted trees is merely ausillary to the elaim for possession. It appears to me, therefore, that the Court below has rightly applied Article 142.

The appellant also relies on the fact that a Commissioner who was appointed to examine the spot reported one of the new trees to have been planted about thirteen years ago. The lower Appellate Court has considered this report and has come to the conclusion that the tree is not so old as alleged and that all the new trees were planted within twelve years. The decree of the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be upheld and I dismiss the appeal. I make no order as to costs as the respondent has not been respresented.

. When's case is stated to the High Court under rule 17 of Schedule IV to the Madras City Municipal Act (IV of 1919), that Court is not bound to give a decision on questions of law involved in the suit other than those comprised in the reference. [p. 803, col. 2.]

Mylapore Hindu Permanent Fund Limited v. Corporation of Madras, 31 M. 408; 18 M. L. J. 349; 3

M. L. T. 400, explained

Under the rules made under the Income Tax Act read in conjunction with section 8 of the Indian Life Assurance Companies Act (VI of 1912), the taxable income of a Life Insurance Company, which makes default in getting an actuarial valuation once in five years, is regarded as the aggregate of the interest, dividends and rents received by it during the previous year. [p. 807, col. 1.]

The onus lies on the Company to show that such income did not exceed hs. 26,000 in the year previous to the year of taxation to entitle it to the benefit of the proviso to rule 7 to Schedule IV of the Madras City Municipal Act. [p. 808, col. 1.]

Oase referred under rule 17, Schedule IV of the Madras City Municipal Act of 1919, by the Court of Small Causes, Madras, in Missellaneous Petition No. 61 of 1921 on its file for the decision of the High Court in respect of the following questions, vis ,

I. What is meant by the "gross income" of a Life Assurance Company for purposes of taxation under rule 7, Schedule IV of the Madras City Municipal Act?

Il. Is it sufficient compliance with the provisions of the Act for the Life Assurance Company to show that its gross income could not have exceeded Rs. 25,000 in the year immediately preceding the year of taxation for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the proviso? (It is deslared entitled to that benefit when it shows that its gross income received in or from the city has not exceeded Rs. 25,000).

III. Can payments of premia made in the first instance to sub-agents of the Company in the Mofussil and remitted by them to Madras be treated as part of the gross income of the Company received "in or from the City of Madras?"

This case coming on for hearing on the 6th and 7th of December 1921, upon perusing the Letter of Reference and judgment of the lower Court and the material records in the ease and upon hearing the arguments of Mesers. T. R. Veniatarama Bastri and A. V. Seekayya, for the Appellant, and the Advocate

General, and Mr. P. Doraiswamy Aiyangare for the Respondent, and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

Avers, J .- I have had the advantage of perusing the judgment which my learned brother is about to deliver, and I agree in the answers proposed by him to be given.

VESKATASCHE R. R.O. J .- The Chief Judgs of the Court of Small Causes has, under rule 17 of Schedule IV to Madrae Act IV of 1919. (the City Municipal Act), referred eartain questions for our decision.

Bafore stating the questions that have been so referred, I propose to set forth the facts that have led up to this reference.

The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada has its head office at Montreal. Quebec, and a branch office for India at Bombay, The Company has an agent at Madras who maintains an office and has clerks under him. This office, it is admitted. is not a branch office of the Sun Life Assur. anse Company, but is merely a local agency. There appears to have been a finding to this effect in a suit in the Court of Small Ouases. Madras, to which the Sun Life Assurance Company was a party, a finding which was accepted by the High Court.

Section 110 of the City Manieipal Act provides that every incorporated Company transacting business within the City shall pay; by way of lisense-fee "a half-yearly tax on ite paid up espital on the scale shown in the taxation roles in Schedule IV," and the Explanation to that sestion adds that "whenever a Company has an office, agent or firm to represent it for the purpose of transacting business in the city, such Company shall be deemed to transact business in the city." Under rule 7 of the Taxation Rules contained in Schedule IV of the Ast, the assessment is made to depend in the first instance upon the paid-up capital of the Company. (Class A) If such capital is over twenty lakhs of rupees, the half-yearly tax will be Rs. 1,000. (Class B) If it is more than ten but less than twenty lakhs of rupees, the assess, ment leviable is R1. 50) for the half year, There is, however, an important provise to this rule which shifts the basis of taxation in certain esses from the paid up capital to the "gross insome" of the Company. It is provided that "any Company, the head office or a branch or principal office of which is not in the city and which shows that its gross income received in or from the city has not, in the year immediately preceding the year of taxation, exceeded Rs. 25,000 shall pay only Rs. 125" for the half year.

The Starding Committee of the Corporation of Madrae, on the ground that this was a Company with a paid up eapital of more than ten lakes of rupees and less than twenty lakes of rupees, confirmed the assessment levied by the Revenue Officer, and placing the Company in the second or "B" Class fixed the assessment at Rs. 50C.

From this order an appeal was filed by the Company under rule 15 of Part V of Schedule IV to Madras Act IV of 1919 to the Court of Small Causes at Madras. The learned Chief Judge of that Court found that the gross income of the Company was considerably less than Rs. 25,000, that the Company discharged the onus that lay upon it under the proviso referred to above, and he held that the Company was liable to be assessed on that has and fixed the assessment at Rs. 125 for the half year. He delivered judgment on the 31st March 1921.

On the 11th April 1921, the Corporation of Madras applied to the Court of Small Causes that a case might be stated for a decision of the High Court on certain points; and on the 14th April 1921 the Company similarly applied that a case might be stated for a decision on certain other points.

The learned Chief Judge observes: "I have been asked to refer several points but consider the following questions of law to be of sufficient public interest for invoking the decision" of their Lordships the Judges of the High Court.

I. What is meant by the "gross income" of a Life Assurance Company for purposes of taxation under rule 7, Schedule IV of the Madras City Municipal Act?

II. Is it sufficient compliance with the provisions of the Act for the Life Assurance Company to show that its gross income could not have exceeded Re. 25,000 in the year immediately preceding the year of taxation for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the proviso? (It is declared entitled to that benefit when it shows that its gross income received in or from the city has not exceed. ed Re. 25,000).

III. Can payments of premia made in the first instance to sub-agents of the Company in the Mofuseil and remitted by them to. Madras be treated as part of the gross income of the Company "received in or from the City of Madras?"

Mr. Venkatarama Sastri on behalf of the Company ecnterded before us that it was open to him to argue on this reference the whole care and that he was not to be confined to the points specifically referred to us by the learned Chief Judge. His clients in their application to the Small Cause Court under rule 17 had asked that two further 'questions of law' might be 'stated for the decision of the High Court.' The Chief Judge presumably did not consider it necessary to refer them for our decision.

Rule 17 consists of two parts :-

(a) "The Small Cause Court may, if it thinks fit, state a case for the decision of the High Court."

(b) "The Court shall state a ease whenever a question of law is involved if either the Commissioner or the appellant applies in writing in that behalf." It seems unreasonable to hold that because a doubt is entertained on a particular question of law which leads to an application being made under rule 17 and to a care being stated, the High Court is bound to consider and decide all the questions of law involved in the care. In other words, it may be that the party applying, finding that the Judge does not accept his contention on a particular question of law out of several that arise in the case, applies, under rule 17, for a case being stated; does it follow that, the moment a case is stated to the High Court, either party is at liberty to argue before the High Court all the points of law that arise in the case and request its decision on all of them? The party who is dissatisfied with the terms of reference may have other remedies open to him; and I express no opinion on this point. The question before us is :- Is the High Court bound to decide questions other than the questions referred to it for desision? I am inclined to think that it is not. If the view contended for by the learned Vakil is correct, it will be open to either of the parties to ask the High Court to arrive at a decision upon the facts of the case, and, if necessary, to revise the findings of fact of the Small Cause Court, although the application to that Court under rule 17 was due to the existence of a question of law on which the party applying and the Judge held opposite views. It will searcely be disputed that this is a result not in the least contemplated by the Legislature, and I do not think that there is anything in the terms of rule 17 to compel us to accept the contention which will lead to this extremely undesirable and unforeseen result.

It may be useful to refer to some analogous provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 113 provides: "Sabject to such conditions and limitations as may be pressribed, any Court may state a sass and refer the same for the opinion of the High Court, and the High Court may make such order thereon as it thinks fit."

Order XLVI, rules 1, 2 and 3 contain an amplification of section 113.

Rule 1 says that "when any question of law or usage arises on which the Court entertains a reasonable doubt, the Court may draw up a statement of the facts of the case and the point on which doubt is entertained and refer such statement with its own opinion on the point for the desision of the High Court."

Rule 2 contemplates a decree being passed or order being made contingent upon the decision of the High Court on the point referred.

Rule 3 provides that "the High Court shall decide the point so referred and shall transmit a copy of its judgment to the Court by which the reference was made, an! such Court shall, on the receipt thereof, proceed to dispose of the case in conformity with the . decision of the High Court,"

These provisions clearly contemplate the following paragraph :ease being argued only in regard to the point referred and the decision being given also on the point so referred.

I may in passing refer to section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act XV of 1882, which also is substantially to the same offeet.

Hindu Permanent Fund Limited v. poration of Madras (1). It is a desision upon

The learned Vakil has relied on Mylapore sections 176 and 177 of the Madras Municipal Act III of 1904, which correspond to rule 17 under discussion. The wording of the sections of the old Act and rule 17 is almost identical, and any slight difference that may exist is immaterial. I am, however, nuable to agree that Mylapore Hindu Permanent Fund Limited v. Corporation of Madras (1) supports the contention put forward. It does not decide that when a case is stated, the High Court is bound to deside every question of law arising in it. In the opening paragraph of the judgment, the question referred is stated, and the judgment proceeds to say: "the law hardly contemplates a reference in such general and abstract terms. It only enables the Magis. trates to state a case on any appeal before them, and refer the same for the desision of the Righ Court; that is, to state all the matters necessary for the decision of the particular case before them on appeal and to refer the ease so stated for decision."

This is an authority for the proposition that the High Court is not bound to answer an abstract and general question of law; the terms of reference must show how the question of law propounded affects the particular case on hand, and the High Court will answer it only so far as it bears on the particular case. The question referred for the decision of the High Court in Mylapore Hindu Permanent Fund Limited v. Corporation of Madras (1). is, "Does the word 'eapital' used in Schedula V of the Municipal Act III of 1904 mean exclusively nominal capital or does it also include paid-up capital and, if so, should it be taken to mean paid-up eapital exclusively." The learned Judges, however, decided the question with reference to the facts of the ease and their answer is contained in the Oar desision, therefore, is that, with reference to the Hylapore Hindu Permanent Fund (Limited), the word capital in Schedule V of the Madras Municipal Act III of 1904 means paid-up capital,"

I, therefore, have no hestitation in hold. ing that we are not bound to give a desision on the questions involved in the suit other than the questions referred to us by the Ohief Judge of the Court of Small Causes.

To deal with the questions referred to us, it would be necessary to describe very . briefly the main principles underlying the saleulations on the basis of which premis for .

SIN LIFE ASSURANCE CO. OF CANADA v. CORPOSATION OF MADRAS.

assurances are fixed and illustrating by a concrete example how the premiums arrived at, besides being sufficient to meet the liabilities incurred, enable Life Assurance Companies to earn a profit. A statement of these principles would necessarily lead to a consideration of the sources of surplus or profit with which alone we are concerned.

Before it is possible for a Company to fix the premium it must receive in return for an undertaking to pay a specified amount at death, it is necessary for the Company to know when the life or lives insured will terminate. The tables based upon observations of a large number of lives give the information required and are known as Mortality Tables. We take the following from a treatise on Life Assurance.

"The fundamental facts which a Mertality Table supplies us with are the numbers living at each age from the earliest to the latest year included in the Table, and the numbers dying in each year. From these two series of facts all the information in regard to mortality that is required for Life Assurance can be obtained. Let us suppose now that there are 10,000 people, all at the age of 40, who wish to arrange for a payment of £ 100 to the executors of such of them as may die before reaching the age of 41. The Mortality Table informs us that 103 of these people will die during the year, and as the death of each person involves the payment of £ 100, the sum of £ 10,300 will be required to meet the claims arising cut of these 103 deaths. It is, therefore, necessary for each of the 10,000 persons to pay £103 cr £ 1.0.7 in order to secure the payment of £ 100 to their executors, should death cecur within the year. This leaves out of account any benefit that may be obtained by interest earned upon the £ 10,200 before being required for the payment of the elaime, and takes no notice of the necessary expenses of transacting the business, but it shows clearly the use of the Mortality Table. If we had no experience to guide us as to the number of people who would die within the year, we might either charge too large an amount for the assurance, or we might charge too small a sum, and not bave enough money available to meet the elaims when they became due. In the instance just given, the £ 100 is the sum assured, the £ 1'03 paid to secure the sum assured in the event of death is called the premium, and a policy of this nature is called a Term Policy for one year. The premiums paid by those who did not die were used in paying the claims arising from the deaths that occurred, and the value received by the survivors for the premiums of £ 1'03 was the certainty of their beirs receiving £ 100 should the assured die."

It would be next necessary to indicate the part played by interest in the subject. of Life Assurance. The rate of interest is indeed a very important factor affecting Assurance, £ 100 carning £ 3 per annum will amount in 50 years to £ 438; at 6 per cent. to £1,842. The inform. ation necessary is obtained from Interest Tables which are prepared and on the basis of which calculations are made by Life Assurance Companies. It is important to know not merely what £100 will amount to at a given rate of interest in a certain number of years but also how much must now be lent or invested so that in a certain number of years it will at a given rate of interest increase to £ 100. This is called the present value of £ 100 due so many years hence at such a rate per cent.

With the aid of Mortality and Interest Tables the Companies are in a position to combine the result of Mortality and Interest and to have regard to them in fixing their premia. Going back to the illustration already given, we shall have to examine how the results obtained from Interest Tables affect it.

I shall again quote from the book already referred to. "Let ue now re-consider the example, given in the chapter on Mortality, of 10,000 people aged 40, who wish to arrange for a payment of £ 100 to the executors of such of them as may die before reaching the age of 41. We find from the Mortality Table that 133 of them will die and that, therefore, £ 10,300 will be required at the end of the year to meet the claims arising out of these 103 deaths. On turning to the table showing the amount of £ 1 at the ond of one year at 3 per cent. we find it is £ 1'03 and the amount of £ 10,000 is, therefore, £ 10,300; so it is only necessary for the 10,000 people affecting the assurance to pay this amount, pro rati between them at the commencement of the year. Thus the premium that each would have to pay would be £ 1 instead of the £ 1'03 which we saw would have been necessary when leaving interest out of the question."

The premium ascertained in this manner is the net or the pure premium; and in order to arrive at the office premium which is what a policy holder has to pay, an amount is added to the net premium known technically as the "loading."

"In the case of policies which do not participate in profits, the loading only has to be sufficient to cover the expenses and such margin as may be considered necessary for contingencies, such as the death rate being in excess of that provided for by the Mortality Table or the rate of interest carned on the funds of the Company being less than the rate of interest assumed in calculating the premium rates."

"In the case of policies that participate in profits, the loading is increased in order to provide, not merely for the expenses incurred, but for the bonness or profits that will be added to the policies in the future"—(See also Encyclorælia

The addition of loading is thus made to make provision for the expenses of the management of the business and for ther to provide against adverse fluctuations both in regard to mortality and in regard to interest.

In dealing with the subjects of mortality, interest and loading, I have indicated the main sources of surplus or profit.

A favourable mortality means that the policy holders live longer than according to the Mortality Table it was expected they would live. Their deaths are bound to some some day, but the longer duration of their lives implies the receipt by the Assurance Company of a larger number of premiums, and involves a longer time during which interest can accumulate on the funds, which are larger in amount owing to the claims not having to be paid so soon as the Mortality Table contemplates."

How does interest form a source of surplan? The originally assumed rate of interest in making the calculations may have been 3 per cent. but the interest actually earned may amount to 4 per cent, and the difference constitutes the surplus.

Smaller expenses than the additions (loading) made to the net premiums constitute the third cause of a surplus.

These are considered the chief sources of surplus or profit—(1) a lighter or more favourable mortality than that assumed, (2) a higher yield of interest than that calculated upon, and (3) smaller expenses than the additions made to the net premiums. Of the three, the two latter sources are considered more important. (Vile Life Assurance by S. G. Leigh, page 55.)

A certain amount of profit is obtained from policies that are surrendered or that lapse.

It seems to be generally agreed that it is questionable after making all allowances whether the indirect loss to the Company from surrenders does not nearly or quite balance the direct gain, and it is stated that the best offices much prefer the policies remaining on their books to their being surrendered.

It seems also to be assumed that though policies that lapse may result in a profit, they cannot as a general rule be regarded as a very appreciable source of surplus.

Having made these observations in regard to the general principles that regulate the profit of a Life Assurance Company, I shall proceed to examine the conclusion of the learned Chief Judge. He, no doubt, ignored in his judgment all sources of surplus other than interest. But, in my opinion, his finding has not been affected in substance by this omission.

Under the City Municipal Act of 1919 the Company has to show that in the year immediately preceding the year of taxation its gross income did not exceed Rs. 25,000, before the Company can claim the berefit of the proviso. We have it on record that the total premia received from the whole of the Presidency of Madras amounted to Rs. 4,13,550. It has also been found that the avarage rate of interest earned during the year by the Company on the net invasted ledger assets was 5°68 per cent.

It has been pointed out that even if, for the sake of argument it should be assumed that the average rate realised by the Sun Life Assurance Company was 6 per cent. and that the whole interest realised represented the profit of the Company, in order to be able to earn Rs. 25,000 per annum, the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada should have received premia from the City of Madras alone amounting to Rs. 4,16,666 10.8. We have seen that its receipts for the whole Presidency amounted to only Re. 4,13,550. A portion of the interest earned has to be returned to the policy-holders, as the calculations I have adverted to above, which form the basis of the premia fixed, elearly indicate. The profit earned by the Company on this head can only be the difference between the figures calculated on the basis of the rate of interest assumed and the rate of interest actually carned. The Sun Life Assurance Company in fixing its premia, having assumed a rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. (the rate assumed by this Company in its interest calculations, is, we are informed, 21 per cent.), its profit from the source of interest sculd only be the amount which represents the difference between the two srms calculated at 5'68 per cent. and 32 per cent. or 2.18 per cent. The learned Chief Judge for the purposes of his judgment assumed that the Company is liable to be assessed with reference to the total amount of interest earned by it, that is "interest at 5.68 per cent." upon the premia received. The amount arrived at falls short of Rs. 25,000 and the learned Chief Judge holds that the Company is entitled to the benefit of the proviso. The question to be determined would be, therefore, - oculd the profits of the Company in any event exceed the total interest earned upon the premia? We have seen that a slight variation in the rate of interest does produce an enormous difference in the interest carned, and I have pointed out that interest forms one of the three chief scurees of surplus or profit.

The difficulty in dealing with this care arises from the fact that, under the Municipal Act of 1919, the Company must state its gross income received in the year preceding the year of taxation. It is said that it is impracticable to make an annual actuarial valuation and that it is extremely difficult to make such a valuation with reference to any particular city or area in the case of a Life Assurance Company operating in different parts of the world. The Company in a petition addressed to the Commissioner of the Corporation of Madras in connection with this assessment gives the following extract from Young on Insurance: "but a valuation is in no sense a stocktaking" in the enstomery acceptation of that term. * * The two operations are essentially distinguished from each other and differ ex toto. In the ordinary stock taking the trader is concerned with the value of his articles at the current prices of the period, and his results are obtained by a mechanical arithmetical process competent to average intelligence. In a valuation, however, the probable future requires to be earefully serutinized and gauged in the light of the experience acquired both as regards the rate of mortality likely to be exhibited among the members, the rate of interest at which the accumulated fund and prospective premiums can probably be soundly and profitably invested, and the adequacy of the loading reserved for anticipated demands. And it is to be noted that this provision is not limited to the ensuing valuation period only, but necessarily extends to the entire possible duration of the whole of the exist. ing contracts, comprising a range of time of thirty years and upwarde."

The rules made by the Governor in Conneil under the Ircome Tax Act VII of 1918 (in virtue of the power conferred by section 43, sub section 1 of the said Act) proceed on the basis of a periodical actuarial valuation for assessing to income-tax Life Assurance Companies. If the periodical actuarial valuation has been made within 5 years previous to the year in which the assessment has to be made, then the income shall be determined with reference to the average net profits disclosed by the last preceding valuation. If the periodical actuarial valuation has been made more than 5 years previous to the year of assessment, the taxable income shall be determined with reference to interest, dividends and rents received by the Company during the previous year, that is to say, with reference to returns upon investments." (See p. 59 of the Ireome Tax Manual-Madras, 1919).

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE CO. OF CANADA D. CORPORATION OF MADRAS.

I have used the word "Interest" in this judgment as a compendious term meaning "interest, dividend and rent".

The Indian Life Assurance Companies Act VI of 1912 directs every Life Assurance Company to make periodical investigations including actuarial valuations ones in five years unless the instrument constituting the Company directs investigations to be made at shorter intervals (vide section 8 of the Act).

Reading, therefore, the rules made under the Income Tax Act in conjunction with this provision of Act V1 of 1912, we arrive at this result, namely, that in default of there being an actuarial valuation within five years of the year in question, the taxable income is to be regarded as the aggregate of the interest, dividends and rents reserved by the Company during the previous year.

I think that we shall be justified in deducing from this that it was intended to make the Company that is in default pay the maximum amount of tax and that this object is accomplished by making the Company pay a tax upon the entire amount of the yield produced by its investments.

It may be said that there is no fixed rale in regard to the amount of profits that can be earned by a Life Assurance Compuny; but surely experts conversant with matters pertaining to Life Assurance must beable to say that in view of competition among the conserns it would no' be possible for a Company of standing to earn profits beyond a certain limit. We take it that the rules framed under the Income Tax Act contain an indication that the interest &. from investments constitute the maximum of profits. In the very nature of things it is impossible to state the income for a particular period of a Life Assurance Company with accuracy; and the most eareful salsulation can only be regarded as an estimate. I find the following passage in an historical review of Life Assurance by Andres. "In the year 1870 the average rate of interest earned by the funds of life offices, after deducting income tax, was 4'471 per cent. which declined to 3'771 per cent. in the year 1899, but has since increased to nearly 4 per cent. after deducting incometax, and from the increased skill and attention brought to bear upon the quastion factory yield, there is little doubt that the number of life offices now obtaining a net average yield of at least 4 per cent. will be rapidly increased. At the same time an affort is being made to persuade the Government to mete out what is no more than justice to Assurance Office, transacting life business only, by legislation which will enable them to be assessed for income tax on the basis of average annual profit, in lieu of the present very unfair method of assessment on interest revenue."

I may also quote here a passage from Insurance Guide and Hand-book by Andras— Volume I, page 219:

"During the last few years attempts have been made by Life Insurance Companies to obtain a revision of the basis of taxation, but so far without any definite success, although the Government seem disposed to view the matter favourably,"

The grievance from which relief is sought is, of course, that those Companies which are purely, or mainly, life offices, as distinguished from "composite" concerns, are assessed on their interest from investments in lieu of on their profits.

It is hardly necessary for me to point out here that the interest earned by an office on its life fund is not profit in any sense of the word, but rather the "raw material" of the business. It is not difficult to imagine a case in which a Company might be in receipt of, and taxed upon, a very large income from interest, in spite of the fact that it was earning no profit at all. Indeed, it might even be totally insolvent, on account of the low average rate of interest earned, or of the heavy rates of mortality or expenses experienced."

The idea underlying the above passages is that assessment to tax on the basis of yield from investments entails a hardship upon Life Assurance Companies.

In the present case applying this test which, from the point of view of a Life Assurance Company, is a most unfavourable test to apply, the gross income falls short of R., 25,000. We may observe in passing that Rs. 4,13,550 is the total of the premia received from the whole of the Madras Presidency and not merely from the City of Madras.

On the materials that have been placed before us I am unable to say that the learned Chief Judge is wrong in his view on what I think is really a question of fact, that the profits of the Company cannot in any event exceed Rs. 25,000. We have not been referred to any works on the subject of Life Assurance or to any judicial pronouncements which tend to show that a different conclusion is possible.

In the judgment of the learned Chief Judge it is assumed that the Standing Committee of the Corporation of Madras was of the opinion that the amounts received as premia constituted the gross income of the Company. A large portion of the judgment is devoted to a criticism of this view, and the learned Vakil for the Corporation seems to have conseded before the Small Cause Court that he could not support that extreme view; and the learned Advocate General who appeared before us for the Corporation did not put forward that contention on behalf of his clients.

Dealing with the questions that have been referred to us for our decision, I think it is sufficient to say in answer to questions Nos. I and 2 that the Sun Life Assurance Company has discharged the onus that lay upon it under the proviso to role 7 of the taxation rules, by showing that its income could not have exceeded Rs. 25,000, and the circumstance that the Company has not been able to state positively what its actual gross income was would not disentitle it to the benefit conferred under the said proviso.

In regard to question No. 3 the learned Chief Judge has held that the Act refers not merely to income received from the Oity of Madras, but also to the income received in the City. The contention of the Company on this point was that in addition to the principal Agency at Madras there were numerous sub-agencies in the Mofassil and that when the Mofassil policy holders paid their premia to the sabagents who remitted the moneys to Madras, these amounts should not be taken into account in making the assessment. On the facts I have stated above it would be unnecessary to deal with this question because on the assumption that the interest upon the premia collected in the whole of the Presidency constituted the income of the Company such interest amounted to less than Rs. 25,000. The point involved in this question is merely of academic interest, and I may in this connection once again refer to Mylapore Hindu Permanent Fund Limited v. Corporation at Madras (1). It may be inferred from it that the Court was unwilling to answer an abstract question of law and I am similarly of the opinion that unless a decision of the question is necessary for the determination of the case before it, the Court must decline to answer the question referred to it. We do not, therefore, propose to give our decision on question No. 3.

Partition, suit for - Plaintiff not entitled to share - Defendant, whether can get his share partitioned.

In a partition suit it is the right of every defendant to ask to have his own share divided off and given to him and he is qua his claim to a share on partition in the position of a plaintiff. [p 809, col. 2.]

But where the plaintiff is held to have no share in the property sought to be partitioned, there is no partition suit before the Court and the maxim cessante ratione, cessat ipsa lex applies and the defendant has no right to ask the Court to inquire into and determine his share in any part of the property, that is sought to be divided. JUDGMENT.—An interesting point has arisen in this case but to its right appreciation it is necessary to set out the material facts.

On the 12th April 1916 Choithram filed a suit for partition of joint ansestral property, moveable and immoveable, against his paternal uncles, Lalchand and Ramumal, plaintiff claiming one third share in the property. The property sought to be partitioned sonsisted of (1) a plot of land with buildings thereon situated in old town quarter, (2) a plot in Lyari Quarter on a temporary lease, (3) a garden bearing Survey Numbers 92, 95, 96, (4) another garden bearing Survey Numbers 452, 454, (5) cash and ornaments in the possession of the defendants, Lalehand and Ramumal, and (6) the stock in trade, accets and outstandings of a Flour Mill busicess.

In his plaint, the plaintiff stated that during his minority, defendant No. 1, Lalshand, who was the manager of the joint family, in conjunction with defendant No. 2, his brother, on the pretence of effecting an equitable distribution of the property, indused the plaintiff's mother to execute a releasedeed which purported to extinguish plaint. iff's rights in the property in consideration of plaintiff ressiving Rs. 2,200 each and ornaments and elothes worth Rs. 200. Plaintiff having attained his majority, now sought to set acide this deed as being fraudulent and illegal and grosely unfair to him as he valued his share in the property at something over Rs. 12,000.

Amongst other defenses, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 contended that the release deed was a genuine dosument and had been seted upon and that the plaintiff had validly released all his interest in the joint family property and was not entitled to claim pertition. Defendants also alleged that the joint family owned only five eighteenth share in Survey Numbers 92, 95, 96 (Item No. 3) and valued at Bs. 200 to 305 and that the other so sharers were the sons of Sajan, Molumal Dewanmal and Obellamal Dewanmal. With regard to the garden Survey Numbers 452 and 454, it was arged that the family owned eleven. seventy-two chare valued at Rs. 200 to Rs. 300 and that the other co-sharers were Samanmal Hemanmal, Motumal Dewanmal and Chellamal Dewanmal, and that these persons were necessary parties to the suit. On the 6th July 1916, Mr. Isardas applied that Basarmal, son of Motumal for bimself and as next friend of his minor brothers, Chatu and Dhaman, be brought on the record as parties to the suit, and as Mr. Kimatrai for the plaintiff raised no objection without admitting that they were necessary parties, they were ordered to be joined as co-defendants, on the 7th July 1916. On the same day Mr. Kimatrai asked that Mohamed and Iso. sons of Sajan, and Chellomal Dewanmal and Samapmal Hemanmal be joined as parties and they were ordered to be joined and the plaint was amended assordingly. On the 20th July 1916 Mr. Kimatrai applied to the Court that as some of the newly added defendants were dead and some had no present interest in the property, he should be permitted to file an amended plaint. The amendment prayed for was granted and a farther amended plaint was filed wherein the defendants were shown, in addition to defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Basarmal, Chatto and Dhaman, sons of Motumal and Khatao, son of Chellamal, who had also applied that he be made party to the suit. Khatao is since dead and his minor son through his mother as his guardian is now on the resord.

Admittedly defendants Nos. 3 and 4 slaim an interest only in the garden properties in the suit (Item Nos. 3 and 4.

On the 12th February 1919, plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 only referred all the matters in difference between them to the arbitration of their Pleaders by reference filed in Court and an award was made on the 23th March 1919.

Objections were filed to the award on the ground, inter alia, that the award was invalid and had in law as the reference was not signed by all the parties interested in the suit. I upheld the objection and set aside the award. The case then proseeded to a hearing and there were several hearings when,on the 2nd Novem. ber 1920, plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 filed an application under Order XXIII. rule 3, Oivil Procedure Code and asken for a desree in terms of the compromise between them. As a result of the compromise, they desire that all further proseedings in this case should sease. The position taken up by the defendants Nos. 8 and 4 may be formulated as follows: "They say that it is the right of every defendant in a partition suit to have his share allotted to him, and that a defendant claiming a share on partition is qua that elaim in the position of a plaintiff, and that though plaintiff is unwilling to prosecute his partition suit, yet they should not be driven to further litigation but their rights should be determined in the present suit." No doubt it is the right of every defendant in a partition suit to ask to have his own share divided off and given to him and he is qua his elaim to a share on partition in the position of CHOITHRAM MANGHANMAL &. LALCHAND.

Plaintiff, though he filed a suit for partition, had a formidable difficulty to overcome before the Court sould consider his right to any share in the family property. The release deed had to be set aside and had the plaintiff failed in his attempt to do so, his prayer for a partition could not be considered. If the plaintiff were non-suited on the ground that the relase deed was binding on him, sculd defendants in the suit contend that the Court should enquire and determine their rights in the property and allot to them their respective shares therein? I am much impressed with the reasoning of Chandavarkar, J, in the case of Ashidbai v. Abdulla (1) (remarks at pages 291-292) where he observes: "But all the eases in which this rule (which I have just referred to) has been adopted by this Court will, on examination, be found to be cases in each of which the plaintiff suing for partition succeeded in proving his right to it and the decree passed in favour of the defendants followed as a natural result of, or enrollary to, the decree in favour of the plaintiff," and again, "But where the ease of the plaintiff fails on the preliminary ground that he has no right to a share at all and that a suit for partition is not maintainable at his instance, the reason of the rule fails to apply. There is nothing on which a defendant's right to have his share ascertained and awarded in that suit can rest. The defendant was brought in for determining the share of the plaintiff, if any. If the plaintiff is found to have no share at all, there is no suit for partition, and consequently for determining the defendant's share." In the compromise arrived at between the parties in this suit, it is stated that the release deed is valid and binding on the plaintiff and a decree is sought for in terms of it. Plaintiff's suit for partition must, therefore, fail. It may be that the plaintiff has agreed to be bound by the release deed because by the terms of the compromise he obtains a decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for sum of Rs. 4,500, but whatever be the motive underlying the transaction, his suit for partition is no longer maintainable on his own admission that the releasedeed is binding upon him, why should then the Court enquire as to what shares defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are entitled to? It was in order to determine the share of the plaintiff in the family property that defendants Nos. 3 and 4 were joined as parties to the suit, but now that by virtue of the sompromise decree, plaintiff is to have no share in the family property, there is no partition suit before this Court, and, therefore, the maxim is applicable "cessants ratione, cessating lex."

I would also refer to a passage in Gour's Hinda Code, 684. "Where the plaintiff's title to partition is denied, the first thing he must do is to prove it. If he is proved to have no share at all, there is no suit for partition and consequently no necessity to determine the defendant's share." I have perused the authorities eited by Mr. Isardas, particularly Edulji Muncher.i v. Vullebhoy Khanbhoy (2) and Broen. dra Kumar Das v. Gobinda Mohan Das (3) which are the nearest approach to the case before me, but both are clearly distinguish. able, both were partnership suits and the plaintiff's right as a partner to a dissolution of the partnership and the taking of partnership accounts was not shallenged.

I, therefore, hold that the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 have no right in this suit to ask the Court to exquire into and determine their share in any part of the property that is sought to be divided.

In this view of the case it is unnecessary to determine whether defendants Nos. 3 and 4 were necessary parties to the suit, for the result, in my opinion, will still be the same.

Let there be a decree in terms of the compromise between plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The suit is dismissed against defendants Nos. 3 and 4. Parties to bear their own costs.

JUDGMENT.—The suit, which has given rise to this appeal, was brought by the plaintiff-respondent for dissolution of a partnership, for winding up its business, for taking the assonuts and for incidental reliefs. The case for the plaintiff is that there were two sets of partners, called respectively espitalist partners and Gomasta partners. The first class included the plaintiff, the first defendant and the father of the second and third defendants, who were to provide the sapital, receive a share of the profits and bear the losses in stated proportions. The second class included the remaining six defendants who were to receive specified stares of the profits as remuneration for their labour, but had no concern with the losses. The busicers was carried on in rice, jute and other articles and also included morey lending. The firm was started in 1899 and the first defendant has ever since seted as the menaging partner. According to the plaintiff, the business has not been properly managed for some time past and in its present condition, can no longer be carried on profitably. He accordingly prays that the partnership may be dissolved, the business wound up and the accounts adjusted. The defendants have resisted the elaim on a variety of grounds which reed not be enumerated in detail for our present purpose; it is sufficient to state that they have sought to defeat the action on the plea of limitation; their allegation in substance is that the partnership was, in fast and in law, dissolved long before the institution of the suit. The Subordinate Judge has overruled the contentions of the defendants and has made a preliminary decree. That decree has been assailed before us on grounds which may be formulated under three heads, namely, first, that the suit is barred by limitation; secondly, that no personal liability can be imposed upon the infant representatives of one of the original partners and thirdly, that no decree should have been made at this stage in favour of the plaitiff, entitling him to resover the espital supplied by him.

As regards the first point, the second and third defendants, who are the appellants before this Court, have contended that the suit is barred under Article 106 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. That Article provides that a suit for an account and a share of the profits of a dissolved partnership must be instituted within three years from the date of the dissolution. It is plain that the section applies only to a dissolved partnership. The reason is obvious: it is an elementary principle that limitation cannot apply as between partners so long as the partnership continues. [Foster v. Hodgson (1)]: it is different after there has been a termination of the partnership or discontinuance of it (Noyes v. Orawley (2), Knox v. Gue (3)]. The defendants have consequently argued that the partnership was dissolved before the commencement of the suit. This contention has been based on a three-fold ground. It has been contended, in the first place, that under clause (10) section 253 of the Indian Contrast Act. the partnership was dissolved by the death of one of the original partners, namely, the father of the second and third defendants, in February or March, 1909; in this view, the present suit, instituted on the 8th September 1913, would be barred by limitation under Article 106. In our opinion, this contention is not wellfounded. No noubt, elause (10) of section 2.3 provides that a partnership, whether entered into for a fixed term or not, is dissolved by the death of any partner. But this rule is subject to the important qualification embodied in the opening words of the section, namely, "in the absence of any contract to the contrary." Partners may accordingly agree that on the death of any of them, his nominee or legal representative shall be entitled to take his place. Whether in a partienlar case there has or has not been such an agreement, may be proved by an express declaration to that effect or may be determined from the conduct of the parties. This is clear from the decision in Gokul Krishna Das v. Shashi Mukhi Dasi (4). which was applied in Raghumull v. Luchmondas (5), the judgment of the latter case has subsequently been affirmed by the Judicial Committee. Now, in the case before us, it has been found by the Sub. ordinate Judge that, on the death of the father of the second and third defendante, the latter stepped into his place, they were accepted by the other members, without question, as partners in a continu. ing firm and in that character contributed eapital and withdrew sums of money from time to time. The second defendant, indeed, admitted on the 17th March 1916 in the course of his deposition in another suit, that on his father's death he and his brother became malits of the firm. In these circumstances, it is now impossible for them to maintain, even with a show of plausibility, that the partnership was dissolved on the death of their father. It has been contended in the second place that the partnership was dissolved so far back as 1906 by the retirement of one of the Gomasta partners, and reliance has been placed upon clause (7) of section 353 which if from any provides that, whatsover, any member of a partnership ceases to be sc, the partnership is dissolved as between all the other members. This, as in the case of clause (10), is subject to any agreement to the contrary, which may be established by proof of express declaration or may be inferred from conduct. Now, there can be no doubt that notwithstanding the retirement of Gomastas, the partnership in this case has been carried on as a continuing firm. This is obviously natural; the Gomastas were no doubt called partners, but they were essentially officers of the firm. They were paid, not a fixed salary, but a share of the profits by way of remuneration; the manifest object was to stimulate their industry and it is significant that they had no concern with the losses. It would be clearly reasonable to hold that the parties never inteded that the retirement of one or other of persons in such position should lead to the dissolution of the partnership. In the third place, the contention has been put forward that the partnership was dissolved, as the business was stopped and the partners refused to advance further sums on the espital account. There is plainly no force in this contention. Neither stoppage of business nor refusal of a partner to make further advances can be treated as dissolution of the firm. The Subordinate Judge has found upon the evidence-and his finding has not been successfully displaced that the business of the firm, in some of the departments at least, was carried on to a date only a few months prior to the institution of the The business of the firm included money-lending, and regular arrangements were undoubtedly in existence for the collection of the dues in 1912, if not in 1913. It is further plain that refusal by a partner to supply espital whenever the demand is made on him is not sonelusive proof of his intention to retire within the meaning of clause (8) of section 253. The question, whether there has been abandon. ment by a partner is a matter of inference to be drawn from the facts of each case. Moung Tha Huyin v. Mah Thein Myah (6), Sudarsanam Maistri v, Narasimhulu Maistri (7). In the present case, we can find to indiestion of an intention to retire or abandon on the part of any of the partners. We hold accordingly that the partnership was not dissolved before the institution of the suit which is ecusequently not barred under Article 106. If Article 120 is held applicable, the suit is plainly not barred, as the right to sue for dissolution of a continu. ing partnership exists so long as the partnership continues. The first ground orged in support of the appeal sannot consequently be maintained.

HARAKOHAN PODDAR U. BODALBAN PODDAR.

As regards the second point, it has been urged that no personal liability can be imposed upon the infant representatives of Janaki Nath Poddar, one of the original partners. This contention is clearly wellfounded. Section 217 of the Indian Contract Act provides that a person who is under the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject may be admitted to the benefits of a partnership, but cannot be made personally liable for any obligation of the firm; but the share of such minor in the property of the firm, is liable for the obligations of the firm, Consequently, the right of the minor to elaim a certain proportion of the divisible income and ultimately to re-claim a estain proportion of eapital at the proper times, if and whenever it is found that there is profit to divide and surplus may be made distribute, to assots available for the benefit of the ereditors of the firm. But the position is incontrovertible that the infant, who is admitted to the benefits of the partnership, cannot be made personally liable for any obligation of the firm. Sanyasi Charan Mandal v. Asu. tosh Ghosh (8), Khetra Mohan Poddor v. Aswini Rumar Saha (9). It is not necessary at the present stage to consider the effact of section 243 which defines the liability of a minor partner on attainment of majority, unless he gives public notice of his repudiation of the partnership. This provision seems to place the creditors of the firm in a more favourable position than in England, Goode v. Harrison (10). In the present case, at the time of the death of Janaki Nath Pcddar, both his sons were infants; one of these, Hara Mohan, attained majority subsequently and the other, Bhuban Mohan, was a minor at the date of the institution of the suit. It is plain that the liability of these appellants has to be considered in three stages. As regards the personal liability of Janaki Nath Poddar at the time of his death, the appellants, as his sons, can be made liable only to the extent of the assets inherited by them. As regards liability for transactions of the firm since the death of Janahi Nath Poddar, the appellants are not personally liable up to the date of attainment of majority of the elder brother, Hara Mohan Poddar. For transactions since that date, Hara Mohan would be personally liable, but his brother Bhuban Mohan would not be so liable, as he contipued to be a minor. These distinctions must be borne in mind when the accounts are taken. The second ground must consequently prevail,

As regards the third point, it has been argued that no decree should have been made in favour of the plaintiff so as to entitle him to recover the capital contributed, even before the accounts are taken. There is no force in this contention in the special circumstances of this case. The Subordinate Judge has found that the first defendant has withdrawn the capital in respect of his share and the share of the father of the second and third defendants. The Subordinate Judge has further stated that as soon as difficulties arose in conduct. ing the business of the firm, the first defendant, who was the managing partner, "acted treacherously towards the plaintiff and left him to his fate." In these circumstances, it is only just that the plaintiff should be placed in the same position as the other capitalist partners. In addition to this, the amount advanced by the plaintiff has already been investigated and determined, and no serious endeavour has been made to convince us that the amount has been erroneously calculated; it would thus be an idle fromality to leave the matter open for fruitless discussion. third ground must consequently be overruled as wholly unsubstantial.

We may add that in the course of argument, an objection was taken to the order for the production of account books, but we were satisfied that the direction given by the Subordinate Judge was not open to All account books must be eriticism. produced by the parties who have posses. sion of or control over them. If a party disobeys the order made in this behalf, the Court has ample power to enforce its order. We were also invited to consider the effect of the alleged misappropriation by the Gomasta partners; but this is a question which cannot be usefully discussed till the accounts have been taken and the facts ascertained. It was also suggested that the plaintiff can ultimately obtain a decree, only according to his share, and that the share of the first defendant should be treated separately from that of the ap-These prayers are reasonable and may be borne in mind when the final deeree is drawn up.

The result is that this appeal is allowed only in part and the decree modified by addition of the declaration of the liability of the appellants as stated above. As the appeal has failed to a large extent, the appellants will pay the plaintiff-respondent the costs in this Court, but the hearing fee will be assessed at three-fourths of the prescribed amount.

JUDGMENT .- The plaintiff bought a house from Chhedi Lal and Bachcha Lal. Mubin is in possession of a room of that He refused house. to recognise plaintiff's title to the house on ground that he was holding the room from Bacheha Lal and that Bacheha Lal was a minor at the time the deed of sale was executed. The Trial Court held that the burden of proof to show that Bacheha Lal was not a minor at the time that the deed of sale was executed was on the plaintiff, and that as he produced no evidence, his suit for the ejectment of Mubin must fail. The lower Appellate Court found that the burden of proof was on Mubin and that as his evidence to prove that Bachcha Lal was a minor was insufficient to satisfy the Court, the suit must succeed. Bachcha Lal appeals here.

I do not assept the view of either of the Courts below. The law on the subject is laid down elearly in Gaya Din v. Dulari (1). When the validity of a contract is questioned on the ground that the exe-entant is a minor, it is for the plaintiff to establish by prima facie evidence that the contract was valid and entered into by a person who was competent to do The Trial Court is quite right upon that point; but, where the Trial Court went astray was in saying that the plaintiff had produced no evidence. According to the entry in the deed of sale, Bachcha Lal had himselt admitted at the time of the execution of the deed that he had just attained majority. He said that he had been a minor under a guardian appointed by the Court but that he had majority; he executed the deed himself. As was decided in Gaya Din v. Dulari (1), such evidence is sufficient paima facie evidence to establish Bachcha Lal's majority at the time that the deed was executed. It has been brought to my notice that in the case of Ranhoya Lal v. Girdhari Lal (2), it was held that a statement made by a defendant not in the document, the subject of suit, but in a separate proceeding, that on a certain date he was of a certain age, was not sufficient to shift the burden of proof. But the desision in that case does not go in any way against my view. The weight of the evidence will be different in every case. Here I find that the distinct admission of Bashsha Lal at the time that he executed the deed that he was major at that time, is sufficient prima facie evidence of his majority. Against this is the evidence which he called to prove his minority. That evidence the learned District Judge finds to be unconvincing and insufficient. I agree with the learned Distriet Judge upon that point. The case then stands as follows:-It is proved that Bacheha Lai was a major at the time of the execution of the deed of sale. The deed of sale is thus a good and valid deed of sale. Mubin can base no claim to oscupation of any portion of the house on the authority of Basheha Lal. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs which will include fees on the higher seale.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Thana, in Appeal No. 134 of 1919, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Alibag, in Civil Suit No. 220 of 1918,

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Appellant. Mr. W. B. Pradhan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT,-The plaintiff sold the suit property to the defendant on the 16th March 1906, continuing to remain in possession as tenant. On the 13th August 1906, the defendant executed in his favour a satekhat to sell the property to him at any time within twelve years for Rs. 395, Rs. 5 being paid as earnest money. The plaintiff filed a suit in 1911 elaiming to redeem the property on the ground that the doenment of the 16th March was a mortgage, seeking the protection afforded by section 10A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. That suit was dismissed. Before twelve years had expired the plaintiff sued again to recover the property on payment of Rs. 395. It was contended that that question was res judicata, as the plaintiff might in his original suit of 1911 have sued in the alternative for specific performance of the satekhat. Whether he could have sued in the alternative for specific performance in his redemption suit need not be determined. It certainly cannot be said that he ought to have done sc. The two suits were mutually inconsistent and if the plaintiff failed in proving the mortgage, he still number of years left under the satekhat within which he could have sued to get back the property on payment of the consideration mentioned in the sotekhat. We think, therefore, the decision of the lower Appellate Court is right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Civil revision from an order of the Munsif, exercising the powers of a Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Fatehabad dated 1st June 1921.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Applicant, JUDGMENT .- This is an application in civil revision. The applicant was plaintiff in the Court below and filed a suit on a money bond for Rs. 157 in the Court of the Munsif of Fatehabad sitting at Agra, on the 12th of May 1921. At that time the presiding officer, the Maneif, had been invested with Small Cause Court powers only up to Rs. 100. The 1st of June was fixed for the decision of the case. On the 19th of May 1921 the Munsif's powers under the Small Cause Court Act were extended up to Be. 250. He, therefore, tried the suit as a suit of Small Causes. The defence to the suit was that certain payments had been made. The Court accepted the evidence of the defendant and gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 78 only. It is urged before me that the Court below had no jurisdiction to try the suit as Small Cause suit, and it seems to me that having regard to section 32, clause (2) and section 33 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act (Act IX of 1887), the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit, which had been filed properly as a regular suit, as a Small Cause Court suit. Paragraph 2 of section 32 runs as follows :- "Nothing in sub-section (1) with respect to Courts invested with the jurisdiction of a Coart of Small Causes applies to suits instituted or proceedings commenced in those Courts beforethe date on which they were invested with that jurisdiction." When the plaint in this suit was filed on the 12th of May 1921 the presiding officer of the Court had no juriediction to try it as a Small Cause Court suit involving more than Rs. 100. He, therefore, it seems to me, on the plain words of the ecction, had no right to try it as such on the let of June. The point seems to me quite clear, and if an authority is required, I would quote Lahima Ohandra Sirdar v. Kali kandol (1) which is exactly in point. The plaintiff, owing to the suit having been treated as a Smail Cause Court suit, has lest his appeal from the finding of the Court as to part payments. I am, therefore, constrained to allow this application with costs and set aside the decree of the Court below and send the case back to be disposed of as a regular suit.

Bombay District Municipal Act (II of 1901), ss. 122, 155-Notice to remove encroachment-Non-compliance with notice-Prosecution, whether justified.

Although a Municipality may, as a matter of courtesy, send a notice to a person alleged to have erected an encroachment to remove it, such notice is not authorised by section 122 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, and if a person to whom such notice is sent fails to comply with it, he cannot be convicted under section 155 of having disobeyed a lawful order, the proper step, according to law, in such a case is for the Municipality to remove the encroachment, and charge accused with the cost of removal.

Criminal application for revision against the order of the First Class Magistrate at Ahmedabad confirming the conviction and sentence passed by the Third Class Magistrate at Dbolka.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The accused was convicted by the Special Magistrate, Third Class, under section 155 of the Bombay District Municipal Act of having disobeyed a lawful direction given by a written notice issued by the Dholka Municipality to remove an otla. The facts ere that at least since October 1919 this offa was in existence. The Municipality, on the 17th December 1920, sent a notice to the secused:—

"You are informed by notice under section 122 of the District Municipal Act that you, by making an otla at the side wall of your house in the said street, have encroached on Government land. Therefore, within seven days of the receipt of this notice you should remove the said otla. If you neglect to do so, steps will be taken assording to law."

The otla was not removed, and so the proper step according to law which the Municipality should have taken was to remove the otla themselves and charge the accused with the casts of the removal. Instead of proceeding in that manner, as provided by rection

BAM ERISHNA SINGH U. BMPBOB.

122, they charged the assused with having disobeyed a lawful order. An appeal against the conviction was rejected, but we think that the conviction was clearly wrong. Section 122 gives no power to a Municipality to issue a notice to a person alleged to have erected an encroashment to remove it, although the Municipality may send such a notice, it is not a notice under the section. Such a notice might be sent as a matter of courtesy, preliminary to the Municipality taking action under the powers given them by the section to ramove the encroachment themselves. Since these special powers have been given, it seems to me that was the proper remedy, as laid down by the Legislature in cases of failure to comply with such a notice. It was not intended, assuming a Municipality served a notice upon a person to remove an eneroach. ment, that if he did not do so, he might be convicted under section 155. I think, therefore, the conviction was wrong, and the actused must be discharged, and the fine, if paid, refunded.

and is not competent to re-open the question and to investigate it under section 145 of the Code. But in order to find out whether the possession is disputed or not, the Criminal Court can investigate the actual service of the writ of delivery of possession, and if dakhal dehani is proved, to its satisfaction, to have been effected, it is bound to maintain the possession of the person so obtaining it either by an order under section 145, or by having recourse to action under section 144 or section 167 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 819, cols. 1 & 2.]

The principal ingredient of an offence under section 425 of the l'enal Code is that there must be an intention to cause wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person, that is to say, the mischief must be done to the property belonging to another. If a person wishing to eject a trespasser sets fire to his own house, he cannot be said to cause wrongful loss to any person or to the public, and, therefore, cannot be convicted of an offence under section 425. [p. 819, col. 7; p. 820, col. 1.]

Application against an order passed by the Sessions Judge, Mongbyr, affirming an order of conviction, passed by the Assistant Sessions Judge of that place.

Mesers. Hasan Imam, S. N. Rai and G. C. Pal, for the Petitioners.

Mr. H. L. Nandkeolyar, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J .- The petitioners, five in number, have been convicted of rioting under section 147, Indian Penal Code. Petitioner Shibram was convicted by the Assistant Sessions Judge under section 436, Indian Penal Code (misshief by fire) and the other petitioners were convicted of misshief under sections 436-149, Indian Penal Code. The lower Appellate Court has set aside the conviction of Shibram under section 435, Indian Penal Code, and has convicted him under that section read with section 149. Thus all the petitioners have been convicted under sections 436.149 by the lower Appellate Court. Petitionere, Shibdbyan and Babua, bave been convicted also under section 323, Indian Penal Code. All the petitioners, after the reduction of the sentences, have been sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment under sections 436-149. They have further been sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment under section 147, Indian Penal Code, and Shibdhyan and Babua to three months' rigorous imprisonment under section 323, Indian Penal Code. The sentences are to run concurrently.

The facts briefly stated are as follows:-- desree against Adya, the complainant, on the 7th July 1915 and in execution of that decree he sold 8-annas share in Akbarpur Tauxi No. 79). Ram Krishna Singh and brothers purchased the same on the 2:th July 1918. The sale was confirmed on the 26th August 1918. Ram Krishna Singh obtained delivery of possession of the property on the 15th March 1911. This delivery of possession was under Order XXi. rule 95 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There was some litigation between the parties with respect to the sale, but the sale was finally upheld by the High Court (vide judg. ment Exhibit H.). On the 27th April 1920 the Sub-Inspector of Police submitted a report for an action under section 144 to be taken against Adya Singh and his family on the ground that the disputed property was in possession of the petitioners, Ram Krishna Sirgh and his brothers. Subsequently proecedings under section 145 were instituted on the 7th June 1920. On the 15th No. vember 1920 the Magistrate declared the possession of Adya Singh, holding that in spite of the delivery of possession, he continued to be in actual possession of the property in question. This order of the Magistrate was set aside by the Court on the 12th January 1921 with the observation that it was not open to the Magistrate to dispute or disregard the Civil Court writ of delivery of possession in favour of Ram Krishna Singh. This occurrence took place four days after the aforesaid order of the High Court on the 16th January 1921,

The case of the prosecution is that Ram Krishna Singh same to the house in question with a mob of about 200 armed with lathis, and ordered Adya Singh to leave the house in question. Adya Singh refused to do so. Thereupon Ram Krishna Singh ordered the mob to demolish the house, loot its contents, burn it down and remove the occupants. Adya Singh remonstrated and thersupon he was hit by Babua Singh with a lathi. Khela Singh, a grandson of Adya Singh, was also assaulted by Shibdbyan Singh with a lathi. Khela Singh retaliated and struck Ram Krishna Singh with a lathi. Subsequently, the ladies of the house came out and one of them, Lalbati, was struck on the head by Nasib Singh with a lathi and a box which she was carrying was snatched from her by Nasib Singh. The mob conBAM KRISHNA SINGH U. EMPEROR.

tinued the loot and eventually Shibram Singh set fire to a room on the northern side of the house. This room was wholly destroyed by firs. It was contended by the defence that the house in question was not the house which was the subject-matter of dispute under sestion 145 or with respect to the Civil Court delivery of possession to Ram Krishna Singh on the 15th March 1919. It was further asserted that Adya Singh was in possession of the house and was never dispossessed, and, therefore, the accused had no right to try to dispossess him by means of force; and that inasmuch as the house was in possession of Adya Singh and he with his family was residing therein, the assused did misshief as defined by section 425, Indian Penal Code, and hence, were liable to conviction under section 4 6. The Court below has come to a definite finding that the house in question was the very house with respect to which the Civil Court had executed the writ of delivery of possession in 1919 and that it was the property which was the subject of dispute under sention 145, Oriminal Procedure Code. The Court has farther heard that the possession of Adya Singh and his family was wrongful and that of a trespasser inasmuch as the petitioner, Ram Krishna Singh, was put in possession of it in pursuance of a Civil Court dakhal dehani. The Court very rightly repelled the suggestion that inasmuch as symbolical possession was only delivered under Order XXI, rule 95, Ram Krishna Singh should not be deemed to be in actual possession of the house in question. The Court, however, has held that, in spite of the Civil Court dakhal dehans, Adya Singh continued to be in actual possession of the house in question and, therefore, the assused were not justified in attacking him with a large mob and assaulting his party and in turning them out and burning the house. According to the finding of the Court below the house in question now belongs to Ram Krishna Singh by virtue of hie purchase at a Civil Court auction-sale 1918. He was also given possession by the Oivil Court ; therefore, Adya Singh was occupying the house, if at all, as a mere trespasser It was rightly pointed out by this Court that after the execution of the writ of delivery of possession, the Oriminal Court was bound to maintain Ram Krishna Singh in possession of the house in question, In other words, the Criminal Court was not competent to re-open the question of possession and to investigate it under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. No doubt under section 145 a disputed possession may be enquired into and the party found in possession by the Magistrate may be maintained by an order under clause (4) of that section. fore, in order to find out as to whether the possession was disputed or not, the Magistrate could investigate as to the actual service of the writ of delivery of possession; but once a dakhal dehani was proved to have been effected to the satisfaction of the Magistrate, it was then his bounden duty to maintain the possession of Ram Krishna Singh either by an order under section 145 or by having recourse to actions under section 144 or 107, Criminal Procedure Code. In this case it appears that the dakhal dehani was proved and consequently the Criminal Court, whether acting under the preventive sections of the Code of Oriminal Presedure or enquiring into offence under the Indian Penal Code, has to maintain the possession of Ram Krishna Singh; therefore, Ram Krishna Singh was not committing any criminal act in going to assert his title and to take possesssion of the boase in question by ousting Adya Singh who was remaining in the house only as a trespasser. Therefore, the assused were not members of an unlawful assembly and they did not commit any riot. So the conviction under section 147, Indian Penal Code, must fail.

As to the conviction under section 436 of causing mischief by setting fire to the house, it is obvious that there sould Dot possibly be any wrongful loss or damage to Adya Singh or any person inasmuch as the house did actually belong to Ram Krishna Singh, the accused. The principal ingredient of an offense under section 425 is that there must be an intention to cause wrong. ful loss or damage to the public or to any person. Therefore, if the property in question did not belong to Adya Singh and belonged to the accused, no offence of misshief was at all committed. Explanation 2 to sestion 425, Indian Penal Code, has. been referred to by the learned Assistant Government Advocate in order to show that misshief may be by an act which affects any property belonging to the person committing the act or to that person and others jointly. Now, illustrations (g) and (h) clearly show the cases to which that explanation is applicable. The mischief must be done to the property belonging to another person, but the act whereby that mischief is done may have reference to the property belonging to the person committing the mischief.

The case of Empress v. Ra; coomar Singh (1) is an obvious illustration baving person his right deolared by a Civil Court destroying the property without being guilty of any mischief In that case B. obtained a decree from a Civil Court against A declaring his right in the properly, wherecoon the servants of B went on the land and pulled down the edifice which was erected thereon by A sulsequent to an order under section 530, Criminal Precedure Ccde, (145 of the precent Code), Jackson, J., held that as there had been no causing of wrongful loss, the accused had not been guilty of mischief. The following observation appears to me to be pertinent to the question in issue in the present case. His Lordship (Mr. Justice Jackson) observed : "Now it is clear from the decision of the Civil Court, which was then in force, that Shama Obran Labiri was not at that time legally entitled to have those barbccs put (cgether in that place in the form of a naubutkhena, and consequently there was no eausing of wrongful loss in the act done by the accused persons". Instead of pulling down the house, here the accused persons barnt it down; otherwise, the case appears to me to be on all fours with the present one. If there was no mischief in pulling down the edifice, there was no mischief committed in burning it. I would quote the ease cf. Parmethuar Singh v. Emperor (2) in order to show that no mischief can be committed by any act which causes damage to a property if the property actually belongs to the accused.

The learned Assistant Government Advosate then contended that rightly or wrongly the complainant, Adya Singh, occupied the house in question at the moment, and, therefore, the accused had no right, what the learned Assistant Government Advocate describes, to take law into their own bands. That phrase obviously means that the accused persons should not use more force than is necessary in order to maintain their own right or possession. It goes without saying that a rightful owner is entitled physically turn out a trespasser or one trying to infringe upon his rights. It is also true that a person exercising this right should not use more force than is reascnable to defend his possession from a treepasser. This is the view taken even in the case quoted by the learned Assistant Government Advocate; Emperor v. Gulshah (3). Therefore, the accused persons to my mind are not guilty either under section 147 or under section 436.

The last contention of the learned Assis. tant Government Advocate is that the conviction of Babua and Shibdbyan under section 323, Indian Penal Code, for eausing burt to Adya and Khela with lathis should stand. The learned Sessions Judgo has not ecme to any definite finding as to the sircumstances under which the aforesaid assaults were committed and whether they were necessary to eject Adya Singh from the house or that they were in excess of the right of private defence of property which Ram Krishna and the other accused had in order to maintain their possession of the house in question. Therefore, I am not prepared to convict the aforesaid petitioners, Babua and Shibdhyan, under section 323.

The result is that the conviction and the sentences passed upon the accused are set aside.

Cours, J.—I agree that these petitioners must be acquitted. The learned Sessions Judge has found that the complainant and his party were trespassers and it is clear that the accused have not exceeded right of private defence which they undoubtedly had.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1880), s. 224-Contempt-Insult to Court-Intention-Prosecution, duty of.

Accused was on his trial for riot, mischief by fire and attempt to murder, and, when opening his defence, put in a written statement complaining that he was being tried by a prejudiced Judge; when asked to withdraw this latter expression, he declined to do so, whereupon the Magistrate proceeded against him summarily under section 228 of the Penal Code, and convicted him thereunder:

Held, that accused was guilty of the offence charged, because his intention clearly was to offer an insult to the Court. [p. 82rd, col. 1.]

In all offences in the Penal Code where the intention is an essential ingredient of the offence, that intention must be strictly made out by the prosecution. This rule applies to the offence under section 228 and it is also the duty of the Court of Appeal to decide if the intention is proved. [p. 826, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal from an order passed by the Sessions Judge, Dharwar, convicting and centencing the appellant for contempt of Coart.

FACTS appear from the following dissentient judgments of Mickey, C. J.—The appellant was convicted by the Sessions Judge of Dharwar of an offence under section 228 of the Indian Penal Code and fined Rs. 50 by an order passed under section 480 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The appellant was one of the accused, in what is known as the Dharwar riot ease, who were being tried before the Sessions Judge sitting with assessors.

The appellant was questioned by the Judge as follows:-

Q.—Did you make the statement before the Magistrate which is now read over to you?

A.-Yes.

Q .- Have you anything further to say ?

4.- I wish to put in a written statement.

Q.—You have began reading that states ment and stated that the Judge is prejudiced against you. Are you willing to withdraw those words?

A .- I desline to withdraw them.

Q —Are you aware that you are liable to be dealt with for contempt?

A.-Yos.

Q —You have read your statement. Have you anything further to say?

A. - No.

The appellant's statement began as follows:-

1. I have been practising as a Pleader in this District for the last fourteen years.

 The first and the fundamental requirements of a judicial trial are chiefly these;

(a) Investigation by impartial and independent persons;

(b) an impartial and independent Judge;

(c) an impartial and independent prosecu-

3. In this trial not only are the above three elements wanting but there is positively an admixture of contrary elements in all these branches, vis., (a) Investigation by persons who are guilty of the marder of innocent and unarmed persons; (b) a prejudiced Judge; lastly, prosecutors some of whom are hired for a definite purpose.

The appellant was asked after the mid-day recess if he had reconsidered his statement but replied that he declined to withdraw it. He said his statement did not amount to an offence, and moreover, the Court having ricen for the recess had no power to pass any order. There was nothing in that point as an order can be passed at any time before the Court rises for the day.

As mentioned above, the appellant was then convicted of contempt and fined Rs. 50 or in default fifteen days' simple imprisonment.

The defence, so far as it has been urged before us and so far as it can be extracted from the petition in appeal, appears to be that the appellant during the course of the trial had formed an honest opinion that the Judge was prejudiced against the accused including the appellant, and that while the appellant was in this honest state of mind brought about by circumstances over which he had no control, he was called upon to make a statement. That it was at that stage that the appellant succumbed to the very natural desire of asserting his innocence, and for that purpose, of giving expression to the feelings he entertained about the prosecution against him by making a clean breast of all that he truly and honestly believed about the prosecution and the trial. That this desire became all the more natural and necessary as the learned Judge was being assisted by assessors whose opinion had also to be moulded by properly explaining to them the attitude of the appellant. That there was no intention whatever on the part of the appellant to insult the Court.

Now, I do not think that the law regarding contempts is any different in India to what it is in England. To say that the Judge trying a case is prejudiced is an insult and in the first instance the words carry with them the intention to insult. It lies on the person uttering them to provide an explanation to show there was no such intention. They may bave been uttered in the beat of an argument, and the absence of intention to insult may be proved by taking the opportunity when offered to withdraw them. No Counsel or Pleader could be allowed to persist in making such an imputation against the Trying Judge, and though it may be admitted that a person conducting his own defence is allowed a greater latitude than legal practitioners, that must not be strained beyond the limits of decency.

Cases in which applications for transfer are made stand on an entirely different footing to the present one. As a rule they are not made because it is alleged the Trying Judge is incompetent to nome to a just decision but because there are eircumstances beyond his control, such as acquaintance with one of the parties or a personal interest in the subjectmatter of the proceedings, which in law are considered as preventing him from giving an unbiassed decision. It must also be remembered that on any such allegation being made, the Judge is afforded an opportunity of giving an explanation and the superior Tribunal only expresses its opinion after full consideration of all the circumstances in the case.

It is a different matter when, in the course of a trial, party defending himself commits direct contempt of the Court, and if I were to decide that it was sufficient excuse for him to say that there was no intention to insult, I should be dealing a blow to the anthority of the Courts, the consequence of which would be disastrous beyond contemplation.

Speaking for myself, I do not think we should lightly interfere in appeal with the decision of a Judge in a matter of contempt, as he would be far more competent to ascertain whether the intention to insult was present or not. The test is not to my mind whether I on reading those papers or hearing arguments were to think that I should have forborne from taking notice of the appellant's statement but whether there is anything to show that the Judge was wrong in holding that there was contempt. Contempt of a Court which is not a Court of Record can only be made an offence by legislation, but it is an offence of an entirely different nature from the ordinary offences defined by the Penal Code and so, in my opinion, appeals from convictions for contempt should be dealt with having due regard to that fact. In Rez v. Davison (1) the defendant was fined by the Judge three for making insulting and irreletimes vant remarks in the course of his address Jury, while to the defending himself against an indistment for blasphemous libles. He afterwards submitted himself to the Court and the fines were remitted, On a motion for a new trial on the ground that the Judge had no power to fine for contempt a defendant for impropriety in the course of his speech to the Jary, for the reason that men should not be deterred to take their remedy by due course of law, the points at issue may not have been exactly the same as in this case, but the principles which should govern a Judge in the face of insult are very elearly laid down. It was held that a at nisi prius had the Judge of fining a defendant for a contempt committed by him in addressing the Jury, for every man who came into a Court of justice either as a defendant or otherwise must know that desensy was to be observed there, that respect was to be paid to the Judge, and that in endeavouring to defend himself from any particular charge, he must not sommit a new offence.

1 cannot do better than eite in full the remarks of Abbott, C. J. who said (p. 333):

VEREATRAO BAJERAO C, BEPAROR.

"If I thought that the decision I am about to pronounce, sould have the effect of restraining any person who may here. after stand on his trial, from making a bold, as well as a legitimate course of defence, I would pause before I prononneed that decision. The question, indeed, is a momentous one. It is absolutely a question, whether the law of the land shall, or shall not continue to be properly administered. For it is utterly impossible that the law can be so administered, if those who are charged with the duty of administering it, have not power to prevent instances of indescrum from oscurring in their own presence. That power has been vested in the Judges, not for their personal protection, but for that of the public. And a Judge will depart from his bounden duty, if he forbears to use it when occasions arise which call for its exercise. I quite agree that this power, more especially where it is to be exercised on the person of a defendant, is to be used with the greatest care and moderation,"

And the learned Ohief Justice concluded

by saying (p. 335):

"Upon the whole, I think that the law eannot be properly administered, unless this power of fining exists, and that the exercise of it, on the present occasion, was called for by the conduct of the defendant, and, being perfectly satisfied that the effect of it was not to deprive the defendant of anything that might have served him in his address to the Jury, I am clearly of opinion, that we ought not to grant a new trial,"

Holroyd, J., said (p.339):

"In the case of an insult to himself, it is not on his own account that he (the Jadge) examits, for that is a consideration which should never enter his minds. But, though he may despise the insult, it is a duty which he owes to the station to which he belongs, not to suffer those things to pass which will make him despicable in the eyes of others. It is his duty to support the dignity of his station, and uphold the law, so that, in his presence at least, it shall not be infringed".

And Bast, J. said (p. 341):

"It has, since Carlile was tried, been seen, that persons indisted for libels, who defend themselves, think that they may insult the Judge, calumniate all who are in authority in the country, and utter blasphemy more horrible than that for which that defendant was convicted."

It may very well be that if an accused person ignorant of the law in defending himself is punished for introducing irrelevant matter, such pucishment might be held to be not justified unless the party deliberately persisted after warning, but no system of jostice can tolerate unbridled license on the part of a person defending himself or accept as an excuse for an insult to a Judge, that it was necessary for the conduct of the defence or for the establishment of his innocence. The Sessions Judge did no more than his duty in drawing the attention of appellant to what he had written in his statement. Very fairly he gave the appellant an opportunity to withdraw it. only result was the objection that the Court having risen for a short time in the middle of the day, the power of the Court to punish for the contempt was lost. Clearly the intention of the appellant was to insult the Judge, and as Best, J, remarked, "to calumniate all who are in authority in the country." There is nothing in the petition of appeal which could lead me to come to a different opinion.

The conviction, I think, was right and the appeal should be dismissed.

As my learned brother is of opinion that the appeal should be allowed, the appeal must be referred to another Judge.

SHAH, J.—This is an appeal under sestion 485 of the Code of Oriminal Procedure from an order made by the Sessions Judge of Dharwar against the appellant under section 480 of the Code.

The order was made as, in the opinion of the learned Judge, an offenes described in section 228, Indian Penal Code, was committed by the appellant in his view or presence. The learned Sessions Judge has not referred to section 228, Indian Penal Code, in his order but it is clear that on the facts the only section out of those mentioned in section 450 of the Code that he could have in view would be section 228, Indian Penal Code.

I need not recapitulate the facts which led to these proceedings, as they have been detailed in the judgment of my Lord the

VENEATRAO BAJEBAO U. EMPEROR.

Ohief Justice. I have perused the whole of the statement made by the appellant as an accused person in the course of the trial. He was one of the several accused persons and read his written statement which contains the statement as regards the Judge.

The question that we have to decide in this appeal is, whether the appellant intentionally offered an insult to the learned Judge within the meaning of section 228 of the Indian Penal Code in making the statement. We are not in any sense concerned with the merits of the statement in question nor with the merits of the written statement filed by him as regards the charges against the appellant at the trial and I express no opinion whatever on the point.

In determining the intention of the appelwe must have regard to all the lant. facts. He made the statement in the course of a statement, which he was entitled to make as an accused person under section 342, Oriminal Procedure Code, and though he was a Pleader of standing and experience, he was then in the position of an accused person defending himself. On the other hand, we must have regard to the expressions nsed and to the context in relation to which they were used, as also to the fact that he adhered to them in spite of an opportunity very fairly offered by the Trial Judge. It is elear that an accused person like any other person can be guilty of an offence under section 228 if he contravenes the terms of the section by any act or words of his own. The law imposes the restriction upon an accused person as much as upon any other person: and while a reasonable latitude ought to be allowed to an accused person in making his own defence, he cannot be allowed to act in any manner which offends against the section.

The sole question in this case is whether the accused has transgressed the reasonable limits within which he is perfectly free to put forward his defence. I have carefully considered this question. While I do not for a moment approve of the manner in which he has put forward his defence, the merits of which will have to be considered in the appeal from the convictions at the trial, I am unable to hold that in saying what he did say his intention was to offer an insult to the Judge: at least I feel very doubtful that that was his intention. His conduct is consistent with the view that his intention was to press a defence which was adopted and adhered to without sufficient thought and which was couched in improper language and not to offer an insult to the Judge.

In coming to this conclusion, I have not overlooked the observations in Rez v. Davison (1), While I agree that these observations are very useful in dealing with each ease of this type as it arises, we have to decide this appeal on facts with reference to the presise language used in a Statute. The expressions were used by the accused in that ease under different circumstances, and the point which the Court had to the accused was consider was whether entitled to a rew trial on the ground of prejudice to his defence at the trial in consequence of the contempt proceedings. It appears from the judgment of Bayley, J., in that sase that the Judge alone was sompetent to determine whether what was done would be contempt or not, and that neither that Court nor any other so ordinate Court had a right to examine the question whether his discretion in that respect was filly and properly exercised, It also appears from the jadgment of Best J., who had originally purished Davison for three contempte, that he had ordered the fines to be taken off as the accused had submitted to his authority. At the same time, I recognize that the observations with regard to the Court's powers and duties should be borne in mind while desiding a case of contempt under the Criminal Prosedure Code or under the Indian Penal Code. It must be remembered that here an appeal is expressly provided by the Code against an order made by a Court under section 487, Criminal Prosedure Code, and that we are not concerned with the question whether such a sentence has prejudiced the appellant in any sense at the trial but with the question whether the appellant intentionally offered an insult to the Trial Judge, as required by section 228, Indian Penal Code. The contempt cases are not always easy to decide: and the same conduct partiou'arly when it is near the line as in the present case, is apt to strike different minds in different ways. On a consideration of all the facts appearing on these proceed. VERKATRAO RAJERAO U. EMPEROR.

inge, I am unable to affirm the proposition that his intention to offer an insult to the Trial Court is made out beyond a reasonable doubt,

I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the order and direct the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

JUDGMENT.—The accused in this case has been fined for contempt of Court in a summary proceeding held by the Sessions Judge of Dharwar under section 420 of the Oriminal Procedure Code.

On an appeal to this Court there was a difference of opinion between Macleod, C. J., and Shab, J., and the appeal has been referred to me for decision.

The contempt was the offence defined in ecction 228 of the Irdian Penal Code. The accused was on trial for offences of riot, mischief by fire and attempt to murder and when opening his defence put in a written statement complaining that he was being tried by a prejudiced Judge.

Each words are a gross insult to any Court of Justice, but Shah, J., came to a conclusion which is expressed in the following passage from his judgment:—

"His conduct is consistent with the view that his intention was to press a defence which was adopted and adhered to without sufficient thought and which was conched in improper language and not to offer an insult to the Judge."

With great respect, it seems to me that this pressage confuses motive with intentior. The accused's motive for using the effective expression was to support his defecte. But if the words are an offecte, the excellence of the motive will not make them lawful. A Frontier Tribesman has been known to cross the border and cut off a British Bania's head merely in order to test the blade of a new sword. The motive was simple, innocent and childlike, but the intention was nevertheless murder.

I agree with Shah, J., that the motive of the accused was to justify his defence. His defence was that the riot had been organised by the Police and the District Officers, that the investigation had been conducted by guilty officials in order to falsely which he could not hope to substantiate either by the cross cramination of prosecution witnesses or by the examination of witnesses for the defence. He, therefore, cought for various excuses for his omission either to cross-examine or to examine witnesses. One of the excuses was that it was futile to call evidence before a prejudiced Court.

No doubt, the statement did, to some extent, serve the purpose of his defence and was made with that motive, but it is nonetheless an offence if the intention was to insult.

I think the same fallacy underlies the judgment of the Allahabad High Court in Murli Dharv. Emperor (2). A suggestion of prejudice was made in a petition praying for an adjournment in order to apply to the High Court for transfer. The High Court reserved the conviction under section 228 apparently on the ground that the immediate object of the application was to obtain an adjournment." But surely, however legitimate the object, it was not lawful to commit an offence in order to attain that object.

The question is whether the insult was intentional and on this point I think it clear that this intention is an inference attaching to the words themselves, and this inference is not rebutted by any excuse as to the motive with which the accused used the words or the object that he thought would be attained by so doirg.

The referring judgment of Maeleod, C. J., has been severely criticised on the ground that it is based on Rez v. Davison (1) which deals with the more extensive jurisdiction as to contempt of superior Courts of Record. But that ease is relevant as showing that the summary jurisdiction for contempt is essential to the proper administration of justice and that it is exercised not from any exaggerated notion of personal dignity but to prevent instances of indecorum occurring in Court.

On the other hand, also with respect, I differ from Macleod, C. J. when he says that the offence under section 228 of the Indian Penal Code is of an entirely different nature from other offences as defined in the Penal Code. In all offences in the Penal Code where the intention is an essential ingredient of the offence, that intention must be strictly made out by the proscention. This rule applies to the offence under section 223 and it is also the duty of the Court of Appeal to decide if the intention is proved. Possibly, however, all that Maeleod, C.J., meant was that the Trying Judge's appreciation of the intention should not lightly be set aside, for apparently innocent words might be attered in a manner which was contemptuous. I doubt if this consideration was properly appreciated by Shah, J., in his hesitating conclusion that same condust particularly when it is near the line as in the present case is apt to strike different minds in different ways."

However that may be, I find that the intention is clearly made out in the present case: first, by the words themselves, and secondly, the conduct of the accused. When the Judge took proceedings for contempt and the accused found that the Judge put an unfavourable construction on his words be offered no explanation. The effect of this was, I think, that he persisted in them in the sense put upon them by the Judge.

I, therefore, confirm the conviction and sentence and dismiss the appeal.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 350— Trial transferred from one Magistrate to another— Accused, right of, to re-summon witnesses—Time for making demand—Evidence recorded by first Magistrate, whether can be relied on.

When a case is transferred from the Court of one Magistrate to that of another, the accused has a right to demand that the witnesses or any of them shall be re-summoned and re-heard, and he has such a right not only in warrant-cases, but also in the case of summary trials, and trials of summons-cases, and when an accused person makes such a demand, his demand must be complied with, as it is not competent to the second Magistrate to treat the evidence recorded by the first Magistrate as evidence in the case. The time when an accused person must exercise the right is, when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings. [p. 831, col, 1.]

When a witness is re-summoned under the proviso to section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and he retracts his former statement, it is not admissible to treat the former statement as evidence in the case. [p. 831, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the District Magistrate, Gujranwala, dated the 14th September 1921.

Messrs. O. Bevin Petmin and Ablul Asia, for the Appellants.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

BROADWAY, J.—(November 17, 1921).—
Sahib Dio, son of Sheikh Muhammad Bakhah, Muhammad Sharif and Muhammad Latif, sons of Sahib Dio, have been convicted of offences under section 489 A, B and D, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to an aggregate of ten years' rigorous imprisonment each. Sahib Din has also been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 500 or in default to rigorous imprisonment for a further term of one year. They have appealed to this Court and on their behalf I have heard Mr. Petman while Mr. Dalip Singh appeared before me on behalf of the Crown.

For the present purposes it will be suffieient to give the following facts. On the 28th of April 1921, one Khwaje, son of Karam Din, was arrested at the Shahdara Railway Station in the act of passing a counterfeit note of the value of Rs. 2.8.0. As a result of certain statements made by him, the house of Sahib Din and his three sons (the third son, Muhammad Hanif has been acquitted) was searched and certain articles found therein which, according to the prosecution, are eapable of use in the process of sounterfeiting notes. On the 18th of May 1921 the three appellants together Muhammad Hanif were produced before the District Magistrate of Gajran. wals with an incomplete chalan, the Police that the statements of three requesting witnesses including Khwajs, son of Karam Dig. might be resorded and a further remand granted for the completion of the investigation. For reasons not necessary to be detailed here, the District Magistrate found it impossible to deal with the ease and sent it to Sheikh Abdul Rahman, Magistrate, First Class, with section 30 powers, directing him to record the statements of the three witnesses and grant the remand. At the same time the District Magistrate ordered that when the chalan was completed it should be laid before him for trial.

In assordance with the orders of the District Magistrate, Sheikh Abdul Rahman, on the 18th May 1921 recorded the state. ment of Khwaja, son of Karam Din, in the presence of the appellants and Muham-While Khwaja's statement mad Hanif. was being recorded, he was sent for by the Magistrate who was trying the case against him and an order convicting him was pronounced. After this interval Khwaja was brought back to the Court of the section 30 Magistrate and concluded his statement. After the section 30 Magis. trate had recorded the statements of the other two witnesses, he granted a further remand and returned the chalan to the Police directing them to lay the completed ease before the District Magistrate on the 30th May 1921. On the 30th May 1921 the Police reported that the investigation was not complete and a further adjournment was granted to the 13th of June 1921, On this date, i. s., 30th of May 1921 the then assused intimated to the Court through their Counsel that, in the event of the ease being transferred to the Court of the District Magistrate, they would require the statement of Khwaja re-resorded.

On the 13th of June 1921 the case came up before the District Magistrate and Khwaja's statement was re-taken. The statement so re-taken was practically a retraction of his evidence as given before the section 30 Magistrate on the 18th of May 1921. In the opening part of his judgment the District Magistrate referring to Khwaja said as follows :-

He has, however, made two contradictory statements in the witness-box nder eirenmetanees which I shall deal with later, the first implicating and the sabsequent etatement exemplating Sahib Din and his sone. The case against Sahib Din and his sons turns to a great extent on the finding as to which of these contradistory statements is true. The evidence in the present case is purely circumstantial. But the shain which links the various scattered factors into a combination of circumstances from which, in my opinion, the guilt of the assused must inevitably be inferred, is the original statement of Khwaja which I hold to represent the true version of the facts, If, however, this original statement were held to be unreliable, there is nothing in the remaining evidence to fix the guilt indubitably on the accused."

It will thus be seen that the case against the present appellants rests almost entirely on the statement made by Khwaja on the 18th of May 1921 from which he resiled on the 13th of June 1921. The Magistrate has held that the statement of Khwaja made on the 18th of May 1921 is admissible as evidence at the trial held by him and further that it is relevant. Mr. Petman contended that this statement was not, and sould not be, regarded as evidence in the trial. He pointed out that the ordinary rule is that a Magistrate convicting an accused should hear the evidence against him. A departure from this rule is to be found in section 350, Criminal Procedure Code, which deals with the procedure to be adopted when a case is transferred from one Magistrate to another. Clause (1) of that section gives the Magistrace, to whom the ease is transferred, a diserction to ast on the evidence recorded by his predesessor, or partly recorded by his predecessor and partly recorded by bimself or to re summon the witnesses and re-sommenes the inquiry or trial. Proviso (a) says that in any trial the accused may, when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings, demand that the witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and re-heard. The learned Counsel contended that when the accused asting under this proviso elaims that any witness or witnesses be re-heard, the Magistrate is bound to disregard the record of such witness or witnesses' testimony and to come to a finding on the evidence recorded by himself. On the other hand, Mr. Dalip Singh contended that this provise only refere to trials and that as a trial before a Magistrate does not commence until a charge has been framed, the previous record of the testimony of any wilness is evidence in the case which can be treated as substantive evidence by a Magistrate who finally disposes of it. He urged that the proviso under considertion does not give an accused the right to have a trial re commenced but merely to insiet on the Magistrate seeing and hearing the witnesses. My attention was drawn to Orown v. Nathu (1) and Palaniandy Gounden v. Emperor (2). In the former case it was held that a trial commences with the framing of the charge and that, therefore, the record Magisfrate must either convict or acquit and not discharge if a charge bad been framed by the first Magistrate. The facts of that case, however, were somewhat different to the present one. In the Madras case it was held that the proviso (a) does not apply to what are termed in that Province register eases" or in other words committal prosecdings when the offence under inquiry was triable exclusively by the Sessions Court. Mr. Petman, in support of his contention, that when an accused person takes action under this proviso (a), the previous record of evidence becomes inadmissible, referred me to varicus authorities. First Daroga Chowdhury v. Emperor (3). In that case it was held that proviso (a) to section 355, Criminal Precedure Code, meant a new beginning, a new start unfettered and unrestricted by any. thing that antecedently had taken place. The facts are dissimilar and I would not be prepared to subscribe to that pronouncement in ite entirety. Secondly Sobh Nath Singh v. Emperor (4). In that case certain persons were tried on a charge of rioting bafore a Magistrate who was transferred before he could complete the case. The trial was then continued in the Court of a second Magistrate hefore whom an application was made under rection 250, Criminal Proecduse Code, for a de novo trial. This applieation was granted, but when the witnesses for the prosecution appeared, the Mukhtar for the prosecution declined to examine them. The deferoe Mukhtar without objecting proseeded to orcss examine the witnesses.

This procedure was held not to be a compliance with the provisions of section 350. This case also does not touch the presise point now before me. Thirdly Queen-Empress v. Bashir Khan (5). There certain persons were tried for an offenes under section 355, Indian Penal Code. The case was pending before certain Honorary Magistrates who had examined the witnesses for the prosecution and framed a charge. On the application of the accused persons the case was at this stage transferred from the Court of the Honorary Magistrates to that of a First Class Magistrate to whom an application was made, asking him to re-summon the witnesses for the prosecution and to have them examined before himself de noro. This request was not acceded to. It was held that the failure to comply with this request, whether amounting to an irregularity or illegality or not, was prejudicial to the accused. And fourthly Ram Dass v. Emperor (6). The point in this case, however, was whether restion 350, Criminal Precedure Code, applied to cases where a trial is transferred from one Magistrate to another by an order of the superior Court or only to cases where a Magistrate ceases to have jurisdiction by reason of his transfera point which does not arise in the present case.

Mr. Patman then drew my attention to Aigar's Oriminal Procedure Ocde, Third Edition, Volume II, page 1090, under the heading " Effect of de novo trial." This learned author is of opinion that sestion 350 gives the second Magistrate two alternative courses ; firsly, he can act on the evidence recorded by his predecessor or partly recorded by his predecessor and partly recorded by himself; or secondly, he may summon the witnesses and re commence the erquiry or trial. Where an accused demards that all the witnesses are to be re summoned and re heard, he compels the second Magistrate to adopt the second alternative course and to re-commence the trial or erquiry. If the second re-commences the trial, he has full power to deal with the case and can discharge the

He cannot act on the charge, if any, framed by his predecessor, or on any depositions or examination of the accused recorded by him. In support of this proposition the learned author cites the case of King-Emperor v. Nga Pe (7) which lays down that when an accused person acts on proviso (a) and demands that the witnesses here summoned and re heard he compels the eccord Magistrate to re commence the trial.

It will be seen that none of these authorities deal directly with the point now under consideration with the exception of King. Empsror v. Nga Pe (7), and it has been argued by the learned Counsel for the appellants that as the object with which an acoused person takes action under proviso (a) to section 350 is that the second Magis. trate should re-bear the evidence of a witness or witnesses and form bis own ecnelusions as to the weight to be given to the evidence so recorded, this object would be nullified if the previous record by the first Magistrate was to be treated as substantive evidence in the trial itself. It seems to me that there is a good deal of force in this contention. The primary rule is that the Magistrate convicting should be the Magistrate who resorded the evidence. The Legislature by the enactment of section 350 has sanction. ed a departure from this ordinary rule in certain circumstances and has limited the discretion of the second Magistrate by enacting the provise which enables the person accused to insist on all or part of the evidence being re-heard by the Magistrate who is finally to dispose of the charge against him. If, as in the present case, a witness resiles from a statement made previously by him and if in spite of this fact the previous statement can be regarded as substantive evidence in the trial, the object of the provise would become of little value. The question is one of consider. importance generally and is vital able in the present case; and though I am inclined to the view that the previous record cannot be regarded as a piece of substantive evidence, I think that the matter is one which should go before a Division Banch and in order to save time I refer the whole same to the Division Bench,

JUDGMENT.

Sahib Din CHEVIS, J .- In this case and his sons, Muhammad Sharif and Muham. mad Latif, bave been convicted of offences under section 489 A, B and D and centensed to an aggregate of ten years' imprisonment each, while Sahib Din has also been sentenced to fine or imprisonment in default. The fasts are stated in the order of the 17th November 1921, by which a Judge sitting in Chambers referred this case to a Division Bench. The orusial question for desision is, whether the evidence of Khwaja, recorded by Sheikh Abdul Rabman, Magistrate of the First Clase, is admissible in evidence. The learned District Magistrate, who has convicted the appellants admits that the evidence is insufficient for a conviction if the statement of Khwaja be excluded; and Mr. Dalip Singh on behalf of the Crown has admitted before us that he sannot argue that the conviction should be supported if Khwaja's statement recorded by Sheikh Abdul Rahman excluded. What happened may be briefly related as follows:-

The case was sent up before the District Magistrate with an incomplete chalan and as the District Magistrate himself had not time to take up the case at once, he sent the sage to bheikh Abdal Rahman, who recorded the evidence of Khwaja, Siraja and Muhammad Din. The case was then re transferred to the Court of the District Magietrate, when the accused applied that Khwaja should be re-called and re examined, and the prosecution applied for Siraja to be re-salled and re-examined, while both sides agreed that the evidence of Muham. mad Dip, recorded by Sheikh Abdul Bahman, should be transferred and treated as evidence proseedings before the District Magistrate. Khwaja, when re-salled, retracted. his former story entirely. The provisions of section 350, Criminal Procedure Code, have to be earefully examined. It is clear that when a case is transferred from the Court of one Magistrate to that of another, the succeeding Magistrate may elect to act on the evidence already taken, and, if the syidense for the prosecution has not been completed, he may proceed to record the evidence of the remaining witnesses, or he may re-summon the witnesses and re-somonce the enquiry or trial. In this case, the

BAHIB DIN C. EMPEROR.

District Magistrate, acting partly at the request of the assused persons, treated the evidence of one witness, viz. Mahammad Din, as if it had been resorded by himself and so it cannot be said that the enquiry or trial was recommended from the very beginning. He re-summoned and re-examined two other witnesses but not the third, and I do not think that this action of his was contrary to the provisions of section 350. But the proviso to the section lays down that, in any trial the accused may, when the second Magistrate commences his proeeedings, demand that the witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and re-heard. On behalf of the Crown it is urged before us that the proceedings prior to framing of the charge were only an inquiry and not a trial, and that the accused persons, there. fore, could not claim as of right that any witnesses should be re-summoned when the District Magistrate commensed his proceedings, since the provise gives the accused a right only to demand that the witnesses should be re-summoned in case of a trial. For the proposition that until charge is framed a proceeding is only an enquiry and not a trial. Mr. Dalip Singh relies on the following rulings: Narayanaswamy Naidu, In re (8), Queen-Empress v. Chotu (9) and Hari Das Sanyal v. Saritulla (10). No doubt, there are remarks in these judgments to the effect that a trial begins when an accused is charged and is called upon to answer, e.g. see Narayonaswamy Naidu, In re (8) but I note that all three of these cases deal with the scope of the provisions of section 437 and do not refer to section 350. In Crown v. Nathu (1), I also find it stated that proceedings prior to the imposition of a charge amount "probably" only to an enquiry, not to a trial. But all that the ruling seems to me to lay down is that, when a charge has once been framed, if the accused demands, in pursuance of the right given to him by the proviso, that the evidence shall be heard, the trial re commenses and unless the accused is convicted. the order must be one of acquittal and not of discharge. On the other hand, in King-Emperor v. Nga Pe (7), I find it held that when an accused demands that all the witnesses be re-summoned and re-heard, the enquiry or trial must be re commenced and all the previous proceedings, whether a sharge has been framed or not, must be treated as non-existent. In Daroga Chowdhury v. Emperor (3) it was held that, where a Magistrate on taking over a case recommences the whole enquiry, the proceedings before the former Magistrate are entirely superseded and cannot be revived, even if former Magistrate subsequently is re-transferred to the district and again takes over the case, In Sobh Nath Singh v. Emperor (4) the Magistrate who took over the case from his predecessor commenced the trial de novo. The prosecution witnesses were re-called but not again examined though they Were tendered for eross-examination and were cross-examined by the defence. It was held that the trial was invalid as not in assordance with the provisions of section 350 and a re-trial was ordered. Whether a charge had been framed by the Magistrate, who first dealt with the case, does not appear from the report.

Turning to the table of contents at the beginning of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I find that there are certain Chapters dealing with enquiries and others dealing with trials. Chapter XVIII relates to enquiries into cases triable by the Court of Session or High Court. Chapter XX deals with the trial of summons.eases, Chapter XXI deals with the trial of warrant-cases, Chapter XXII deals with summary trials, and Chapter XXIII deals with trials before High Courts and Courts Now, the proceedings under of Session. Obapter XVIII are obviously enquiries and not trials, for the reason that the Magistrate who enquires into the case has no power to convict and can only either discharge or commit for trial. Such proceedings must elearly be regarded merely as enquiries and Trials before the Court of not as trials. Session or High Court commence with the framing of a charge, and obviously such proceedings are not merely enquiries but are undoubtedly trials. But there are eases spoken of as trials and in which no charge sheet is ever framed, vis., summary trials and trials of summons-eases. If it be correct to say that in no case does a trial commence until a charge is framed, then it seems to me to follow that what is spoken of in the Code as trial of summors. cases and summary trials are not really trials at all but only enquiries. But I feel sure that the right given to an accused person by the proviso to section 350 was not intended to be exercised only in trials before the Courts of Session or High Courts. The principle in all cases surely must be the same, viz, that an accused person has a right not to be convicted of a criminal offence by a Magistrate who has not himself heard the evidence. I would hold, therefore, that even in the ease of a summary trial or a trial of a summonsease the accused, if the case is transferred from one Magistrate's Court to that of another, has a right to demand that the witnesses or any of them shall be resummoned and re-heard. I would hold, therefore, that for the purposes of scotion 350 a trial cannot be said to commence only when the charge is framed and that, though in an enquiry by a Magistrate into a case triable only by a Court of Session or High Court the assused has not the right to demand that the witnesses shall be re-summoned and re heard in the event of change of Magistrate, he has such a right not only in warrant cases but also in the ease of summary trials and trials of summons cases, and I would hold that the time when he must exercise the right is when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings (these are the words actually used in the proviso). I lay stress on the fact that the proviso lays down that the time for the demand to be made by the accused is when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings. If the trial does not commence till a charge is framed, and if the case has been transferred from one Magietrate's Court to that of another before a charge has been framed, then apparently the proviso does not help the accused person at all. For, if, when the new Magistrate commences the proceedings, the assused asks that the witnesses should be resummened, the answer will be that the proceedings are not yet a trial but only an enquiry; whereas, if he waits until a charge has been framed and then make his demand, the answer will be that the time for making such a demand is when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings. The object of the provisions is, no doubt, as I have already stated, that a man shall not, without his consent, be convicted on evidence which has not been recorded in the presence of the Magistrate with whom the final decision of the case rests. There are certain special provisions in the Code by which evidence resorded in the presence of the convicting Magistrate or Judge may be treated as evidence in the case. For instance, section 288 provides for the evidence of a witness recorded by the Committing Magistrate being treated as evidence in the case the discretion of the Judge presiding the trial. Section 512 again provides for evidence recorded in the absence of absecuding person being treated as evidence against him at a subsequent trial if the witness is dead or incapable of giving evidence or if his attendence cannot be produced without unreasonable delay. But there is no provision, so far as I know, providing for evidence recorded by one Magistrate being treated as evidence by a second Magistrate in a case where the accused person has demanded that the witnesses shall be resummoned and re-heard unless his demand is to be complied with. If he has a right to make a demand, it must not be refused, and I think it will be no answer in such a case to say that the witnesses whom the assused wishes to resummon are dead. In such a case, I think, the depositions of the witnesses recorded by the former Magistrate sould not be treated by the susseeding Magistrate as evidence. Similarly, too, in a case like the present where the witness is resummoned and retracts his former statements, 1 do not think it is admissible to treat the former statement evidence in the case. 88 would hold then that evidence the of Khwaja recorded by Sheikh Abdur Rahman is inadmissible in the present ease, and, as it is admitted that excluding that evidence there is no sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction, I would acquit the appellants, set aside conviction and sentences and order them to be released and the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

ABDUL Qualit, J.—I concur. This appeal will be accepted, the appellants will be released and the fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminat Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 458

-Maintenance-Husband agreeing to maintain wife, but refusing to cohabit with her-Wife, whether entitled to separate maintenance.

Where a husband agrees to protect and maintain his wife in a manner suitable to her condition in life, it is a sufficient offer under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the mere fact that he refuses to cohabit with her is not a ground for granting her separate maintenance.

Petition under sections 435 and 439, Oriminal Procedure Code, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Ellore, in Miscellaneous Case No. 11 of 1921, dated the 13th August 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. Satyanarayana, for the Petitioner.

There has been no proper offer by the respondent to maintain petitioner within the meaning of section 458 (3), proviso. Though he agreed to maintain her and give her clothing, he does not make up his mind to cohabit with her. Marakkal v. Kandappa (1) and Queen Empress v. Mannatha Achari (2).

Mr. V. Suryanarayana, for the Respondent.—There has been a sufficient offer under the section. The section only requires that the husband should offer to maintain his wife. The respondent has agreed to give petitioner desent maintenance according to her station in life. The refusal to cohabit does not entitle petitioner to separate maintenance.

ORDER.—I think the order of the Magistrate is right. The counter petitioner agreed to maintain the petitioner, his wife, with the consideration due to her position as wife and give her food and clothing, but stated that he had not made up his

It is argued that this is not a sufficient offer under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code. All that the proviso to sub-clause (3) enacts is that if a husband offers to maintain his wife on condition of her living with him and she refuses to do so, the Magistrate may consider any ground of refusal stated by her and pass orders.

I do not think there is anything in the Code which compels the Criminal Court to award separate maintenance to a wife whom the husband agrees to protest and maintain in a manner suitable to her position in life because he refuses to schabit with her. Reference has been made to Marakkal v. Kandappa (1), where it was held that an offer by a Hindu baving two wives to maintain his first wife by allowing her to live in his bonse and to supply her with grain to be scoked and caten separately coupled with a refusal to live with her as busbard and wife was insufficient in & complaint under section 536 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872. in that case was to treat the wife practieally as an outcaste. In Queen-Empress v. Marnatha Achari (2), it was held that all that is necessary is that the offer must be an offer to maintain the wife with the consideration due to her position as wife.

The question was considered by Jardine and Parcons, JJ., in Gulabdas Bhaidas, In re (3) with which judgment I entirely agree. I diemiss the petition.

The question as to the existence of a custom of privacy in any locality is a question of fact only, and where ovidence for and against the alleged castom has been properly taken and considered by the lower Court, a High Court is not entitled in second appeal to disturb the lower Court's finding on the point. [p. 834, col. 1.]

Under Order XLI, rulo 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, a Judge is authorised to frame new issues in a suit and allow additional evidence to be adduced where he finds that question essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits has not been properly raised and tried in the lower Court. [p. 835,

col. 1.]

In the town of Larkana in Sind there is a eastom of privacy with respect to the roofs of houses which contain parapet walls round them and where the women sleep at night in the hot weather, and any threatened invasion of the right sufficient to cause substantial damage entitles the person aggrieved to an injunction. [p. 835, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, a person raises the roof of his house and opens a window overlooking the roof of the house of another person, he commits a nuisance implying substantial damage within the meaning of section 38 of the Easements Act, as his act materially diminishes the value of the dominant heritage by diminishing its value as a house suitable for use by a family and he is liable to be restrained. Second appeal against a desision of the District Judge, Larkana.

Mr. Rupoland Billaram, for the Appellent.

Mr. Tahilram Maniram, for the Respond. oni, JUDGMENT.-The plaintiff respondent has been granted a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant-appellant from opening any windows and spertures in his house so as to ozerlook into the house of the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court has found the facts to be as follows :-

The plaintiff and the defendant own adjoining houses in Larkana. Both houses are old, but the defendant's was the older one. It was also I or 2 feet higher than the plaintifi's. The plaintiff's roof is flat and is unsovered; and his family, which is pardah-nashin, sleep on it in the hot weather. To secure privacy it has (as is usual in Larkana) a reed parapet wall round it. The defendant's roof was accessible by means of stair, and apparently was flat, defendant's statement that it has no parapet wall has been disbelieved. On the plaintiff's roof is a privy, this is currounded by reed wa'ls which only screen a person when sitting down. The height of plaintiff's parap); walls secured privacy for his roof to the extent that his women could sit or sleap without any real danger of being see 1. They could apparently be seen only by a person standing and looking over defendan 'a parapet wall,

The above deals with the sircumstances originally existing. The defendant is a Zemindar, who is not a resident of Larkana, and is never likely to bring his women folk to the town. He had resently bought this house and was re-building it, when the suit was filed. In doing so he has built it a storey higher than before and proposes to put a window in the north wall. would overlook the plaintiff's roof. The learned District Jadge has also held it proved (1) that there is a sustom in Larkana of secluding women from the observation of males ontside of the family circle; (2) that the great majority of the inhabitants, including all the respectable people of both the communities, Hindus and Mahammadans, follow it; (3) that in the hot weather seeluded or pardah women sleep on the roofs of their houses; (4) that the neighbours are expected to. and do respect the privacy of such women, or, in other words, there is a valid and binding enstom in Larkana of including the roofs of the houses in portion thereof ordinarily excludad from the observation. He holds that the losal sustom of privacy is ansient, certain and reasonable, so as to be valid in law, and that the plaintiff who had so far enjoyed privacy in respect of his roof, had a cuetomary easement to enjoy it, which would be invaded by the opening of the threatened window, such windows in the opinion of the learned Judge, would be a nuisance practically preventing plaintiff's women folk from using the roof. He accordingly thought it a proper case for an injunction. This is a second appeal, and we can only interfere one of the grounds mentioned in section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Mr. Rapeband for the appellant has attacked the finding that there is a custom of privacy in Larkana of the kind mentioned above, but it is clear that the question as to the existence of such a custom is a question of fact only. Kailas Chandra Datta v. Fadma Kishore Roy (1). Evidence for and against the alleged oustom has been properly taken and considered in a very careful judgment and we are not entitled in second appeal to disturb the lower Court's finding on this point. Two recent decisions of the Privy Conneil which emphasize this point are Nofar Chandra Pal Chozdhury v. Shukur Sheikh (2) and Milnapur Zenindary Co., Ltd. v. Uma Charan Mandal (3).

I, therefore, confine myself to discussing the questions of law which have been raised. First, it is said that the District Court Judge committed an error of procedure in raising additional issues as to the custom extending to the roofs of houses and in allowing additional evidence on this point. What happened was, that the Judge, after hearing the appeal and reading the record, at first concluded that the plaintiff's claim was not established. Before, however, delivering the judgment he had written to that effect, he showed it to the Pleaders concerned in the case, one of whom urged that he had misconceived the whole question and asked him to visit the houses of the parties before giving judgment. He agreed to do this, and made an inspection accordingly, accompanied by the Pleaders. This inspection, he says, showed at once that the record did not properly explain the case for the plaintiff, for it was based on an alleged onstom of which was not made clear by the pleadings or issues and had not been sufficiently dealt with in the examination of the witnesses. He gave grounds for thinking that the alleged custom exists, but he could not hold this proved on the scanty materials afforded by the record. Accordingly, he thought it necessary and equitable to have a further enquiry and allow additional evidence for and against the specific custom relied on by the plaintiff. He framed the following two issues for this purpose:—

1. In the town of Larkana, are the roofs of the houses of people who follow the purdah custom, included in the portion of their houses ordinarily excluded from observation?

2. Is the alleged enetom of excluding the roof from observation sufficiently eartain and invariable to give rise to an easement?

The Judge took some evidence himself on these issues, but finding that he had not time to continue doing so on ascount of his criminal work, he passed an order under Order XLI, rule 25. Civil Procedure Code, remitting the above two issues to the lower Court and directing it to take the additional evidence required, etc.

Mr. Rupehand urges that the District Judge thereby made out the new case for the plaintiff, which was outside the plead. ings. The plaint is, no doubt, somewhat vaguely drawn and does not specifically refer to the roof of plaintiff's house. But it elearly objects to windows and apertures in the northern wall of the defendant's house, which would overlook the plaintiff's house, and the claim was based on a eustom of privacy and allegation that the proposed windows and apertures would greatly interfere with plaintiff's pre existing privacy. It turns out that the only part of the plaintiff's house affected by the threatened windows is his roof, and this was apparently quite elear to the parties. Judgment of the Sub Judge, who tried the suit, refers to the roof as the part of the house where there would be an invasion of privacy, and the evidence taken did (as mentioned in the District Judge's first interlocutory judgment) include some, about roofs, though not sufficient to enable him to deside the real issues arising on that connection.

In these eironmstances, I think it is clear that there has been no material departure from the pleadings, so as to contravene the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Eshenchunder Singh v. Shamachurn Bhutto (4). Nor can there be any question of the defendant being taken by surprise. I. therefore, reject the contention put forward by Mr. Rupshand. I think the District Judge asted rightly in bolding that questions essential to the right desision of the suit upon the merite had not been properly raised and tried in the lower Court, and in framing the issues he did, and allowing additional evidence to be adduced regarding them. Such action is, in fact. expressly authorised by Order XLI, rale 25, Oivil Procedure Code, and had the Judge failed to act as be did, his decision might have been successfully objected to in resond appeal under clauses (b) and (c) of section 100.

Mr. Rupshand further contended that the Judge had no power to take the additional evidence himself as he first of all did. I think this objection is also unsound. words 'for any other substantial sause' in Order XLI, rule 27 (1) (b), Civil Procedure Code, are wide enough to cover the sause in question. Moreover, the ciranmetances eatisfy the limitations laid down in Reshowji Issur v. G. I. P. Railway Co. (5). The further evidence was ordered after the appeal on the merite had been heard and the evidence as it stood had been examined by the Judge; also in consequence of inherent lacuna or defect becoming apparent on examining the evidence as it stood. The defest was the omission of the parties to grasp the essential questions arising regarding the alleged privacy of plaintiff's roof and addrsing adequate evidence regarding them. But even if the case does not fall under Order XLI, rule 27, the error of the District Judge would, in my opinion, be an irregularity not affecting the merits of the case and falling under section 99 of the Code. It was certainly not a "substantial error or defeat in the procedure which may possibly have produced error or defect in the docision of the case upon the merits," so as to fall under section 100 (1) (c). His having examined some of the witnesses would in fact put him in a better position to appresiate their testimony and so do justice between the parties. The next objections to be considered are those affecting the decision of the lower Court that the custom he held proved had the essential attributes of a eastom valid in law. It was argued that a valid custom of privacy covers only portions of a house ordinarily used by women, and that a roof could not be such a place, as it is only in the hot weather that they sleep there. But the fact that the Iceal custom mentioned in Illustration (b) to section 18 of the Easements Act refers to portions of a house "which are ordinarily excluded from observation," does not preclude a local costom of the kind held established in this ease. That the use of the roof by plaintiff's women for sitting and sleeping is reasonal and not all the year round is a part of the local custom; and section 15 does not say that a customary easement must be a right asserted or exereised continuously. Section 6 of the Act, on the contrary, shows it can be exercised at eartain times only without this affecting its validity. In this case the District Judge has held that in the town of Larkana the roofs of the houses of people who follow the purcha eastom are included in the portions of their houses ordinarily excluded from observation, and we are bound by this finding of fact. Arguments like the one raised by Mr. Rupchand that the parapet walls are erected for self-protection and not for securing privacy, are clearly irrelevant before us. Of course, in a case where there is no parapet wall round a roof, which is thus open to easy observation, there might be ground for coneidering that no right of privacy in respect thereof sould properly be established; but that is not the ease now under consideration.

Objection has been taken to the findings that the custom in question is ancient, certain and reasonable. On these points it is sufficient to say that I agree with the reasons given in paragraphs 40 46 of the District Judge's judgment. I would only add that, having regard to the long continued prevalence of the pardah system in India and the predominance of Muhammadanism in Sind, at any rate since the 12th century A. D. (Sind Gazatteer, page 92), there is strong presumption that the enstom was not of recent growth but has extended over many generations. As is pointed out in Kuar Sen v. Mamman (6), a local onstom need not be shown to be immemorial, if it is sufficiently certain and reasonable to satisfy the legal requirements of a valid oustom. Illustration (b) to section 18 of the Easements Act affords statutory recognition of the validity of such a custom in this country. It also shows that it may give rise to an easement. That the plaintiff has such an easement has been found by the lower Court, and this follows from its findings as to the customs and plaintiff's previous enjoyment of privacy for his roof in accordanse with that custom. It was argued by Mr. Rupehand that the privacy held established was merely a sort of semi-privacy. but there are, of course, degrees of privacy and that which the Distrist Judge finds the plaintiff has enjoyed is (though not complete) yet substantial enough to be entitled to the protection of the law.

Then, is the plaintiff entitled to the injunction which has been granted to him? On this point, the District Judge has rightly considered the question whether the threatened disturbance of his easement would amount to a nuisance and has answered this in the affirmative. Mr. Tahilram's contention that a mere invasion of plaintiff's right of privacy is sufficient to entitle him to an injunction is incorrect, as is shown in Framji Shapurji Patuck v. Framii Edulji Datar (7). There must be a threat of disturbance sufficient to cause substantial damage to the plaintiff, or in other words, it must amount to a nnisance, which in law implies substantial damage. As stated in Halsbury's Law of England, Volume XXI, Article 853, page 510, the damage must not be merely centimental or trifling; but in considering whether the property of the plaintiff is in fact injured, or his comfort or convenience in fact materially interfered with, by an alleged nuisance, regard is had to the character of the neighbourhood and the pre existing circumstances (Pollock's Law of Torts, 7th Edition, page 401). In my opinion, the Court should, therefore, attach weight to the feelings of persons who follow the pardah sustom, such as live in Larkans, and avoid regarding such feelings as sentimental, or trivial in nature. I think the District Judge has rightly held that the opening of a window overlooking the plaintiff's roof would be a nuisance, even though its position may be only a little above the top of the parapet that was formerly on the defendant's roof. As he points out, a window raises an apprehension of spying, whilst no one can look over a parapet without himself being seen; and in view of the extra risk, the plaintiff's women folk would not be able to use the roof with the same security that they did before. The case is to some extent analogous to that of soldiers defending themselves on the plaintiff's roof from the attack by riflemen from defendant's roof. The former would obviously have less security if a 4 feet parapet wall on defendant's roof was re-placed by a wall entirely screening the latter from view, except through a window in it. Glances from eyes of male strangers correspond to bullets in this comparison, and the analogy derives some force from the fact that the defendant's house is a Zemindari Otak, likely to be used by young unmarried men. I agrae, therefore, with the view of the District Judge that there will be a material diminution of plaintiff's right of privacy of his roof, as it has hitherto existed and been enjoyed. His exercise of this right in the accustomed way will be materially interfered with. The inteference will, I think, materially diminish the value of the dominant heritage by diminishing its value as a house suitable for use by a family, whose women are pardah. nashin and the case, therefore, falls under the definition of substantial damage in sec. tion 33 of the Easements Act. I think also that the threatened disturbance must neces. sarily disturb the easement in the manner already mentioned, and the condition required by section 35 (b) of the Ast is, therefore, fulfilled. Finally, I think, it reasonably clear that the act threatened will be nuisance, so that section 56 (8) of the Specific Relief Act does not prevent an injunction being granted. I would assordingly dismiss the appeal with coste.

—The meaning of Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, is that a plaintiff in order to bring his suit within the jurisdiction of a particular Court may in his plaint relinquish a portion of his claim based on the same cause of action. But once the suit is filed in a Court having no jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for in the plaint, the provision in Order VII, rule 10 at once becomes applicable and the only course open to the Court is to return the plaint for presentation to proper Court. JUDGMENT.

Sadativa Alvas, J.—Second Appeal No. 502 of 1920 and the connected Civil Revision Petition No. 308 of 1920 have arisen out of a suit instituted by three trustees of a temple against their so trustee in a Munsif's Court.

The suit, as I understand the plaint, is one for directing the defendant to submit his accounts and to pay up whatever may be found as the balance in his hands on the scratiny of the accounts. The Courtfee paid on the valuation of the reliefs sought for were paid on two sums as follows:-"(a) amount which plaintiffs estimate as likely to be due from defendant on assount of receipts and expenditure in res. pest of the temple..... Rs. 950.0 0," "(b) for randering accounts Rs. 50-0.0." Order VII. rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Cods, states that where the plaintiff sues for an amount which will be found due to him on taking unsettled assounts between him and tha defendant, the plaintiff shall state approximately the amount sued for and I take it that R. 950 is mentioned accordingly in the plaint as such approximate amount.

As I said, this suit was brought in the Muneil's Court. Section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, corresponding to old section 53', contains a new eleuse, (clause 2) which is as follows :- "Save as provided by the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, no suit elaiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section (1) shall be instituted in respect of any such trust as is therein referred to" (i.e. a public charitable or religious trust) except in conformity with the provisions of that sub sestion" (ie., except in a Distrist Court or in specially empowered Court after obtaining the sanction of the Advocate. Ganeral). Paragraph 7 of the plaint, no doubt, resites that the defendant received certain moneys (1,300 and odd rupees) and sertain quantities of paddies (195 and odd kalams) belonging to the temple. But that resital was elsarly inserted in order to show that the defendant is liable to submit his accounts in respect of those amounts and paddies and the other and predies which must have esived by him (ess 9th and 10th paragraphs plaint mentioning approximate οŧ annual incomes of the temple) and to have the accounts duly scrutinized and to pay the balance after deducting authorized and valid expenses proved and established by such serutiny. In paragraph 19 (b) of the plaint, the plaintiffs also seek for resovery of damages from the defendants for acts of malfeasance and misfeasance (the Munsif has, in the beginning of his judgment, set out the nature of the suit correctly), and I am, therefore, clear that the recitals in paragraph 7 of the plaint as regards sertain sums and paddies cannot be treated as eapable of converting the suit into, or permitting us to construe the suit as, a simple money suit for the recovery of those particalar sams and of the value of those particular paddies mentioned in paragraph 7 alone. The decree passed was also not a money and a paddy decree for the amounts and quantities mentioned in paragraph 7 but for what was agreed upon as due on the soruting and settlement of accounts.

Now sub clause 1 of section 92, Civil Proeedure Code has added to the sub-slauses of the old section 539 a new clause (d) whose words are "directing accounts and inquiries." The present suit is a suit praying for a direction to the defendant to render accounts and for inquiries into the amount due by him as such an accountable person and, therefore, clearly falls under clause (1). Hence, it follows that as under new clause (2) of section 92, a suit claiming any of the raliefs specified in sub-section (1) cannot be instituted except in conformity with the provisions of sub sestion (1) i.e., except in the District Court or in a Subordinate Jadge's Court, (all Saburdinate Judges having been empowered by the Link Government in the Madras Presidency to entertain such saits), this suit brought in the District Munsif's Court was brought in a Court which had no jurisdiction to extertain it. The decision in Nellaiyappa I illai v. Thangama Nachiyar (1) was pronounced when the old Code was in force and when no provision corresponding to the provision of section 92, clause (2) of the present Civil Procedure Code was in existence. Having regard to the history of the legislation on this matter, I think the reasonable conelusion is that the Legislature wanted to put an end to the conflict of decisions between the Bombay High Court and the Madras High Court on the question whether a suit may or may not be entertained for any or all of the reliefs mentioned in section 539 (old Code) without conforming with the requirements of that section (present section 92, clause 1), if the plaintiffs were persons who had by the common law of the land or otherwise a sertain peculiar and special interest in the trust (such as that of a trustee thereof) over and above that of the ordinary public "having an interest in the trust." That conflict was intended by the Legislature to be ended by enacting elause (2) so as to favour the Bombay view.

Now, taking it then that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, the defendants, not taking an objection, in the first instance, cannot confer on the District Munsif jurisdiction to deal with any question arising in the suit except of course the question of jurisdistion. [See Ledgard v. Bull (2).] Order II, rule 2, no doubt, plaintiff to relinquish any enables portion of his claim in order to bring a suit within the jurisdiction of a particular Court. That, of course, means that in bringing the suit, he can in his plaint relinquish any portion of his elaim based upon the same cause of action in order to bring it within the jurisdiction of a particular Court. But if a suit has been filed in a Court having no jurisdiction to grant the reliefs prayed for, I think the provision in Order VII, rule 10, of the Code at once becomes applicable. That provision sorresponds to old section 57. In the old section, it was enacted 'the plaint shall be returned to be presented to the proper Court in the following exces," and then follows the enumeration of earss where the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Order VII, rale 10 enacts the same provisions more tersely than: 'The plaint shall at any stage of the suit be returned to be presented to the Court in which the suit should have been instituted." Of course, it follows that all proceedings which took place in the suit before such return are of no effect.

Now, as I said, this suit should have been instituted in the proper District Court or Subordinate Judge's Court and should not have been instituted in the Munsif's Court. Hence the only course open to the Mansif was to have returned the plaint to be presented to the proper Court. I think whether a second appeal lies or not, whether the civil revision patition entertainable on the grounds set forth in it or not, the question of jurisdiction having been brought to the notice of this Court, the proper course is to do what the District Munsif ought to have done, namely, order the return of the plaint to be presented to the proper Court.

On the question what is a consent decree within the meaning of clause (3) of section 96 of the new Civil Procedure Code (that elause containing a provision not found in the old Code), Tyabji, J., and myself expressed a certain opinion in Ayyagiri Veerasaling 1m v. Kovvuri Basicireddi (3) which was approved in Thenal Ammal v. Sokkammal (4), Oar opinion was that a consent decree was a deeree to the passing of which both sides consented in a communication or communieations made by both sides to the Court, and that a decree passed in ascordance with the terms to which the parties might have consented outside the Court but the passing of which decree, one side treence eti evig ten bluow bna bladdiw was not a consent decree. The soundness of that opinion was hotly criticised at the Bar and my learned brother expressed strong dissent therefrom at the arguments. There seems to be much to be said in favour of that view. Having, however, regard to the fast that in Order XLIII, rule 1 (corresponding to old section 538) a new provision has been inserted under elause (m), allowing an appeal from an order under rule 3 of Order XXIII, resording or refusing to record an agreement of compromise, I admit that there is great force in the contention that Order XXII, rule

In the view I have above taken of the proper course to be followed by this Court where a lower Court has no jurisdiction entertain suit, all the 8 eeedings passed by the lower Court during the course of the suit ought to be set aside and the only order which ought to have been passed by that Court, vie, the return of the plaint to be presented to the proper Court ought to be passed now. I would assordingly pass orders to that effect. As my learned brother takes a different view, the second appeal and civil revision petiticn will former dismissed. the with costs in plaintiff's favour.

COCITS TROTTER, J .- I regret that I cannot agree on all the points on which my learned brother has given judgment, though I do agree on some of them.

First with regard to the appeal. I am of opinion that no appeal lies under the Oode and of source in that opinion I am in corflict with the two eases referred to. The matter is of some importance, and my view is that Courts ought not to encourage multiplicity of appeals where the Code has indicated that they should some to a stop. What happened in this case was that the defendant in this suit was alleged to have given full authority

^{3.} Order XLIII, rule 1, slause (m) and section 96, clause (3) should be read together, and that, so reading them together, the only appeal intended by the Legislature was an appeal against the "recording or refusing to record" the agreement alleged to have been made between the parties about the passing of a particular decree, a decree passed and that finding arrived at in favour of such agree. ment is also intended in the expression, "decree passed with the consent of the parties" in section 96, clause (3). Though, in practice, there has been a distinction nenally made between what is called decree based on a compromise agreement and a decree passed with consent, I am (on further consideration) not very much inclined to stand by the opinion J, and myself expressed in Ayyagari Vesra. salingam v. Kosvuri Basivireddi (3) as I am as much (if I may say so with respect) for surtailing unnesessary and repeated appeals as my learned brother. It is, however, not essential to express a final opinion on that question for deciding this ease.

to his Vakil to arrange the settlement of the elaim against him by the payment of a lump sum of money in lieu of the moneys and paddy elaimed. The Vakils met and agreed on a figure which was endorsed on the pleadings and knowing the kind of person be had to deal with, the defendant's Vakil got the defendant to sign the paper himself. When it came to the passing of a decree, the defendant began to resile from the compromise he had entered into and made all sorts of allegations which have been entirely disbelieved by both the Courts below. An enquiry was held by the District Munsif as to whether or no it was a fact that the defendant had consented to judgment being entered up against him, and as a result of that enquiry, be found that be had consented. Now, ordinarily that would have been done by the machinery of Order XXIII, rule 3. An application would have been made to record the compromise and the Court would have made an order recording the compromise and would have gone on to pass a decree in accordance with that and from that order there is an appeal given by Order XLIII, rule 1 (m). So that whatever the result of the suit,-I will come to that presently-from the order resording the compromise there would have been an appeal, and if the Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the compromise cught not to have been recorded, it would, I suppose, bave ordered the District Munsif to re-try the suit.

But with regard to the suit itself, in my opinion, it is regulated by scetion 96 (3) which says that "no appeal shall lie from a deeree passed by the Court with the consent of the parties." I want to follow the reason of the thing and I cannot agree with the two decisions that have been cited that a decree passed with consent means and only means a decree passed with the consent of the parties expressed at the moment the decree is passed. It seems to me that the reason of the thing is this: there are only two ways in which a decree can come into being and there is no third way; one is by allowing the dispute to be determined by the Court and the other isyou may call it ocmpromise or consent or what you will-not by the determination of the Court but by reason of an agreement between the parties. That ceems to me to be the essence of a consent decree and I cannot conceive of anything that is neither a decree by the determination of the Court nor by consent of parties. It seems to me that every decree must be one or other of those things and it seems to me that the policy of the Code is that all consent deerees when they have been ones established to be by consent should be unappealable. The consideration for consent or compromise decrees is that both sides give up the right of appeal for ever and the Code, I think, includes eases of this sort when it says that these consent decrees should not be appealable. The answer to this, as I have pointed out already by implieation, is the answer pointed out in Thenal Ammil v. Sokkimmal (4), namely, that from the question of sensent being proper or not there ought to be an appeal, that is, although you cannot appeal from the decree as a decree when it is a consent decree, you can appeal against the determination that it is a consent Therefore, with regard to the appeal, my opinion is that no appeal lies and I do not think it lay to the lower Appellate Court either.

Then I come to the civil revision petition and that I think is more difficult matter. The defendant is invoking the aid of this Court in revision to say that there was no jurisdiction in the District Muneif's Court to try the suit. The suit is by three trustees of a temple against a so trustee asking for a variety of reliefs, and I think it may be said that the frame of the suit was very much to suggest that it was such a suit as would ordinarily be brought under section 92, Civil Procedure Code. Accounts were asked for and there was in the plaint a prayer for payment of a certain lump sum of money and a certain defined quantity of paddy. Now, what the defendant says is that the suit being of the kind contemplated by section 92, Civil Procedure Code, and the sanction of the Advocate General not having been obtained. it was incompetent for the plaintiffs to bring the suit without the sanction, and moreover, in a District Munsif's Court. I agree that the language of cection 92 must not necessarily be held to re enast the old law as laid down in Nellaiyappa Pillai v. Thangima Nachiyar (1) and other easer; and that the preliminaries required by section 92 of the Code must be somplied with. There are two answers put forward: one is a very surious one and it is this. The civil revision petiticn is against an order, not deerse, but it is to revise an order whereby the District Mansif refused to set aside the decree on the ground that it had not been obtained by a genuine consent, the defendant having been deceived by his own Vakil. At any rate, the petitioner asks that his signature should be cancelled. What Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyangar says is this: this has nothing to do with jurisdiction at all, simply to ask the Munsif to cancel the signature. I, at one time, was rather inclined to think that if there was no jurisdiction to try the case. there was no jurisdiction to try a point which can only be regarded as auxiliary to the case. It seemed to me that if he had no jurisdiction to try the suit, he had also no jurisdiction with regard to the petition. But I think there is another answer and it is one which I am prepared to adopt: in the plaint, as I have said, there are two pleas and there is a distinct claim for moneys and paddy; and with regard to that, the action was sattled by the defendant agreeing to pay so much money and the decree is for that and for none of the other reliefs. When the plaintiff consents to a decree in which one of the reliefs asked for is granted, it seems to me the only possible inference is that the rest of the reliefs he abandons.

That trings us to the question on which unfortunately I have to differ from my learn. ed brother, as to whether it is open to the plaintiffs to clothe the Court with jurisdiction by atardoning all claims except a claim for a specified sum of morey and paddy which would be a вапев cf which the Munsif was clearly competent to try. The question is whether Order II, rule 2 permits that course to be taken. I cannot see what there is in Order II, rule 2 which should hinder any person in abandoning any portion of his claim. It isays "the plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his elaim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court," It seems to me that when the plaintiff abandons all his claims except his claim for money and paddy and states the compromise as to tha to be recorded and consents to judgment, he may be taken to have abandoned all parts of his elaim which were obnoxious to the provisions of section 92 of the Code. I am therefore, prepared to hold that, by that abandonment which I hold to have taken place, the District Munsif was invested with jurisdiction and, therefore, there is nothing we can touch in revision. I may add that in the last resort I would be prepared to say that this is not a case in which even if there was a lack of jurisdiction I should exercise the powers of this Court which are purely discretionary in this matter. It seems to me that this is a fraudulent and verations defence and that the defendant ought not to be allowed to pursue his dishonest attitude any longer.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (f; -Suit for accounts-Preliminary decree-Defendant's appeal-

In an appeal from a preliminary decree in a suit for accounts an appellant has under section 7 (iv) (f) of the Court Fees Act the option of placing his own valuation upon the memorandum of appeal and of paying Court-fee according to that valuation [p.) 845, col. 2.]

KANHAIYA LAL D. RIM SABDP.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT .- Tois memorandum appeal has been laid before me as Taxing Judge in order that the question of the Court-fee payable in respect of the same may be finally determined. The suit was one "for accounts" within the meaning of section 7 (4) (f) of the Court Fees Act. of 1870. It was incumbent on the plaintiff to state the amount which he valued the relief sought, and the amount of the fee payable under the said Act was to be computed on this valuation. The plaintiff accordingly valued the relief sought by him at a sum of Rs. 8,000 and paid the necessary Court-fee. Court below has passed a preliminary decree which calls upon the defendant to render a true account of the transactions in suit. The defendant by his memcrandum of appeal seeks to have this decree set aside, not because he denies his liability to render accounts, which he has all along admitted, but because he takes exception to the form of the deerce and contends that it ought to have contained a specification of the period over which the liability to render assounts should extend and an adjudication upon a question which the defendant had raised as to the period of limitation applicable to a portion of the plaintiff's claim. The defendant, as appellant in this Court, criginally sought to file his apreal on a fixed fee of Re. 10. was undoubtedly liable to pay an ad valorem fce, as is sufficiently obvious from the wording of the section itself and was determined by a learned Judge of this Court in his decision in Bhola Nath, In the matter of (1). Now, the appellant in this Court had originally valued his appeal at the sum of Rs. 8,000 as stated in the plaint, but when called upon to pay an ad valorem fee, he asked to be permitted to amend the valuation. This permission was granted and he has amended the valuation by stating that the relief sought by him in his appeal to this Court is worth to him no more than Re. 200. On a formal objection taken by the Stamp Reporter to this Court, the matter has been crdered to be laid before me for adjudication. There is no doubt that the Madras High Court in the case of Dhupati Erinivasacharlu v. Perindevamma (2) bas held that in a matter of this cort the valuation put by the plaintiff on his plaint must be accepted by the appellant in any appeal which he may bring against the decree of the Trial Court. 1 do not know if the learned Judges, who formulated this decision, were thinking only of a preliminary decree, or had in mind the possibility of an appeal against a final decree in a suit for accounts. It seems sufficiently obvious that in the latter case the valuation put upon the plaint by the plaintiff could not possibly determine the correct valuation, and, therefore, the proper Court-fee Stamp, for the memorandom of appeal. Taking the present care as an instance, it is quite conceivable that when the Trial Court came to work out the accounte, it might find that the sum due to the plaintiff was either very much less or very much more than Bs. 8,000, In the latter case, of course, the provisions of scotion 11 of the Court Fees Act, VII of 1870, would protect the fiscal interests of the State. In either ease it is beyond question that the defendant, if he desired to appeal, would have to value his memorandum of appeal at the amount of the decree actually passed against bim, whatever that amount might be. I mention these considerations merely because they raise a doubt in my mind as to the correctness of the view taken by the Madras High Court. The point for determination before me is, however, the proper valuation of an appeal against a preliminary decree. Locking at the matter apart from technicalities, I think it obvious that it would be inequitable, and might produce serious hardship, to apply in all cases of this nature the principle insisted upon by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court. Taking the facts of the present case, to far as they are disclosed by the pleadings, they afford an illustration of my point. The plaintiff comes into Court claiming a settlement of accounts and alleging that at least Rs. 8,000 will be found due to him upon such settlement : naturally he is required to pay a Court-fee upon the sum of Rs. 2,000. The defendant does not deny that he is under some liability to render accounts, but contends that on such repdition of accounts, and after a proper application of the Statute of Limitation to sertain rortions of the plaintiff's elaim, the amount found due in favour of the latter will prove to be a trifling sum, if any. The Court of first instance has passed a preliminary decree directing the defendant to render accounts. It seems to me quite irrelevant to say that the defendant is appealing against the whole of that decree; be sould scarcely as a matter of form appeal against a part of it. fast remains that he takes exception to the form of the decree which has been pareed. He has nowhere abandoned or modified in the least his essential plea on the merits, namely, that the sum legally due from him will prove upon a proper examination of the question of accounts to be something far less than the amount stated in the plaint. There seems no principle of equity upon which the defendant can resconably be debarred from main(aining Lie appeal against this preliminary decree unless and until he is prepared to pay an ad ralorem fee upon the entire sum stated by the plaintiff in his plaint.

^{(1) 6} Ind. Cas. 832; 7 A. L. J. 546; 32 A. 517.

KANHAIYA LAL U. RAM SARUP.

The words of the section to be inter-

"The amount of fee payable under this Act in suits for accounts shall be computed according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint or memerandum of appeal," Those words, as they stand, are elearly in favour of the appellant's contention and, as I have already pointed out, I cannot see any principle of equity upon which it can be suggested that the appellant to this Court is not within his rights when he says that the success of the appeal which he desires to prefer to this Court will not be worth to him a larger sum than Re. 200. The learned Judges of the Madrae High Court seem to me to bave in effect added the words "and the valuation given in the plaint shall be accepted in the memorandum of appeal" to the section and the real question is whether there is any warrant in the context for doing this' If such warrant is to be found arywhere, it is in the words which immediately follow those already quoted by me. These words are :- 'In all such suits plaintiff shall state the amount at which he values the relief sought." It is no doubt a little difficult to understand wby the Legislature should have felt it necessary to add this proviso in respect of the plaintiff, without in express terms laying any analogous obligation upon the appellant. The answer seems to be that this proviso governs the whole of the suits falling under clauses (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e), as well as under clause (f) of sub-section 4 of section 7 of the Court Fees Act. In some of these cases no question of the passing of a preliminary decree can possibly arise, and the Legislature was probably of opinion that, in most instances at any rate, when once the Trial Court had passed a final decree, no difficulty would arise as to the valuation of the appeal therefrom. On the whole, taking the words of the section as they stand, I think that the appellent is allowed the option of placing his own valuation upon the memorandum of appeal in a case like the present, that no intention to the contrary can fairly be inferred from the wording of the section and that, in a case like the one now before me, it is by no means unreasonable that a defendant, who has all along been contending that he is being made the vistim of a wholly extravagant claim should be permitted to bring his appeal against the preliminary decree before this Court without being penalised in Court fees by reason of the heavy valuation put upon his elaim by the plaintiff. In the case to which I have already referred, which was decided by a learned Judge of this Court, it was assumed that the appellant would be permitted to put his own valuation upon his memorandum of appeal in a case like the present. I have now expressly examined the question and I am of opinion that the point was rightly assumed by my learned predecessor in favour of the appellant. This is my decision upon the question referred to me.

J. P. Order accordingly.

DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

OHINA MUNA CHAKRAPANI IYER PLAIATIFF-RESPONDENT.

Trust, construction of - Charitable trusts, creation of - Executory trusts, doctrine of, whether applicable.

A written agreement between two persons stated, "Bs. 300 with balance of interest which has been allotted for dwadeshi charity shall be allotted for that charity and a dharmasanam executed," and again, "the sum shall not remain with both of us but we shall abide by the advice of mediators and conduct the charity." In a suit to enforce the agreement as a trust:—

Held, that no trust was created yet and that there was nothing more than an agreement between the parties to allot the money by a proper deed of trust to be executed hereafter. [p. 845, col. 1.]

The doctrine of executory trusts is applicable to cases of trusts created for valuable consideration, and has no application to charitable trust where the beneficiaries are purely volunteers. [p. 845, col, 2.]

Though the Trusts Act does not apply to charities and no formalities are required by law to create it, still where it is intended to create a trust with reference to a particular property it is necessary that the language used should be clear enough to show a definite intention to create a trust by it and it should amount to a declaration which is or can be construed to be imperative. Where there has been a completed dedication, the fact that the details of the trust have not been settled by the dedicator will not affect the validity of the dedication. [p. 845, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 21 of 1920, presented against a decree of the Court of the First Additional District Munsif, Madura, in Original Suit No. 134 of 1919 (Original Suit No. 386 of 1918 on the file of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Madura).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The decree of the District Court directing specific performance by creation of a trust-deed is wrong. The suit was not for specific performance but was framed as one to enforce a trust. The trust not having been found to have been created, the suit should have been dismissed. No amendment of the plaint was asked in the earlier stages of the suit.

To allow the amendment would be to alter the nature of the suit. The recital in Exhibit A is that a dharmasasanam was to be executed and the parties were to take the advise of mediators. The trust might or might not come into being. The parties might abandon the proposal by mutual con-There is no trust impressed on the There must be a definite declaration constituting the dedication which is absent in the present case, Manchar Ganesh Tambekar v. Lakhmiram Govindram (1), Bhuggobutty Prosonno Een v. Goorgo Frosonno Sen (2), Warriner v. Acgers (3), Richards v. Delbridge (4). The whole of the Rs. 300, belonged to defendant and there was no consideration for the agreement.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Aiyangar, for the Respondent.—There is a definite ellotment to charity in Exhibit A and a trust has been created. Being a charitable trust no definite form of language is necessary to create it.

In any event there is an agreement to create a trust and the doetrire of executory trusts applies. The details may be wanting but there is a dedication. The Court could supply the defect and settle the details itreit. As there is an exforceable contract in Exhibit A, the Court had power to direct specific performance.

JUDGMENT.

OLIFIELD, J.—I agree with the judgment which my learned brother is about to deliver and have nothing to add.

KRISENAN, J.—The first question we have to decide in this second appeal is whether a trust has been created by the parties with reference to the Rs 3CO and interest dealt with in Exhibit A. The lower Courts have held that no trust was created but the respondent's Vakil has tried to support the decree of the lower Appellate Court by arguing that in reality a trust was created.

The question has to be decided entirely on the wording of Exhibit A, the agreement between the parties, for there is no other evidence bearing on it. That document says in one portion of it "Rs. 300 with balance of interest which has been allotted for duadesi charity out of the balance still due, shall be allotted for that obarity and a dharmasasanam be executed," and again in another part "the sum of Rs. 300 with balance of interest relating to the said charity shall not remain with both of us but we shall abide by the advice of mediators and conduct the charity." It seems to me that the lower Courts are right in bolding that the parties contemplated taking the advice of mediators in settling the details of the trust they desired to ereate and embodying those terms in a dharmasasanam or formal deed of trust before the trust was to be taken as created. The language of Exhibit A in saying "shall be allotted and a dharmasasanam be exceuted" eceme elearly to point to a frust to be created in the future by a proper deed. No doubt Exhibit A ures the expression "which has been allotted" with reference to the Rs. 300 but that must be read with what follows, and I think it only means "which we have agreed to allet." In my opinion, Exhibit A only evidences an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendent to so allot the money by a proper deed of trust to be executed thereafter, and as no such deed has yet been excented, the matter has not passed beyond the stage of agreement into the stage of a completed trust or dedication to charity. If the money had already been dedicated to sharity, it would not be open to the parties to revoke that dedication or resile from the arrangement. But I think in the present case there are no words in Exhibit A to show that that position has been reached, for I consider that under it, it will still be open to the plaintiff and the defendant jointly to abandon their agreement if they so desire and to take the money themselves. Plaintiff or defendant perhaps sould not by himself give up the arrangement against the wishes of the other but they sould, I think, by mutual consent do so. There is no trust impressed on the money yet, nor have any rights been created in any of the intended beneficiaries, the Brahmins, who are to be fed on dwades days, to insist on the trust being carried out. In fact it seems to me that the parties have not parted with the swnership of the money. They have only agreed to do so in the future.

It is true that the charity contemplated is a form of public charity and the Indian Trusts Act does not apply to it and consequently no formalities are required by law

See Manohar Ganesh Tambekar to create it. v. Lathmirem Govindram (1) and Bhug. gobutty Prosonno Sen v. Gooroo Frosonno Sen (2). Nevertheless to create a trust with reference to a particular properly it is necessary that language used should be elear enough to show a definite intention to create a trust by it and it should amount to a declaration which is or can be construed to be imperative. See Helsbury's Laws of England, Volume XXVIII, page 12, paragraph 17. It is further necessary that the rights of the author of the trust in the property should have been parted with for the benefit of the beneficiary. Vice-Chancellor Bason observes in Warringr v. Rogers (3), that 'the one thing necessary to give validity to a declaration of a trust-the indispensable thing-I take to be, that the donor, or grantor, or what. ever he may be called, should have absolutely parted with that interest which had been his up to the time of the deelaration, should have effectually changed his right in that respect and put the property out of his power, at least in the way of interest." This passage is quoted with approval by Sir G. Jessel, M. R., in the case of Richards v. Delbridge (4). Applying the above tests to the present case, I think it is elear no trust has been erested.

It is further argued for the respondent that even though an executed or completed trust may not exist in the case, there is nevertheless an executory trust here, because there is a contract to create a trust which is specifically enforceable between the parties. Defendant urges in answer that there was really no consideration for the agreement embodied in Exhibit A, as the whole of the money dealt with in it really belonged to him. It is not necessary to decide this point, for even assuming that there is a valid and enforesable sontract between the parties, the dostrine of executory trusts does not apply. In cases of contract, that doctrine is applicable only in cases like marriage settlements where there is a contract based on valuable consideration for the creation of a trust of which specific performance can be ordered at the instance of the beneficiary. See Underhill on Trusts, page 14. No authority has been eited to show that it applies to eases of charitable trusts where the beneficiaries are purely volunteers as in the present case.

It was also argued that once there is a dedication to a sharity, the fact that the details of the trust are not settled by the dedicator will not affect the validity of the dedication. In such cases the defect will be cared by the Court in some cases and by the Crown in others. See Tudor on Charities and Mortmain, 4th Edition, Chapter VII. But the fundamental thing required to support the contention is a completed dedication: a mere intention to dedicate in future is insufficient as it has no legal effect. In the present case, as I hold that there was no gift or dedication to charity, the argument becomes irrelevant.

From the above discussion it follows that the plaintiff was not entitled to any declaration regarding any trust, for no trust exists. It is then argued that Exhibit A evidenses a specifically enforceable contract between plaintiff and defendant, and that in this suit itself, specific performance should by directed by the execution of a formal trust. deed after the details for the conduct of the sharity are settled by a punchayat as contemplated by Exhibit A, or failing, that by the Court itself. This is what the lower Appellate Court has ordered, but I think that course is not justifiable. There is no prayer in the plaint for any such relief and without an amendment of the plaint and a re-trial of the suit, such relief eannot be given without prejudie. ing the defendant. To grant such an amendment will entirely alter the nature of the suit. In these sirenmstances I consider that it is not proper to allow an amendment of the plaint at this late stage of the case. The District Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the very ground that his remedy was to sue for specific performances and yet plaintiff made no application for amendment till now. The plaintiff, I think, should be left to enforce his remedy, if any, in a separate suit if so advised.

In the absence of a trust the plaintiff's suit based solely on the existence of one must fail. I would, therefore, allow the second appeal and reverse the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the Munsif with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—

RESPONDENT.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 23, cls. (3), (4)

—Assessment of compensation—Special usefulness of land to be taken into consideration—Principle of reinstatement.

Per Mookerjee, J.—The assessment of the value of a land compulsorily acquired, regardless of the user for which it is specially fitted, cannot lead to an adequate award of compensation for the loss sustained by the owner. The special adaptability of the land acquired cannot accordingly be altogether ignored in the determination of its market-value. [p. 847, col. 2.]

Where land is compulsorily acquired, the fact that it has peculiar natural advantages for a particular purpose is an element for consideration in the assessment of compensation, apart from any special value created or enhanced by the scheme of the acquisition. [p. 847, col 2.]

Where a sum awarded to an owner of land compulsorily acquired under the Land Acquisition Act is not sufficient to re-place the premises or land taken, by premises or land which would be to him of the same value, the compensation awarded is inadequate in view of the principle of re-instatement. [p 848, col. 2.]

Per Buckland, J.—Where land is used for a special purpose in conjunction with other lands of its owner which are injuriously affected by its acquisition, and where it is established that the owner will be compelled by law to provide himself with other land capable of being adapted in such a way as to restore to his land injuriously affected its former usefulness, one measure of the damage sustained by the acquisition injuriously affecting the other property is the difference between the sum awarded for the land acquired and the cost to the owner of providing himself with other land to be used in a manner similar to that in which the land acquired was used plus the cost of adapting it to such use.

JUDGMENT.

MOGKEFIZE, J .- This appeal is directed against an award made under the Land As. quisition Act in respect of a piece of land in the town of Serampore acquired by the Government for the residence of the Assistant Superintendent of Police. The land covers an area of 1 cuttah 2 chattack 40 equare feet (that is one officieth of an acre) and at the time of used by the Serampore acquisition was Municipality as a public drain for the discharge of water from the losality into the river Hooghly. The Collector made an award for Rs. 407.4.8, that is, Rs. 354.2.8 as the value of the land and Ro. 53 2.0 as the statutory allowance. In the statement of grounds on which the amount of compensation determined, it was stated that "the land had been valued at Rs. 300 per cottah, that is, at the same rate as the adjoining land, insemuch as the drain was shallow." The Chairman of the Municipality objected to the award as inadequate and claimed the easts for the construction of two sulverts over a new drain which would have to be constructed in place of the drain acquired which was an important outfall. The Municipality also objected that as the drain in question, which bad existed eines a long time, was one of the main outlets for the discharge of water of an important area, and as it would be extremely difficult to make satisfactory arrangements for drainage of the place if the drain was closed, the acquisition should not have been sanctioned upon public grounds of sanitation. The Municipality further urged that a proper diversion drain for the drainage of the place would cost much more than the amount awarded as the market value of the land. They also pointed out that the cost of the two big culverts at both ends of the drain had not been taken into account in the award. though the sulverts would become useless in the absence of the drain. The Land Acquisition Judge held that the amount awarded was adequate and dismissed the claim with costs. The Municipality has now appealed to this Court and has valued the appeal at Rs. 500. In my opinion, it is manifest that the award made by the Collector and confirmed by the Judge is inadequate.

Clause 3 of section 23 of the Land Asquisition Ast provides that in determining he amount of componention to be awarded for land acquired, the Court shall take into consideration the damage sustained by the person interested by reason of severing such land from his other land. The fourth elause similarly makes it obligatory upon the Court to take into consideration the damage sustained by the person interested by reason of the acquisition injuriously affecting his other property. There can be no room for controversy that the result of the stoppage of the public drain (the immediate subjestmatter of the asquisition) would be, not only to render valueless the two solverts at its own ends, but also to stop the drainage of the adjoining land (for which the Municipality was under statutory obligation to make suitable provision) and thereby to depreciate its value. Consequently the assessment of the value of the land, regardless of the user for which it is epecially fitted, cannot lead to an adequate award of compensation for the loss sustained by the owner. The special adaptability of the land acquired cannot accordingly be altogether ignored in the determination of its market-value. where land was asquired which had been bought by the owner for the purpose of building a school, and there was no other suitable. the neighbourhood, available in land it was held that this must be taken into consideration, even though no steps had been taken towards carrying out the project; Bailey v. Isle of Thanet Light Railways Oo. (1). The same result was reached on the basis of a special clause in a Private Act of Parliament empowering a Railway Company to asquire land in School Board for London v. South-Eastern Railway Co. (2). It has also been held that where land is compulsorily acquired, the fast that it has pseuliar natural advantages for a particular purpose is an element for sonsideration in the assessment of compensation, apart from any special value created or enhanced by the scheme of the acquisition; Gough and Aspatria Silloth and District Joint Water Board, In re (3). v. Corporation of Manchester (4) where the owner of land adjoining a lake was held entitled to compensation on the basis of its special adaptability for the purpose of a recervoir; see also the judgments of Bramwell, Brett and Cotton, L. JJ. Riddell v. New Oastle and Gateshead Waterworks Co. (5) and contrast the decision in Holt v. Gas Light & Coke Co. (6) with that in Wernicke v. Secretary of State (7).

That the compensation awarded is inadequate also becomes obvious if we invoke the aid of an important principle which has been felicitously, though perhaps not assurately, salled the principle of reinstate. ment. There are cases where the income derived or probably to be derived from land does not constitute a fair basis assessing the value to the owner; in such cases, the principle of reinstatement is applied. This principle is that the owner eannot be placed in as favourable a position as he was in before the exercise of compulsory powers, unless such a sum is assessed as will enable him to replace the premises or lands taken, by premises lands which would be to him of the same value. It is not possible to give an exhaustive eatalogue of all eases to which the principle of reinstatement has been or can be made applicable. But the principle may be called in aid when the land is used for some particular purpose, generally not of a commercial nature, such as Churches, Schoole, Hospitals, public parks, houses of an exceptional character and premises in which the business can only be earried on under special conditions or by means of special licenses. Reference may be made, for illustration of the prineiple, to the decision of the House of Lords in Metropolitan Ry. Co., v. Vurrow (8); see also the opinion of Lord Shand in Corporation of Edinburgh v. North British Ry. Co. (9) where the applicability of the doctrine was restricted to eases in which land for reinstatement is available or can be obtained on reasonable terms and consequently the attempt to extend the principle to the case of acquisition of a portion of a public graden proved unsussessful.

There is thus no escape from the conelusion that the compensation awarded in the present case is inadequate, whether we consider the value of the land from the point of view of its special adaptability as a public drain, or whether we take into account the damage sustained by reason of severance or injurious affection, or whether we treat the matter as governed by the principle of reinstatement. There can further be no doubt, from the materials on the record, that the sum of Rs. 500 claimed as additional compensation constituted a vary modest demand. We must express our regret, equally with our surprise, that a just claim of this description should have been strenuously opposed on behalf of the Secretary of State and that the time of public officers of all grades should have been wasted because of an endeavour to resist a claim which was really unanswerable.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the compensation payable to the Claim ant is increased by Rs. 500. The appellant will be entitled to costs both here and in the Court below. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at five gold mohure.

BUCKLAND, J .- I agree that this appeal should be allowed and the compensation increased by the sum claimed. The intention of clause 23 of the Land Acquisition Act, taken as a whole, is to provide a complete indemnity to a person whose land is compulsorily acquired. The subclauses give effect to this principle by enumerating the heads under which compensation may be awarded. This case presents features which tend to obsente the application of the section. The actual land acquired itself is of very little value, In fast to any person other than the appellant Municipality or to the owners of the adjoining plots of land it would be useless and of no value at all. To the present owner, i. e. the Government, and to the appellant Municipality it has a value in excess of its value as a mere piese of land; to the former by reason of the use to which it will be put in conjune, tion with the adjoining plots, which we are informed have also been acquired, and to the latter by reason of the use to which it has been put in connection with its drainage seheme. Any enhanced value, which it may have by reason of the use to which it will be put after acquisition must, of course, be ignored. But it follows from the statement of its value to the appellant Municipality, that if the appellant Municipality is deprived of the land by compulsory acquisition, it loses something over and above the actual value of the land acquired. It is the duty of the Court to enquire what it is that the appellant Municipality so loses, whether such lose is of the nature of any one or more of the items of damage required by the sub-clauses of sestion 23 of the Act to be considered, whether it is eapable of assessment in terms of monetary exupensation, and if so, at what sum compensation should be assessed.

The appellant Municipality uses the drain on this land to condust and dissbarge water flowing into it from other drains, the whole forming part of its drainage scheme. Of such benefit as it obtains from this use of the land it will be deprived. It will have to make other arrangements to collect and discharge the water from the drains with which this drain has been connected which otherwise would sease to serve as drains. It manifestly impossible for the appellant Municipality to adopt the contention, which, were its undertaking of a private and commercial nature, might possibly be open to it, though with what measure of success is problematical and dependent upon considerations foreign to this case, that, deprived of this outlet its entire enterprise is rendered useless and that, therefore, it requires to be compensated accordingly. But the fast that. owing to its being a Municipality with duties required of it by Statute and not a trading concern, the appellant cannot adopt any such attitude does not deny the application of the principles contained in sub-clauses 3 and 4 of section 23 of the Act. Whether or not a claim can be justified according to these principles must be desided upon a consideration of the position at the time when the acquisition takes place, that is, when the elaimant is deprived of his land. An instance where compensation was allowed for damage eaused "by severing or otherwise injuriously affecting?" where neither the land acquired nor the land injuriously affected were a source of profit to the elaiment is to be found in Holt v. Gas Light & Coke Co. (6) which was a case of a rifls range. Owing to the defendant Company acquiring the land behind the butts, the range became unsafe and had to be closed. The plaintiffs were held to be entitled to compensation. The following passage from the judgment of Blackburn, J., lays down the principle in vary elear language: - 'I sannot see, however. when the two are compled together for a common purpose, and the possession of both is essential for that purpose, why any person who has lost the benefit of the part taken away should not be compensated; and, as I have said, the words of the Act are quite wide enough to cover it, the damage not exactly arising from severance, but even if not, at all events so much e;usdem generis as to some within the general words which follow." It is quite immaterial that in the Indian Act the covering words are to be found in two sub-sections, In my judgment the appellant Municipality is entitled to compensation under clauses 3 and 4 of sestion 23. The quantum of damages is another matter. As I have indicated already, what a elaimant may or can or will by Statute or otherwise be compelled to do to remedy his position and to restore to himself the benefits of which he has been deprived other than the benefit of ownership of the land itself is not a matter to be considered in determining the application of section 23, but may be, and in this case is material to be considered in determining whether the damage is sapable of assessment and at what amount it should be assessed. In cases where the elaimant does not trade, one obvious method of assessing damages is not open to the Court, But in a case such as this, where land is used for a spesial purpose in conjunction with other lands of its owner which are injuriously affected by its acquisition, and where it is established that the owner will be compelled by law to provide himself with other land capable of being adapted in such a way as to restore to his injuriously land affeated its former usefulness, one measure of the damage sustained by the acquisition injuriously affecting the other property is the difference between the sum awarded for the land asquired and the cost to the owner of providing himself with other land to be used in a manner similar to that in which the land asquired was used, plus the cost of adapting it to such use. Applying this to the present circumstances, the appellant Municipality is unquestionably entitled to receive the extremely moderate sum claimed.

I entirely concor in what my learned brother, Mr. Justice Mookerjee, has said with regard to the propriety of contesting this elaim. It does not appear that this was done on account of any principle involved, nor is it the case of an exaggerated claim by a grasping landowner. From first to last the total time of the officers of Government, both excentive and judicial, which has been occupied in dealing with it must have been out of all proportion to the amount at stake which, if conceded in the first instance, would have made but a comparatively trifling addition to the capital outlay on the residence required for the Assistant Superintendent of Police.

JUDGMENT .- As the learned District Judge has remarked in his judgment, there is no substance in the appellant's contention that he cught to have been given another adjournment in the First Court for the purposes of going into the witness-box himself and of procuring the attendance of other witnesses. Having examined the order sheet, I am distinctly of opinion that the learned Sab. ordinate Judge would have been wrong if he had granted this concession, but in any case this is a matter in the discretion of the First Court, not in that of an Appellate Court and still less in that of a Court of second appeal. In this Court the learned Counsel for the appellant has taken fresh ground, and arges that the sale to the plaintiff was void against his elaim under section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code. This is based on an insemplete examination of the facts and a mistaken notion that the first attachment in 1912 by Birbal, in execution of whose decree the property was eventually sold, subsisted till the sale in 1916.

AMOLAKSAO U. MAHIPATRA.

2. The actual facts are these. Birbal first attached the property before judgment on the 27th of August 1912. After obtaining a decree he presented an application for execution which was dismissed in default of appearance on the 6th of July The agreement to sell the property to the plaintiff was made on the 5th of September 1913, that is to say, before the dismissal of the application for execution and while the attachment was still subsisting. Later, Birbal presented a second application for the execution of the decree which resulted eventually in the sale of the property to the plaintiff on the 12th of April 1916. In the face of my own recently published judgment in Ganpati v. Mukunda (1) it cannot be orged that Birbal's first attachment enured beyond the dismissal of his first application for execution in 1914. The transfer was, therefore, not made during the continuance of the attach. ment under which Birbal's claim was enforced by the sale in 1916, and section 64 has not application to the case.

3. The learned Counsel then fell back on the position that, at the time of the contrast for sale, the property was in the hands of the Collector, though not under Birbal's deeree, and that, by that sontrast to sell, the judgment-debtor charged the property in a manner forbidden by paragrah 11 of the .Third Schedule of the Civil Prosedure Code. The learned District Judge has held that the judgment-debtor did not charge the property by agreeing to sell it or ascepting the purchase money but that the charge arose by operation of the law out of that transaction and therefore, the paragraph cited does not apply to the ease. I would go further and say that the charge did not even arise directly out of that contract. Section 55 (6) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act says that, in the circumstances of this case, the buyer is "entitled to a charge." But he can only get the charge to which he is entitled under a decree declaring that he is so entitled, for which he may never ask. The charge does not come into existence at the time of the agreement or asseptance of the price. Indeed, the bayer is not even entitled to it till there is default in complet. ing the sale. Even then he does not get it till a deerse declares that he has it. It is till then an inchoate right, similar to the inshoate right to forcelosure or sale which a mortgages is "entitled to" get but does not hold, between the maturity of the mortgage-debt and the desree mortgage-suit. The acceptance of the money by the judgment-debtor seems to me similar to the refusal of an absolute ossupancy tenant to pay any rent while his holding is in the hands of a Collector. After obtaining a desree for the rent the landlord would have a charge on the property but it could hardly be said that the tenant had sharged his property in the manner he is made incompetent to do by paragraph 11 of the Third Sobedals of the Civil Procedure Oode.

4. The lower Appellate Court has also held that the sale to the appellant is vitiated by the dostrine of lis pendens. His learned Counsel contends that that dostrine cannot apply to an involuntary sale by a Civil Court, and further that the sale to him was under the authority of the attaching Court. That section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act applies equally to voluntary and involuntary transfers was the unanimous opinion of a Fall Bansh of this Court in Jogeshwar v. Moti (2) (Sasopi Appeal No. 218 of 1919) and I see no reason to differ from that opinion. Dhobley, A. J. O, was of opinion that a transfer by foreslosure under a mortgage did not take place at the time of foreslosure bat at the time of the mortgage, but he agreed with the rest of the Banch in thinking that section 52 did apply to a transfer made during a suit, even if that transfer was made by a Court in execution of a decree. The suggestion in the latter part of the plea just mentioned that the Court to which the concluding words of section 52 refer is any Court hardly requires refutation. It ean only be the particular Court in which the suit or prosseding mentioned earlier in the section is being astivaly prosecuted, and that Court only when it is engaged in that suit or proceeding,

5. The decree of the lower Appellate Court ean also be supported on another ground which was rejected by that Court, the principle of resjudicata. When the plaintiff sued the julgment debtor for spesific per.

formance of the contract to sell, it was open to the latter to plead that the agreement was void because the property was attachment or in the hands of the Collector at the time. Explanation IV of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code will bar him from taking that plea in this subsequent suit, and it will equally bar the appellant who claims under him and is litigating under the same title, as was held in Burlur Fan Rishen Singh v. Lali Fam (3) and Eanchan Mandar v. Ramala Proceed (4). All the appellant bought at the auction-sale was the judgmentdebtor's title, and from his original title had already been deducted at that time the right conferred on the plaintiff by the decree of the 31st of January 19.6.

6. I do not sonsider it necessary or possible to disones any question of estoppel. In the appellant's written statement in the First Court, which extends to three pages of type written matter, I can find only ore mention of estoppel. At the end of paragraph 6, which really ocneists of three separate paragraphs and alone occupies nearly a page, these words coour : "They are further estopped from setting up their prior agreement as against the defendant auction purchaser." The words have no connection that I can discover with anything else in any part of the written statement. There was however an issue framed asking "whether plaintiff is estopped from setting up his prior agreement as against the defendant and whether he is late in doing so," and the learned Judge simply held that he was not. The blessed word estoppel appears again in the memcrandum of grounds of appeal in the lower Appellate Court, but the learned District Judge did not discuss the matter, probably because he was as unable as I am to see where or how any question of estoppel arose. The appeal fails and is dismissed, The appellant must pay all the costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Mainpuri, dated the Eth May 1920.

The Hon'ble Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. N. Muker, i, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT,-This appeal arises out of a spit for damages for illegal distraint. The First Court came to the conclusion that the suit was barred by time and it also found that no damage had been proved. As to the second issue, his judgment runs thus: "There is no convincing evidence as regards the loss of property. The Amin and other witnesses of defendants clearly say that the six bigha kachcha land cannot produce 25 maunds of grain, as alleged by the plaintiffs. The property distrained is 6 maunds 201 seers wheat and 8 maunds 31 seers of bhusa (vide plaintiff's own statement dated 24th April 1919 before the Tabsildar of Shikohabad). This is still in possession of Karimullah with whom it was deposited by the Shahna. In my opinion no damage bas been proved."

The plaintiffs went up in appeal and the learned Officiating District Judge has set aside the Assistant Collector's decision on both these issues. He proceeds mainly upon presumptions and probabilities rather than on the evidence on which the Assistant Collector decided the case. He takes no notice in his judgment of the statement made by the plaintiff as detailed by the Assistant Collector. I am informed that the record of the original case tried by the Tahsildar was before the First Court. If that was so, it was the duty of the lower Appellate Court to refer to that record and come to the conclusion after taking into consideration the statement of the plaintiff made on the 24th of April 1919. The learned District Judge was not justified in ignoring the statement of the plaintiff on which the First Court had relied and coming to the conclusion independent of such an admission. I, therefore, refer the following issue for finding to the Court below:—

(1) What damage, if any, had the plaintiffs sustained?

The Court below is to take into consideration any admission of the plaintiff contained in his statement of the 24th of April 1919 referred to by the Assistant Collector along with the other evidence on the record before it comes to any desision on the question.

The lower Appellate Court seems to have followed a desision of the Board of Revenue reported in 2 Legal Remembrancer (Ravenue Series) page 61 in thinking that the cause of action for a suit for compensation for illegal distraint arises on the date of the release of the property from distraint view is not, however, the view taken by the two Jadges of this Court in Dambar Singh v. Balwant Singh (1) where it has been held that the cause of action arises on the date of the actual loss or damage or at the latest when the plaintiff comes to know of such lose. I, therefore, remit a second issue also to the lower Appellate Court for a slear finding: -

(2) When did the plaintiffs come to know of the loss of the property for which they sued for compensation?

The lower Appellate Court will submit its findings at an early date. No fresh evidence on this issue.

On return of the findings the usual ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

Raja Seth SWAMI DAYAL -RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 60, 98

—Anomalous mortgage — Mortgage for term — Redemption—Right to redeem in certain event excluded by contract, effect of—Statute, interpretation of.

An anomalous mortgage enabling a mortgagee after a lapse of time, and in the absence of redemption, to enter and take the rents in satisfaction of the interest will be perfectly valid if it does not also hinder an existing right to redeem. A provision hindering such an existing right is invalid and cannot be given effect to [p. 855, col 2.]

A mortgage for a term provided that, if the debt was not re-paid at the end of the term, the mortgagee would be entitled to enter into possession of the mortgaged property and continue in such possession for another period during which the right of the mortgager to redeem was excluded. The debt not having been paid at the end of the term, the mortgagee instituted a suit for possession. The mortgager resisted the suit in all the Courts unsuccessfully and then brought a suit for redeemption:

Held, that the mortgagor had, under section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, a statutory right to redeem at the end of the term, even if the mortgage was one in which by section 98 the rights of the parties were to be determined by the contract between them [p. 855, col. 1]

The provisions of one section of an Act cannot be used to defeat those of an other unless it is impossible to effect reconciliation between them. [p 855, col, 2.]

Consolidated appeals by special leave from two decrees of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Oadh, reported as 30 Ind. Cas. 377 and 48 Ind. Cas. 32, affirming two decrees of the Court of the Sabordinate Judge, Kheri.

FACTS.—The only question for determination in the appeal was whether the appellant's right to redeem was premature, having regard to the terms of the mortage, dated the 9th June 1908. The terms of the mortage and the material facts are fully set out in the judgment.

The Trial Judge and the Judicial Com-

were bound by the terms of the mortgage and that the mortgagor's suit for redemption was premature. Hence the present appeal.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C., and Mr. Dube, for the Appellant.—The mortgage is a simple mortgage and not an anomalous mortgage to which section 98 applies. Under section 60 the appellant had the right to redeem at the end of the term. Such a statutory right cannot be defeated by the contract between the parties. Lingam Krishna Bhupati v. Manya Sultan (Maharoja of Vicionagram) (1).

Mr. De Gruyther, K. O. and Mr. Purikh, for the Respondent.—Section 98 applies and the rights of parties are determined by the contract. The right to redeem was expressly excluded and the present suit for redemption is clearly premature.

Mr. Up;ohn, K. O., replied.

JULGMENT.

SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—These are consolidated appeals preferred by special leave of His Majesty in Council from two decrees dated the 9th February 1915,* and the 19th June 1918; of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which affirmed two decrees passed by the Sabordinate Judge of Kheri on the 7th September 1914, and the 17th April 1916, in Suits No. 234 of 1913 and No. 93 of 1915.

The question for determination is whether Muhammad Sher Khan, the mortgagor and appellant in both appeals, has a present right on payment of the mortgage money to redeem the mortgaged property. This has been decided adversely to him in both the lower Courts.

The mortgage is dated the 9th of June 1908, and is Exhibit A 36 on the record. The sum of Rs. 82,000 is recited to be due, and the mortgagor declares: "Therefore, I. do hereby mortgage for five years" the immoveable property there described. Then follow the terms.

Olause 1 provides for the payment of interest half-yearly at the rate of $\{\frac{1}{2}\}$ annas per cent. per month, for compound interest in the event of default, and that—

* See 30 Ind, Cas. 37i-[Ed] + See 48 Ind, Cas. 32-[Ed.] "This system of payment of interest and of compound interest by six monthly instalments will continue during the stipulated period as well as after that till redemption and payment of the entire amount."

Clause 2 is in these terms : -

"After five years at the end of Jeth 1320 Fasli in the fallow season I shall pay at a time and in a lump sum the entire principal, interest and compound interest and redeem the mortgaged property."

Clause 3 provides :-

That if interest for four six months be not paid in fall, or if at the stipulated period, i.e., after five years, I do not get the mortgaged property redeemed on payment of the entire amount of principal, interest and compound interest, then in both eases the mortgagee will have the option either to take possession of the mortgaged property in lieu of the principal for a period of twelve years commencing from the date of entering into possession or to let his interest and compound interest run as usual, in which case I shall not raise the objection to the effect that the mort. gagos did not take possession in order to let his interest accumulate—the mortgages having the option to shoose one of the two alternatives."

Clause 4 deals with mutation of names.

Clause 5 is in these terms :-

"The mortgages will remain in possession for twelve years from the date on which he takes possession of the mortgaged property and the mortgagor will not have the right of redemption during the period of twelve years."

Clause 6 stipulates for the appropriation of produce and profits in lieu of interest, and that during the period of possession neither the mortgages will have any claim to interest nor the mortgagor to profits, and there will be no assounting as to shortage or surplusage of profits at the time of redemption.

Clause 9 provides :-

"That on the expiry of twalve years at the end of Jeth, i.e., on Puranmashi in the fallow season I shall redeem the mortaged property on payment of prinsipal, interest and compound interest," and other specified payments.

MOHAMMAD SHER REIN U. BAJA BETH BWAMI DATAL.

"Pending the payment of the entire demands due hereunder, the mortgages will as usual remain in presession and outpation of the mortgaged property in assordance with the above-mentioned conditions."

Interest fell into arrear, and at the stipulated time the mortgage money was not paid. Thereupon Suit No. 234 of 1913 was instituted by Raja Sath Swami Dayal, the mortgages, for possession of the mortgaged property under the terms of the mortgage. He was resisted by the mortgagor, who pleaded that he intended to redeem the property.

On the 7th September 1914 the Sab. ordinate Judge decided in favour of the mortgages, who obtained possession on the 14th February 1915. An appeal was preferred by the mortgagor to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oadb, but it was dismissed on the 19th February 1915, the Court at the same time deslaring that the decree would not affect any right of redemption exercised in the manner provided by law before the delivery of possession. On the 25th Fabruary 1915, the mortgagor applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, but his application was dismissed on the 26th April 1915, On the 18th June 1915, the mortgager instituted Suit No. 93 of 1915 for redemption. It was dismissed in the First Court on the 17th April 1916, and this was affirmed on the 19th June 1918, by the Appeal Court on the ground that the suit was premature. On the 23rd August 1918 the mortgagor applied to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner for leave to appeal to His Majenty in Counsil, but without sussess.

Finally, the mortgagor, on an application here, obtained special leave to appeal from the appellate decrees in both suits on the 30th May, 1919.

Many questions were raised in the Courts below which have now disappeared, and all that now remains to be determined is whether the present claim to redeem is premature. Mortgages of immoveable property are governed by the provisions contained in Chapter IV of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. In section 58 four kinds of mortgage are described—a simple mortgage, a mortgage by conditional cale, and implementations of the provisions contained in Chapter IV of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. In section 58 four kinds of mortgage are described—a simple mortgage, a mortgage by conditional cale, and implementations of the property act and an English

Mortgages," contemplates a mortgage that does not fall under any of the four descriptions contained in section 58, and is not a combination of a simple and an usufructuary mortgage or of a mortgage by conditional sale and an usufructuary mortgage. In the case of such a mortgage, the rights and liabilities of the parties are to be determined by their contract as evidenced in the mortgage-deed, and, so far as such contract does not extend, by local usage.

By section 60 of the Act it is provided that at any time after the principal money has become payable, the mortgagor has a right to redeom, and a suit to enforce it is called a suit for redemption.

The contest between the parties to this litigation turns upon whether the mort-gagor's right to radeem is suspended by the provision in the mortgage which purports to entitle the mortgages to remain in possession for twelve years from the date on which he took possession.

In the argument there has been considerable dissussion as to the estegory to which this mortgage belonge, and more especially as to whether or not it is an anomalous mortgage. But their Lordships do not think it necessary to pursue this enquiry, for, in the view they take, the rights and liabilities of the litigants must depend on the terms of the instrument as controlled by the Transfer of Property Act, for, even if it were an anomalous mortgage, its provisions offend against the statutory right of redemption conferred by section 60, and the provisions of the one sestion eannot be used to defeat those of another, unless it is impossible to effect resonsiliation between them. An anomalous mortgage enabling a mortgagee after a lapse of time and in the absence of redemption to enter and take the rents in satisfaction of the interest would be perfeetly valid if it did not also binder an existing right to redeem. But it is this that the present mortgage undoubtedly purports to effect. It is expressly stated to be for five years, and after that period the principal money became payable. This, under sestion 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, is the event on which the BBIRHARI SINGH C. JORHAM.

The section is unqualified in its terms and contains no saving provision as other sections do in favour of contracts to the contrary. Their Lordships, therefore, see no sufficient reason for withholding from the words of the section their full force and effect. In this view the mortgagor's right to redeem must be affirmed, and as both suits are now before the Board, there will be no difficulty in passing one decree in both so framed as to give due effect to this right.

Though the appellant has succeeded in these appeals, by his procedure and dilatoriness he must be held responsible for this protracted litigation, and the consequent wasted expense; and to mark their disapproval of his conduct, their Lordships will not interfere with the orders as to costs made by the lower Courts, nor will they allow him any costs of these appeals.

The decrees of the lower Courts should, therefore, be discharged except so far as they order payment of costs by the mortgagor.

There should then (in their L rlships opinion) be one preliminary deeree for redemption in both suits in accordance with Order XXXIV, rule 7 (f the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. But in teking the accounts, the period during which mortgagee may have been in possession urder the decree in Suit No. 234 of 1913 should be excluded, for, though the provisions of the mortgage entitling the mortgages to possession cannot operate to defeat section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, effect should be given to them so far as they provide that the mortgagee is to appropriate in lieu of interest all the produce Mal and Sewai and profits of the mortgaged villages after payment of the Government revenue. And sc, during this period, as in effect provided by the mortgage, neither will the mortgagee be accountable for profits nor the mortgagor for interest.

The decree should further provide that if payment is not made on the fixed day the mortgaged property should be sold.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the case ought to be remitted to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh with directions to pass a decree in accordance with the opinion expressed, There will be no order as to the costs of these appeals.

and the defendants in respect of other tenancy holdings and ultimately defendant No. 1 obtained a desree for ejectment of the plaintiff from those plots, that after obtaining possession of those plots the defendant foreibly and without any right took possession of some of the plots in dispute, that the plaintiff filed a complaint in the Oriminal Court about his dispossession but the complaint was ultimately dismissed on the 10th of December 1918, that after the dismissal of this complaint the defendants improperly took possession of the remaining plots in dispute, that the defendants had in the criminal case relied upon a certain mortgage deed which was quite wrong, false, ineffectual and invalid, and that the defendants have no right to possession and have dispossessed the plaintiff through highhandedness. The plaintiff went on to say that the cause of action arose in the months of Kuar and Katik (September and Ostober) 1918, hence the present suit for possession and mesne profits.

This suit which was instituted on the 15th of September 1 119 was, on the face of it, barred by the provisions of Schedule IV, Group C. No. 30 of the Tenancy Act. No. defence of limitation was, however, raised by the defendants who contended that they had taken possession under the terms of a mortgage executed by Hannman, the father of the plaintiff, as interest had not been paid and that they did not take wrongful poseession but entered into possession with the plaintiff's consent.

The Trial Court dismissed the suit, but the lower Appellate Court has decreed it.

The defendants some here in second appeal and the point raised by them was that the snit was not cognisable by the Civil Court. I cannot entertain this ground of appeal, because the question of jurisdistion was not raised in the First Court (vide section 196 of the Tenancy Act).

The ground of limitation was, however, urged with my permission. The principle which has been accepted in this Court in allowing questions of law to be raised for the first time in second appeal is, that a point of law which does not require any questions of fact to be determined but can be decided on the record as it stands such a question of law may be allowed to be raised in second appeal and not otherwise. (See in this connection Kanahai Lal v. Suraj Kunwar (1).]

A large number of authorities were sited and reference was made to the Privy Council sase of Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (2) on behalf of the respondent to support his contention that I could not allow this contention to be raised. As to the Privy Council case, all that I need say is that it has no application just as the others have none. In the Privy Council case their Lordships refused to allow the question be raised for the first time in appeal, because it would have made further enquiry nessessary before the sould be decided. In the present case in order to deside the question of limitation no further enquiries or findings are required. On the sause of action, as stated in the plaint itself, the point of limitation has been argued and can be decided. It has not been suggested by the learned Vakil of the respondent that any further fasts have to be found before this question can be determined. There is no doubt that, having regard to the course of rulings in this Court commencing from the case of Dalip Rai v. Deoki Rai (3) up to the case of Balbhaddar Chaubey v. Eonaroo Rai (4). it has been uniformly desided that the failure of a tenant to apply to recover possession of a holding from which he has been wrongfully ejacted by the landholder within the period of six months allowed by the Tenancy Act bars not only his remedy but extinguishes his rights also. In the present case the plaintiff, the occupancy tenant, somes to Court on the allegation that be has been wrongfully dispossessed by the defendants (his Zemindars) under the guise of invalid mortgage said to have been executed by his (the plaintiff's) father. This was certainly not dispossession in accordance with law. Such dispossession was wrongful and, as such, the plaintiff tenant ought to have sued for recovery of possession within six months of his dispossession under the special period of limitation provided by the old Rent

He is not suing to redeem the mortgage executed by his father and, therefore, the case of Abhilakh Dhelphora v. Liladhar Dhalphora (5), does not apply. The mere fact that if the question of juris. distion is not raised in the First Court the Appellate Court is to decide the suit as if it had been brought in the right Court does not in any way warrant the correlusion that limitation to be applied to that suit is not the one which would have applied if the suit had been brought in the right Court but that some other rule of limitation is to be applied. This would appear from the provision that if the Appellate Court has not all the materials before it, it might direct a remand to the Court in which the suit ought to have been brought.

In my opinion the suit was barred by six months rule of limitation and, as sueb, should have been dismissed.

Benami purchase, constituents of-Trusts Act (II of 1882), ss. 5, 6, 7-Minor, whether can create valid trust - Constructive trustee - Express trustee - Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10, applicability of, to constructive trustee-Appeal-Plea, new.

Where a property is purchased with plaintiff's money, but the sale-deed taken is in the name of the defendant in which there is a recital that the purchase is on behalf of the plaintiff, it is a case of an ordinary benami transaction, and the trust created is a constructive and not an express one. [p. 859, col. 2.]

To constitute a benami purchase, it is not neces. sary that there should be any thing secret about it, and, unless it is intended for a fraudulent purpose, there is no reason why the deed evidencing the transaction, should not disclose the nature of the transaction. [p. 859, col 2; p. 860, col. 1.]

A minor cannot create a valid trust under section

7 of the Trusts Act. [p. 800, col 1.]

A constructive trustee is bound to account for profits under section 95 of the Trusts Act and the fact of his doing so would not make him an express trustee. [p. 860, col. 2.]

Section 10 of the Limitation Act refers only to express trustees, and would not cover the case of a constructive trustee. [p. 860, col. 2.]

A plea which is not set up in the pleadings by the plaintiff, and in respect of which there is no issue, nor any reference thereto in the First Court, and to allow which would require a fresh trial or the facts, ought not to be allowed to be raised in the Appellate Court for the first time. [p. 860, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 407 of 1918, preferred against the deeree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Palghat, in Original Suit No. 79 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. O. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyer, for the Appellants —The lower Appellate Court erred in holding that the plaintiff's suit was not barred by time. The sale-deed, Exhibit I, does not ereate an express trust in favour of the plaintiff. It is only in the nature of a benami ecoveyance. The venders could not be deemed to have created any trust in favour of the plaintiff, nor are there words in the sale deed terding to show that defendants accepted any trust. They are only in the position of constructive trustees. Even if trust was intended, it is invalid as one of the vendors is a minor.

The District Judge is wrong in applying the principles of the law of agency to save limitation. This aspect of the case was not suggested in the lower Court. Even if there was an agency, it terminated long before suit.

Mesere, T. R. Vencutarama Saitri and C. V. Makadeva Aiyar, for the Respondents .-The defendants were collecting the profits of the land and paying them over to the plaintiff. That put them in the position of trustees with a liability to account. Though they were not made express trustees at the execution of Exhibit I, they became such by having assumed that position and of 12 years. In England persons in certain defined fiduciary relations were held incapable of pleading the limitation bar. In Foar v. Ashwell (1), a Solicitor who held trust moneys in his hands was held to be an express trustee. See also Rochefoucauld v. Bousteal (2), Burdick v. Garrick (3), Lyell v. Kennedy (4).

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises from a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover certain lands with mesne profits for 15 years. No objection was raised by the defendants to the plaintiff's claim for the lands, and they have been decreed to her and there is no appeal about them. But as regards the profits, defendants denied their liability and pleaded limitation. To avoid the plea of limitation plaintiff's case was that defendants Nos. I and 2 were holding the lands and collecting the profits as her trustees and she relied on section 10 of the Limitation Act.

The Subordinate Judge who tried the ease held that no express trust was made ont, that defendants were only constructive tructses, and that three years' limitation was applicable to the elaim for profits, apparently, under Article 109. He further held that, as pleaded by the second defendant, the profits for the last 9 years had been accounted for to the plaintiff and dismissed her elaim in toto for past profits. The Distrist Judge reversed that decree, holding that an express trust was made out, and that section 10 applied and that, evan if it did not, the defendants were plaintiff's agents in law, and under Article 19 the plaintiff's claim was in time as the demand for accounts was only made just He gave a decree as prior to the suit. sued for, without passing a preliminary desree for ascounts under Order XX, rule 16, Civil Procedure Code, and without taking any notice of the plea that the profits had been assounted for. Defendants Ncs. 1 and 2 have appealed to us.

The first question for decision is whether an express trust is made out or not, as it is material to decide it in considering the application of section 16 The only facts from which we are asked to find an express trust are these. The plaint lands were purshased with plaintiff's money and in the sale-deed taken by defendants Nos, 1 and 2 in their own names there is a recital that the purchase was on behalf of the plaintiff. Defendants were receiving the rant of the lands subsequently and it is the second defendant's case that he gave eredit to the plaint. iff for them in the accounts. From these fasts it is difficult to infer the existence of an express trust or of anything other than a constructive truct. To create a trust with reference to immoveable property, the Indian Trusts Act, II of 1882, which applies to this case, requires a registered instrument signed by the author of the trust or the trustee where no question of a Will or of fraud arises, and there must be a clear indication of an intention to ereate a trust; see sections 5 and 6 of the Ast. The only registered instrument we have in the case is Erbibit I, the sale-deed. It is signed only by the vandors and cannot, therefore, be used to support a case of express trust by declaration by defend. ants Nos. 1 and 2, nor can it be relied on to show that the vendors created the trust. as was argued before us, because there is nothing to show that they intended to ereste any trust. The words in Exhibit I do not support any such contention, In fact, after reciting that the purchase was on behalf of the plaintiff, Exhibit I goes on to say that the lands should be enjoyed by the plaintiff and her heirs; it says no. thing about defendants managing the lands and paying over the profits to the plaintiff. It is extremely improbable that strangers like the vendors under Exhibit I would intend to create any trust for plaintiff. Though, no doubt, it is possible to take a conveyance in the form of a deed of trust. there is nothing to show that that was done here. Exhibit I is an ordinary deed of benami purchase which resites its benami character. To constitute a beaumi purchase it is not necessary, as the District Judge thinks, that there should be anything searet about it; and, unless it is intended for a fraudalent purpose, there is no reason why the deed should not disclose the character of the transaction.

There is a further difficulty in holding that Exhibit I amounts to a trust created by the vendors, as one of them is a minor who cannot create a valid trust under section 7 of the Act.

It was next argued by the plaintiff's Vakil that, even if the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were not made express trustees at the outset, they must be held to have become such, because they acted as trustees for over 12 years and they cannot be heard to aver the contrary. It is difficult to see how any question of adverse possession or estoppel arises. A sufficient answer to the argument is that the defendants at no time did anything to change their legal position with reference to these lands. As constructive trustees they would be bound to assount for the profits under section 95 of the Act, and their doing so cannot make them express trustees; and they did nothing else.

The learned Vakil for the plaintiff eited some English eases Soar v. Ashwell (1), Rechefouciuld v. Poustead (2), Burdic's v. Garrick (3) and Lyell v. Kennely (4) as showing that the term "express trustee" in English Law included not only persons expressly appointed trustees but also persons standing in various fiduciary relations who were incapable of pleading limitation. In the first case cited, a Solicitor acting for the trustres and holding trust moneys in his hands was held to be in the position of an express trustee and he was not allowed to plead limitation. Lord Justice Bowen enumerates the cases where such extension of the term 'express trustes' has been made in England but the defendants here fall under none of these categories. It is doubtful how far such extensions can be considered to be cases of express trustees in this country. for, as remarked by the learned Chief Justice in Raja Rajeswara Dorai v. Ponnusam: Tevar (5), the Indian Trusts Ast, which governs us. restricts the scope of the term 'trustee' more closely than in England and considers ecnstructive and resulting trusts as not trusts but as obligations in the nature of truste, See Chapter IX.

(5) 6! Ind. Cas. 907; 44 M. 277; 13 L. W. 56; 40 M. L. J. 52; (1921) M. W. N, 37; 29 M. L. T. 101.

The case in Rochefoucauld v. Boustead (2) eited above was the case of an express trust ereated by certain letters and it was held that it satisfied the Statute of Frauds but that, even if it were otherwise, parol evidence could be allowed to make up the deficiency in proof in spite of section 7 of the Statute, on the ground that the Statute should not be allowed to be used to perpetuate a fraud, the defendant there elaiming the property himself as his own. No such care arises here, and the two other English cases cited are equally beside the point here. The case of Bhurabhai v. Bai Rukmani (6) refers to a sum of money, to create a trust with reference to which a registered instrument was not nessassary. It is thus distinguishable from the present case and it is unnecessary for us to consider whether we should follow it or not.

For the above reasons it seems to us that the contention that there was an express trust in this case must be rejected. This case is one of a constructive trust or of an obligation in the nature of a trust as the Trusts Ast calls it, falling under Chapter IX. Now, restion 10 of the Limitation Act has never been held to apply to such cases. It is true that in section 10, the term "express trustee" is not used in the section itself but only in the marginal note, but the language of the section, referring as it does to "persons in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose', is explicit enough to show that it refers only to express trusteer, It is not contended before us that it would cover the case of a constructive trustee. The plea that section 10 saves limitation in the present case must, therefore, be rejected.

The District Judge has also held that the case of express trust failing, the parties may be looked upon as holding the position of principal and agent, and Article 89 may be applied, in which case he thinks the suit is in time, because the account was demanded and refused only shortly before suit. He overlooks the fast that there is another starting point for limitation under the Act, cis, the termination of the agency, and it has been argued before us that, if there was any agency created in the case it was terminated long prior to the suit and the claim for profits would be barred under that Article and that the deferdants were not able to show it because no plea of agency was set up in the case. It is clear from the pleadings that no such case was set up by the plaintiff; there was no issue about it and there was no reference to it in the First Court. In these circumstances the question of agency should not have been allowed to be raised in the Appellate Court for the first time. To allow it now will require a fresh trial on facts, and we are, therefore, of opinion that the plea should be excluded from consideration.

In the result we must hold that the bar by limitation is a proper plea in the case with regard to the profits claimed. It is not necessary to decide whether the three years' rule or the 6 years' rule applies to it, as in either case the plaintiff fails, as the finding by the Subordinate Judge that profits for the last 9 years have been accounted for has not been displaced by the District Judge and we have not been addressed any argument about it.

In the result, the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be reversed and the decree of the first Court restored with appellant's costs here and in the Court below to be reid by the plaintiff be paid by the plaintiff.
